Mr. President, there is one thing that made me doubt a little as to the propriety of this resolution, although, as I said, I am going to vote for it, and what the Senator from Maine has said has added to the great doubt which I entertained on that subject, and that is that I am not quite sure there are not persons who favor this kind of resolution, and as much debate upon it as you can have, and as much investigation as you can have, in order to divert public attention from the real questions which ought to engage the Congress of the United States—questions of economy, questions of finance, questions of government—all are shoved aside that popular speeches may be made, tending to excite one section of the people against another, and to set their minds mad with passion instead of appealing to their cool and deliberate reason. I certainly do not charge the Senator from Maine with having got this up for the purpose of putting aside and throwing out of view that which should form the subject of our thoughts and of our legislation, but I fear that such may be in some men's minds one of the things to be desired by such a resolution.

How to Trim an Osage Hedge.

I saw an honest farmer trimming an osage hedge over in Henry county. It is a very peculiar operation, and I listened to it with a great deal of interest. I say listened, because the interesting feature of trimming a hedge consists not so much in what the farmer does, as in what he says. The honest farmer had a crooked knife on the end of a hoe handle. He stuck this into the hedge and gave it a jerk.

Then he said:

"Ah!"

Then he jerked again and down came hedge switch. Then he said:

"Ah-h!!"

Then he took hold of the withered switch and drew it away from the hedge. Then he put his thumb in his mouth, and stood on one foot, and said:

"Ah-h-H-H!!!"

Then he once more unto the breach, dear, dear friends, made another prod with the hook and said, loudly:

"Gee whiz!"

Then he jerked at a wicked-looking branch with his hook, and roared:

"Great SNAKES!"

Then he pulled out a crooked branch, so full of thorns that it made your back ache to look at it, and when he stumbled over it and it wrapped itself around his legs, he stood still for a second, then dropped his hook, lifted his hands to heaven, and screamed:

"Oh! Bloody murder!"

The next rake he made he brought a whole top of a hedge plant, with five or six branches, right down on his back. Then he threw his hedge hook fifty feet into a ten-acre field, opened his mouth thrice in voiceless gasp, spread his arms out and fell down flat on his face, dug his toes into the turf, drummed on the turf in agony with his clenched fists, and wailed like a storm of wrath:

"Oh! dad essentially! Take him off! Somebody take him off!"

When he got up he said I seemed interested in hedge trimming, and he would teach me how to do it myself. I said no, I wouldn't try to learn. I would like to know how, but I was too awfully lazy.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Fire-Proof Houses.

The houses in the city of Buenos Ayres are said to be almost fire-proof. They are built of brick, and as follows: Each floor, and the roof, which is nearly flat, are supported by joists of some hard wood, that will not readily burn, the joists being placed at regular distances. Across these joists are laid rails of the same kind of hard wood, three by three and one-half inches, and the space between these is bridged over with thin bricks or tiles, thirteen and one half inches long; another layer of bricks is then laid, and generally on this a layer of fine tiles. The roof is exactly the same, but, of course, has a slope to carry off the water. There is no boxing to the window or door frames. The jambs are thin and are built solid in the walls. There is no lathing, no wainscot, nor base-boards, and all the timbers used in the construction are made of hard wood, and all the doors, windows and shutters are made of a peculiar kind of cedar that is very slow to ignite and burns with great difficulty. The outside appearance of these houses differs but little from that of modern houses in Central Europe.—American Builder.

In the heart of the Scotch Highlands has been founded a large Roman Catholic monastery and school. The buildings, which are not yet completed, will cost $250,000. Lord Lovet gave the site, and the institution is in charge of the Benedictine Fathers.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Letter From Our Washington Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.

Congress has settled down to business right at the start with an earnestness that leads to the belief that we shall have a session marked by a good deal of solid work, and less of the buncombe and political capital-making than characterized the last session. The members return to their duties apparently impressed with a truth they ought to have realized long ago, namely, that their constituents are tired of seeing the halls of the National Capitol converted into a political arena, and the whole time of the session consumed in political harangues (printed and circulated at Government expense), to the neglect of the public business. The House has done a thing it was never known to do before—passed two of the appropriation bills before it had been in session two days. Let us hope that it will keep on in the good path it has started upon.

THE BLAINE RESOLUTION.

The Democratic members held a caucus this week, at which the conclusion was reached to allow the Blaine investigation to proceed provided they were allowed to include the Northern States. It was also agreed not to oppose the investigation of the cipher dispatches, from whatever quarter the proposition emanated. The Republicans, it is said, will agree to this; so it is pretty certain that an investigation of the elections in both sections will be ordered.

PUNISHING ELECTION FRAUDS.

Representative Rainey, of South Carolina, has introduced in the House a bill to regulate the manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress, and punishing fraud at such elections. It declares that it shall not be lawful at such elections to use ballots which are written or printed upon tissue paper, or upon pieces of paper less than five inches in length and three inches in width, and that whoever casts such ballots shall be guilty of felony, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than two years. The bill provides that all such ballots shall be rejected and not counted, and that every officer found guilty of counting them shall be punished as aforesaid. It provides further that all ballots cast at such elections shall be written or printed on plain white paper, and shall have on the outside no distinguishing marks, and that all ballots of a different description and having distinguishing marks on them shall be rejected. The bill still further provides that any person who shall be guilty of fraud at any election for Representative in Congress by casting, or causing to be deposited, any unlawful ballot, or by counting or aiding to count fraudulent ballots, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and, upon conviction, be fined $1,000 and imprisoned not less than one nor more than five years. The bill declares it to be a felony for any person to intimidate or prevent any voter from voting, and punishes the offender by fine and imprisonment, as in case of other offenses mentioned.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

Representative Chalmers, of Mississippi, offers a bill making it a penal offense to assess persons in Government employ for election purposes. Every officer, or other person, violating the provisions of the bill will be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined not exceeding $1,000. It imposes the same fine upon persons convicted of soliciting, or otherwise attempting to induce, Government clerks to contribute for election purposes.

THE BANCROFT TREATY.

Three or four resolutions have been introduced in the House in reference to giving notice to the North German Confederation to terminate the treaty of Feb. 22, 1868. One introduced by Mr. Springer sets forth the provisions of the treaty, which are that when a German-American citizen shall have returned and remained in the territory of Germany longer than two years it shall be held that he has renounced his citizenship in this country. Complaints have been made that such citizens have been forced into the military service, and, as this works great injustice to German-Americans who have no intention to renounce their citizenship, it is sought by the terms of the treaty to have it terminate by giving the required notification.

THE SUPPLY OF COIN.

A bill introduced by Representative Phillips provides that the redemption of notes in coin shall be suspended whenever the coin in the treasury shall be reduced to $50,000,000, and that when the amount of coin in the treasury exceeds $100,000,000 the surplus shall be used for the redemption of bonds bearing the highest rate of interest that are subject to call.

THE LABOR QUESTION.

Abram S. Hewitt, Chairman of the special committee of the House charged with the investigation of the labor question, will call his committee together in a few days and continue hearing the views of prominent manufacturers and workingmen on that subject. He has invited several prominent New England manufacturers and the leading members of the Pittsburgh trades-unions to come forward and give their views on the business and labor question. It will be some time before he is ready to prepare his report to Congress.

THE POTTER INVESTIGATION.

It is said to be the intention of the Potter Investigating Committee to send a sub-committee to New Orleans to continue that branch of the investigation, which was interrupted by the yellow-fever epidemic.

THE TARIFF.

The Committee on Ways and Means, in a general interchange of views, last week, indicated that it would confine itself to current business without considering measures for a change of the tariff or kindred legislation.

EX-GOV. FOOTE.

The Louisiana Republicans, headed by Gov. Kellogg, will make a hot fight against the confirmation of Henry S. Foote as Superintendent of the New Orleans Mint. Foote's appointment was effected through the influence of Judge Swayne, of the United States Supreme Court. Henry S. Foote has been a prominent figure in politics for upward of half a century. He was successively Congressman, Governor and Senator in Mississippi away back in the days before secession had begun to be talked about, and was a dangerous rival and fierce antagonist of Jeff. Davis. When secession was first agitated in Mississippi Foote combated the doctrine with all the ability and earnestness he could command. The fire-eaters, led by such men as Davis, Quitman, and Barksdale, finally obtained the ascendency, and Foote was relegated to the shades of private life. He then emigrated to California, and came very near being elected to the Senate from that State. He subsequently drifted back to the States, settled in Tennessee, and was elected to the Confederate Senate during the war, where he continued to show his hatred of Jeff Davis by vehemently opposing his policy at every stage of the Rebellion. Foote is the man who told John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, in the Senate of the United States, years ago, that if he would go down to Mississippi he would be hung. Since then Foote has always been known by the title of "Hangman" Foote.

GOV. WALLACE.

There will also be an effort to prevent the confirmation of Gen. Lew Wallace as Governor of New Mexico. Godlove S. Orth, who was opposed and almost defeated by Wallace's opposition, is heading the movement against the latter's confirmation, with some show of success.

ALECK STEPHENS.

A. H. Stephens, the Lilliputian statesman from Georgia, had a narrow escape from a serious accident, a few days ago. While ascending the steps leading to the portico of the Capitol one of his crutches slipped and he came near tumbling backward down the long flight of stone steps. Luckily his faithful servant was at hand, and caught the fragile frame of the Georgia statesman, thus saving him from what must have proved a fatal fall. Stephens is one of the remarkable men of the time. He is now 67 years old, and, although he has been reported as dying for the last ten years, he has as good a prospect of living to the end of the century as any man on the continent. He seems to grow more vigorous, bodily and mentally, every day, and is in better health now than he has enjoyed for many years past.

PERSONAL.

The venerable Peter Cooper was around town several days, the past week, and attracted much attention in the street and on the floor of the House, by his patriarchal appearance.

Neither of the Nevada Senators—Jones and Sharon—have as yet put in an appearance at the capital.

Secretary of the Navy Thompson had an attack of vertigo a few days ago, which, for a time, greatly alarmed his family and friends. He is now well again.

Senator Sargent, of California, and Representative Dunnell, of Minnesota, have been seriously ill, but are now convalescent.

Jim Anderson, the champion witness, turns up in Navada, whence he notifies Senator Allison by telegraph that he is ready to testify in the Stanley Matthews business—provided, of course, the committee will grant him mileage and witness fees. Senator Allison says he don't think his testimony worth the price demanded, and Jim will probably winter in the Sierras unless he makes a raise among the miners; and, as they are not so soft as the average Congressman, this is hardly probable.

The Wee Mathematician.

A sharp little girl once proved that the language of mathematics was not as exact as it should be:

A female teacher had a class of beginners—children of 4 and 5 years. In teaching them the rudiments of arithmetic, she thought to simplify things. The use of the ten numerals she taught by their ten fingers, and, in adding or subtracting the single numbers, they could reckon upon those digits. The thing worked to a charm, and the little ones readily learned thus to solve the first problems of the great science.

One day the class was out for recitation, and subtraction was the theme.

"Five from five leaves how many?" was by-and-by asked of a bright-eyed miss of 4 summers.

The little thing up with her fingers and went at it. For a time she seemed exceedingly puzzled, but at length her eyes snapped, and she lifted her head confidently.

"Five!" she said, with most assured emphasis.

Curious to know how she arrived at that solution, the teacher asked her to explain.

"Why," replied the child, holding out her two hands, and placing them side by side, "zere's five on 'at hand, and five on 'at. Now I take away 'ese five f'om 'ose five, and—'ere sey be—five!"

About as fine a piece of ocular demonstration in the way of a logical dilemma as you will often meet.

To "head off" such sharp little discoverers and accountants, it will be in order to say, "Five from itself, how many?"

The Stocking Bank.

Many of the German Pennsylvania farmers have long had a saw, "The stocking is better than the bank." They still continue to make deposits in the former rather than in the latter, for which they certainly have had good reason of late, since, while a stocking may be carried off, it never steals the money intrusted to its keeping. An old Lehigh county farmer who died recently had faith in stockings. After his death his children mourned the fact that nothing had been left them, and began rummaging about to find a will. In their search they discovered sundry stockings full of gold and silver coin, amounting to over $2,000, which had been put away, mainly in half dollars, from soon after the beginning of the century to the farmer's death, showing by the dates they bear that he had begun hoarding in childhood. It was evident that he had accreted only new coins, fearing, no doubt, that those that had been any time in circulation might have lost something in weight.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

A POULTICE of bread and vinegar, as hot as bearable, applied to the ear is a sure and immediate relief for ear-ache.

SWELLED FEET AND ANKLES.—Take plantain leaves, and wilt them by putting separately between the hands; cover the swollen parts with them, and keep in place by wrapping the limb with rags or a towel on going to bed at night, or keep them on during the day if not obliged to be upon the feet. A cure will be speedily affected.

NEURALGIA AND RHEUMATISM.—A very simple relief for neuralgia is to boil a small handful of lobelia in half a pint of water till the strength is out of the herb, then strain it off and add a teaspoonful of fine salt. Wring cloths out of the liquid as hot as possible, and spread over the part affected. It acts like a charm. Change the cloths as soon as cold, till the pain is all gone; then cover the place over, so as to prevent taking cold. Rheumatism can often be relieved by application to the painful parts of cloths wet in a solution of sal-soda in water. If there is inflammation in the joints, the cure is very quick; the wash needs to be lukewarm.

CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.—Milk and lime-water are now frequently prescribed by physicians in cases of dyspepsia and weakness of the stomach, and in some cases are said to prove beneficial. Many persons who think good bread and milk a great luxury frequently hesitate to eat it, for the reason that milk will not digest readily; sourness of the stomach will often follow. But experience proves that lime-water and milk are not only food and medicine at an early period of life, but also at a later, when, as in the case of infants, the functions of digestion and assimilation have been seriously impaired. A stomach taxed by gluttony, irritated by improper food, inflamed by alcohol, enfeebled by disease, or otherwise unfitted for its duties—as is shown by the various symptoms attendant upon indigestion, dyspepsia, diarrhea, dysentery and fever—will resume its work, and do it energetically, on an exclusive diet of bread and milk and lime-water. A goblet of cow's milk may have four table-spoonfuls of lime-water added to it with good effect. The way to make lime-water is simply to procure a few lumps of unslacked lime, put the lime in a stone jar, add water until the lime is slacked and of about the consistency of thin cream. The lime settles, leaving the pure and clear lime-water at the top. Great care should be taken not to get the lime-water too strong. Keep to the direction as to the consistency, and, when the water rises, pour it off without obtaining any of the lime. The lime-water is also very good to apply to burns and scalds. In slacking the lime, particular pains should be taken that none of the particles fly into the eyes.

A Thief Shrewdly Caught.

Dishonest people often show a great deal of cunning—and they have use for a great deal. But very few of them master all the secrets of detection, so as to perfectly shield themselves long in their bad trade.

"Where did you get them tomatoes?" asked an old Long Island farmer of a neighbor, whose real estate yields not a tomato vine. His basket was full of very fine, ripe specimens, which he thought he recognized. It was not the first time suspicion of his neighbor's honesty had arisen in his mind.

"Where did you get 'em?" he asked again.

"Bought 'em."

"Ah! Let's look at your hands."

With his basket on his arm, he held out both hands for examination, "What do you want to look at my hands for? There ain't nothing on 'em."

The old farmer was washing his own hands at the same time in a tin basin of rain-water, with a wooden bowl of soft brown soap before him.

"No, there ain't nothing on 'em that you can see; but look a-here! Set down your basket and wash 'em. It's werry coolin', and your face and hands look hot."

So saying, he emptied the basin and filled it with cold water, pointed to the soap-dish, and relieved the bearer of his basket. The first immersion and friction of the hands in the water caused the fluid to turn green. It grew greener every second, and at length turned an intense dark green.

"Here, Jim," said the farmer to his tow-headed son, "take in this basket and empty it, and bring it out agin."

Then, turning to his honest neighbor he said: "You hooked them tomatoes from my patch half an hour ago. Three or four of the top ones I knew in a minute. Here's your basket!"

If any country reader of the foregoing would test this discovery of a theft, let him pick one or two tomatoes next season, separating the vines with naked hand, and then wash it. There is a mysterious something about the plant, perfectly colorless, that remains on the hands until water removes it.

A fine illustration of the effect of a guilty deed, always. One never comes out of it with clean hands, however fair an appearance he may put on.

How to Become Giddy.

A true theory of the cause of giddiness ought to explain the following extreme experience, which deserves record in print. The method was first told to me by a friend. I once tried it myself successfully in a mitigated form, and will assuredly not repeat the experiment, and I persuaded a philosophical friend to try it also, with much the same result: Stand in the middle of a soft field where you can't hurt yourself by tumbling on the ground or against anything; avoid having your best clothes on, and secure appreciative spectators. Then put your hands one above the other on the top of your umbrella or walking-stick, and bend down until your forehead rests on the back of your hands. Thus your legs will be vertical, your body will be more or less horizontal, and the umbrella will be vertical. Shut your eyes. Then get a friend, by touching your hips, so to guide you that you shall circle three times, with a side-long gait, round the vertical umbrella as an axis. Finally, raise your head quickly and try to walk straight, as though nothing particular had happened. What will occur is a frightful giddiness and feeling of sickness, a sense of the ground rising up tumultuously on all sides, a wild rush to save yourself and a headlong tumble.—Nature.

ALL SORTS.

CHRISTMAS is coming.

Another year, another leaf,
Is turned within life's volume brief.

A PITTSBURGH man has manufactured a glass speaking-trumpet.

RED BLUFF, Cal., has a boy aged 13 years who weighs 193 pounds.

BANANAS and cocoanuts are reported growing at San Buenaventura, Cal.

Of all the days throughout the year,
The gladdest day and best
Comes in the heart of winter,
When nature's at rest.

COTTON factories and cotton-seed mills are constantly increasing in the South.

A SOUTH CAROLINA boy raised ninety-one bushels of pinders (peanuts) on an acre of land, and sold them for $1.25 per bushel.

LONDON publishers are complaining bitterly of the extreme depression of trade, which operates injuriously on literature.

THE Alabama Legislature has passed a law allowing its members mileage of 10 cents each way from their Court Houses and $4 per diem.

A VERMONTER has invented "a bottle that will always turn right side up, thus failing to spill the contents, no matter how drunk the owner is."

CEYLON, the land of spices and coffee, has now proved itself a wonderful place for growing fine teas, samples of which find great favor in London.

GEORGIA prefers the system of farming out convicts as more economical than the confinement system. The net profit from the hire of convicts this year is $15,000.

LONDON, Ont., has an Inspector of Anatomy, whose business it is to take charge of unclaimed corpses, and, if necessary, appropriate them for the advancement of medical science.

IN a work on poultry it is stated that it is quite a mistake to regard the putting metal spurs on gamecocks' feet as aggravating the cruelty, inasmuch as it most decidedly shortens the agony.

THE Government has a tobacco monopoly in eight European states—France, Austro-Hungary, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Roumania, Lichtenstein, and the little republic of San Martino.

THE French army estimates show that the total effective in time of peace is now nearly completed. The prescribed footing amounts to 469,310 men and 110799 horses, exclusive of the gendarmerie.

FIFTEEN years ago the wife of Dr. Capel, of Charlottetown, Prince Edward island, got a divorce from him, with alimony of £50 a year. Rather than pay this, he went to jail, and there remained till his death last week.

SHEEP husbandry in Western Texas has grown at a marvelous rate. In 1867 San Antonio received but 600,000 pounds of wool, while in 1877 she received 2,000,000. In 1866 there was shipped from Corpus Christi 400,000 pounds; this year there will be shipped 6,500,000.

MR. GUY CARLTON, a robust farmer 75 years old, living near the village of Wyoming, N. Y., has bought his coffin and has it ready for use. He also has ready for erection a solid marble block, chiseled in the shape of a dwelling with door and windows. The block will be put over his grave to symbolize by its form and solidity the last long dwelling of man.

THE best Japanese barbers are women As in a Japanese family the shaving of the children's heads is a regular duty as imperatively customary as the Saturday night's general ablutions are among families where Sabbath and Sunday-schools are old institutions, so nearly all Japanese women acquire a deftness and delicacy of touch with the razor that rival professional touch and skill.

DR. LITTLE, State Geologist of Georgia, and a competent authority, estimates the yield of gold in Georgia for the year past at fully $500,000, or more than one-half of California's great yield in 1872. In that last-named year Georgia mines yielded but $40,000. Hall, White, and Lumpkin counties contain the greatest deposits—the three lying side by side running from east to west.

CHRISTMAS SIGNS.

The wind sighs leafless trees among,
The fire burns bright, the nights are long,
The robin sings his winter song,
And the Christmas snow is falling.
Age thinks of many a Christmas past,
And hears old stories in the blast
Of Christmas days too bright to last,
When the Christmas snow is falling;
While youth but learns from that same breeze
Of countless Christmas days like these,
And glorious golden prospects sees
When the Christmas snow is falling.

The Electric Light in a Printing Office.

The state of expectation in which the public mind shows itself to be held with reference to the so-called "divisibility" of the electric light by Mr. Edison is somewhat surprising, seeing that all the time this divisibility is a fait accompli in England, and may be witnessed and tested any night of the week at the Times printing office. Armed with an order for this purpose I went there the other evening, and this is what I saw: From gas light we emerged suddenly into what seemed a flood of daylight, which came from six small lamps placed at intervals round a large room, in which compositors and others were busy at work. These lamps were suspended so as to be raised and lowered at will. In compliance with the wish of one of the gentlemen present, one of these lights, selected at haphazard, was turned out by means of a tap, and it remained out without the slightest perceptible increase in the volume of light in the other lamps. Then another light at a distance was treated in a similar manner, and with a like result. These two were then relit by a turn of the tap the reverse way, and turned on full power. Then one was slightly "lowered," so as to give about a third of its full light, as with ordinary gas. In short, we found here a useful and agreeable light, which can be moderated and arranged to suit all circumstances.—London World.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, DEC. 19h, 1878

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

Preparations are already being quietly made to give General Grant a brilliant reception on his return to his native country. It is even intimated that the Marquis of Lorne and his consort will lend their presence to grace the occasion.—Steuben Republican.

Yes; and while you were about it, why did you not give your readers the benefit of the whole programme as suggested by a prominent New York Banker, in the following letter to a leading republican in [illegible] anti-Grant man as it happened). It explains itself:

—— NATIONAL BANK, NEW YORK, Nov. 1878.—MY DEAR MR. ——: You will perhaps remember that in the course of conversation here a few weeks ago I expressed to you the opinion that the conflicting elements that seemed to divide the great republican party could be best united in 1880 by the nomination of Gen. Grant for president. Although you did not then agree with my conclusion, I am assured by our mutual friend, Mr. ——, that you will enter heartily into any scheme that promises to subserve our individual interests and save our party from dissolution. Whatever our opinions may be of Gen. Grant as a man, we know that should he again be elected he would be subject to our control so far as our interests are concerned. I need not speak of what would inevitably ensue should the democracy come into full control of the treasury and other departments in Washington. The people already know too much. Gen. Grant must be nominated. I think there is no doubt that he will be, and of this you are doubtless convinced, and you cannot fail to read aright the signs of the times, which I know you have seen. But when nominated he must be elected, and it is plain that we can best secure this end by taking advantage of his return from Europe to demonstrate that he is still the idol of the people, the hero of the age. I am aware that privately you despise this humbuggery, but you must admit that it has been our strong hold in the past, and we can use it once more. Now, to be brief, we must give Gen. Grant a series of brilliant receptions on his return from Europe. Gov. Rice thinks, and we here agree with him, that the first of these should be tendered him by the people of Massachusetts. The west can easily be led. The east must first be pledged to Grant. Gov. Rice and others have arranged a plan for a magnificent opening of the campaign in Boston, and you now have an opportunity to identify yourself with this movement, which, if successful, as it must be, will inure to the benefit of yourself and friends. Will you not see Messrs. —— and ——? Many others whose names were given us by Gov. Rice have been written to by Mr. ——, who is an indefatigable worker. We expect to furnish a good share of the money required to secure a grand spontaneous outburst of enthusiasm for Grant in Boston, such a demonstration as will wake up the whole country. Of course our Massachusetts friends will contribute, but upon you must come the burden of the hard work to make a glorious success. Mr. —— thinks ten or fifteen thousand will be needed to secure the publication of extended dispatches in all the newspapers of the country, giving full accounts of the demonstration. The money will be supplied by the combination here, and I speak of this only to show you that this work is to be thoroughly done. It will be best to keep the movement a secret until just before Gen. Grant's return, when it will be given the appearance of a spontaneous action of the masses—them asses, as our friend —— calls them. Pardon this long letter, and let me hear from you soon. Your sincere friend. ——.

And now comes the New York World, which pretends to represent the democracy of New York, but really is the paid organ of the bond holders of all parties, and undertakes to stick its political snout into Indiana matters by keeping up a daily tirade of abuse against Hon. D. W. Voorhees. Its object is to array a feeling against Voorhees to prevent his return to the United States Senate. The Backers of the World stand ready with barrels of money to buy enough members of the Indiana Legislature to accomplish their object, providing they can be found for sale, but we are confident that the representatives of the people will allow no influence of the money power of the east to interfere with the duty they owe to their constituents. The money power would not hesitate to spend a few millions of dollars to retain possession of one branch of congress, neither would the World hesitate in doing the bidding of the money power. The World is not a democratic organ, nor has it been since the Seymour presidential campaign, all will remember its treachery at that time; it does not deserve the confidence of the people, more especially the western people, and the sooner it is kicked into the thieving radical camp of Sherman & Co. the better. Let the democratic press of the west see to it that eastern monopolists take back seats in the future, the time has not yet arrived when money can over-ride the press, the purchase of the World to the contrary, notwithstanding.

—We will need all the money we can get on the first of January, and would be much obliged to as many as can pay their subscription by that time. We have nearly a thousand subscribers who have not paid for their paper, of course the amounts are small, but when aggregated the amount would be of great benefit to us.

Too much talk about a gold standard of value. America is a silver country, why not look after our own interests as other countries do, and make that the standard.

An Important Decision.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The following decision was rendered by Attorney General Thos. W. Woolen:

State of Indiana, Office of Auditor General, Indianapolis, Dec. 9.—To William W. Cotteral, Esq., auditor of Henry county: Sir—Your favor of 22d ult., was duly received and has been considered. For your information and guidance I give the following opinion on the matters referred to in your letter.

1. Who is disqualified from holding the office of township trustee under the late decision of the supreme court in the case of Jeffries vs. Rowe from Posey county?

In that case the supreme court held that a person elected to the office of trustee in 1872, again in 1874, in 1876, and at the last April election, serving all the time, is disqualified from holding the office the present term, and that his highest competitor who contested the election is entitled to take the office. The reasoning in the case would apply as well to a person whose first election was in 1874, and who qualified and held the office up to April, 1878. The shortening of the second term, the court say, makes it no less a term, and having thus held two terms before the election, such person would be incapable of holding the ensuing term. Persons whose first term began in 1876 would be qualified.

2. If the person receiving the highest number of votes was thus disqualified, is there a vacancy, and may the proper authority appoint a person to fill the place, or is the next highest candidate to take the office?

If the person declared elected by the canvassing board accepted the office, qualified and gave bond, there is no vacancy. He will hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified. If his competitor duly contested his election, and is in a position to prosecute his proceeding, he may get the office; but if there were no contest the person declared elected will hold it. Perhaps a prosecuting attorney, on behalf of the State, might remove him by quo warranto, but a private party, having no interest in the office, could not contest his title in this way.

3. Would the bond of parties thus disqualified be binding on the principals and sureties?

The bonds of all de facto officers, not usurpers, but holding under a regular certificate or commission, are valid. These disqualified persons, having been declared elected and having given bond and qualified, will, as to the public, be amendable to the same laws and governed by the same rules as if they had been fully competent to hold the offices without question.

This, I believe, will dispose of most of the questions arising under the acts of the legislature and the decision of the supreme court, on this subject. Very respectfully, T. W. WOOLEN. Att'y Gen'l.

OBITUARY.

Malinda R. Rainier was born in Hancock county, Ohio, Sept. 17, 1846; died in Auburn, Ind., Dec. 16, 1878. She emigrated with her parents to Illinois, where she was married to Joseph Rainier Sept. 18, 1865. In Oct., 1865, she came with her husband to Auburn, where she resided until her death. She was in the true sense a keeper at home, an affectionate wife and kind mother. She had formed quite an extensive acquaintance, and was respected by all who knew her. It is known that she had been for a long time a severe sufferer, having been confined to her room nearly all the time for the past seven months. She bore her sufferings with remarkable patience, and was quite sanguine as to prospect of recovery, and did not seem to realize that she must die until a few days before her departure. Several months ago she became much concerned about her own personal salvation, and prayed earnestly for herself and asked others to pray for her. She expressed a regret for not having united with the church. A few weeks ago she requested that her name be announced as an applicant for membership in the M. E. church. This was done and her name was placed on the records of the church She had not been long seeking when she became reconciled to God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and when death finally came, she was not surprised. She said that all was right, and that her only desire to live was on account of her husband and children. Speaking to her husband she said about five minutes before her departure, "I am dying," and then quietly, peacefully passed away without a struggle.

The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. E. Ervin. A large procession of sympathizing friends followed her to the grave. The bereaved husband and children have the sympathies of the entire community.

"TO THE SHERIFF AND OTHERS, INTERESTED IN SALES, IN ADAMS COUNTY."

The above is the heading of a notice in the Decatur "Uniqn" of some weeks standing, proposing to publish legal notices at one-half the rates allowed by law. Now "Joe." is a tip-top good fellow, a spicy localizer and all that, but he is certainly a little out of line in his attempt to "cut" on legal rates, simply because certain legal notices are published in another paper. We might with the same propriety propose to do all the legal advertising for the Clerk, Auditor and Sheriff of this county for one-half the rates allowed by law, which would reflect upon the honor of these officers in the minds of the people if our proposition was not accepted; and it would not be, for all officers are in duty bound to patronize the papers of the party which placed them in office. Not only that, but it would be considered very ungentlemanly on our part to undertake to injure the business of other publishers when it could be of no benefit to us. We will take all the advertising we can get in an honorable way, and will charge just what the law allows, no more, nor no less, so far as legal ad's. are concerned. Bro. Snyder will probably see the time when he will rue his attempt to "cut off his nose to spite his face."

—A young lady from the country called at Lanning's store one day last week, and in looking through the stock found a board that she thought might come handy some time, and concluded to appropriate it. She afterward went into McQuiston & Ralston's and asked for paper to wrap the board up, seeing that she was awkward about it, one of the gentlemanly clerks of that establishment kindly offered to wrap it for her, when the board was found to contain dress goods, it was suggested that the goods could be wrapped to better advantage if taken off the board, and in taking it off it was measured on the sly and found to contain 32 yards. Her actions when being questioned as to the price paid, &c., indicated something wrong. That evening after the parties had left town the circumstances was related to Mr. Lanning, who upon examination found the goods missing from among his stock; the next day he visited the young woman in the country and recovered his goods. The next scene will probably be in presence of the grand jury.

—It has been suggested by several papers in this state that a little more rotation in the membership of the State Board of Agricultural would be a good thing; the "Indiana Farmer" in speaking on that subject says: "There is nothing so difficult to be understood about the duties of a member of the Board as to require that he should serve several terms to become efficient. Most intelligent farmers of average business tact and experience are capable of serving upon the Board, and as far as the honors of the office are concerned, they must be handed around as rapidly and widely as possible in order that they may fall upon each county as often as once in ten years."

Give Them a Fair Trial.

Give Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts a fair trial, and if they please you, recommend them. We have no fears of your not being satisfied, provided you get Dr. Price's, as their popularity and extensive sale is from their perfect purity and excellent quality.

—Horace Greely never said a truer thing than this: "It is strange how close men read the papers. We cannot say anything that anybody don't like, but we soon get to hear of it. If, however, once in a while we happen to say a good thing, we never hear of that. We pay some man a good hundred compliments and give him a dozen puffs, he takes it all as a tribute to his goodness, and he never thinks it does him any good. But if we happen to say something he imagines is a reflection on him or his character, see how quickly he flares up and gets mad about it. All our evils are charged to us, but we never, apparently, get any credit for what we do."

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co. are selling dry goods, clothing and groceries cheaper than any other retail store in Northern Indiana. Below find a few of their prices:
Starch 5c. per pound.
Splendid tea 40c. per lb.
Corn starch 10c. per pound.
Grain pepper 20c. per pound.
Best Coffee A sugar 9½ cents.
Parlor matches 4 boxes for 25c.
Best Young Hyson tea 80c. per lb.
Best Rio coffee 5 lbs. for 90 cents.
All best prints 6c. per yard, and a splendid print for 5c. per yard. Good canton flannel 16 yards for $1.00. A very heavy canton flannel 11 yards for $1.00. A good red flannel for 20c per yard. Good underclothing at 25c each. All other goods equally low. As they have no rent to pay, they can sell goods ten per cent. cheaper than any of their competitors. tf.

To the People who Sing.

The musical convention to be held here under the direction of Prof. S. W. Straub, promises to be largely attended. The work not to be elementary, but will be confined to the study of music of a classical character. The opportunity to do such work occurs rarely, and people who sing cannot afford to let it pass. An effort will be made to effect a permanent organization, to meet once each year somewhere in the county, to hold a three or four days convention, under the management of a first-class conductor. The project, we believe, will command the hearty approval of all who care to see the standard of music elevated in this part of Indiana.

For any information respecting the work, write for circular, addressing,

M. SEILER, }
BRUCE MILLER, } Auburn, Ind.

A Change.

The flouring mill in this place known as the "Eagle Mill" has been leased by Mr. Silvers to Messrs. Kagey & Bro., who ask a continuance of the old patronage. Mr. D. Kagey has been connected with this mill for eight years and understands the wants of the people. Mr. Z. T. Kagey has been employed in the Spencerville mills for several years; both are practical millers and will do all in their power to render satisfaction to their customers. The mill enjoys a large custom trade which we hope will continue under the new management.

The Truthful Test.

It requires no learned experts to establish the fact that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the purest and strongest. If it will make sweeter, lighter and more digestible bread, biscuits, cakes, etc., than can be made with other kinds, it is an incontestible proof of its purity and greater excellence.

—Persons from the country report sleighing tolerable good, a little more snow would make excellent roads.

—Several couples from this place took advantage of the sleighing and participated in the hop at Waterloo last evening.

—Call on Willis & Co. and select your reading matter for the next year. They are furnishing everything at lowest rates.

—Why will you buy a poor quality of mixed candy, when you can get a superior quality at Hollisters for 25 cents per pound.

—The "Jubilee" company met at the residence of W. J. Austin last Tuesday evening and had a pleasant time. Where next?

—A large lot of bill heads, statement heads, letter heads, &c., just received at this office, and will be printed at very low rates.

—A number of young folks from this place passed a pleasant evening at the residence of Mr. Perry Fitch, south of town, this week.

—Before another issue of this paper, christmas will have come and gone. To every reader of the COURIER we wish a merry christmas.

—Schaab Beugnot & Co's. dry goods and clothing establishment is having a big run of custom. Low prices and good goods always draw trade.

—When you hear anyone speak of Dr. Lanning, they have reference to our worthy young friend George, who is now reading with Dr. Spooner.

—Mr. S. U. Tarney deserves the thanks of the poor for his offer of charity for christmas morning. See his invitation in another column.

—The heavy flood in the eastern states last week swept away houses by the hundred, flooded cities and damaged property worth millions of dollars.

—John Carter, the celebrated Kosciusko county greenbacker, has sued Gen. Reub Williams, of the "Northern Indianian," for libel, claiming $10,000 damages.

—Mr. Mason, a temperance worker from Indianapolis, is here trying to organize a Good Templars Union. We should judge him to be a powerful man —physically

—The Hon. John Francis Kline, of this city, is general agent for the DeKalb County "Republican." Frank makes a good agent, but it makes him stiff to "ride."

—At the last regular meeting of good templars in tais city it was decided to organize a literary society in connection therewith, which will be a part of the exercises next Monday evening.

—Look here! If you are hard up, not able to buy a chicken, turkey or beef for christmas, come to my meat market christmas morning and I will give you one. S. U. TARNEY.

—COMPOUND ELIXIR OF BUCHU for diseases of the kidneys, bladder and urinary organs is the best remedy known for rheumatism. It removes the cause, and effects a permanent cure in all cases. Sold by DAVENPORT the DRUGGIST. tf.

—Now let us see how many of our subscribers will come in between now and the first of January and make us glad by the payment of their subscription. Pay it in advance and save money.

—Mrs. Joseph Rainier died last Monday morning at 2 o'clock A. M., after a long and painful sickness. Mr. Rainier and family have the heart-felt sympathies of this entire community. Funeral yesterday.

—Our worthy Recorder Boland and family were surprised last Tuesday evening, by a party of sleighriders from Corunna. We did not learn the names but belive the party consisted of six couples.

—Wm. Merrick, who murdered his wife at Indianapolis some time ago, of which we made mention at the time, has been sentenced to hang. This makes three persons now in the Marion county jail who are under death sentence.

—Pete Eldridge says some "white-livered roustabout" stole his "peccadillo" collar last week, and thinks any one that would do such a mean, contemptible trick would steal the last pair of "wet socks from a cross-eyed orphan."

—The Hicksville News gives notice that after January 1st, next, subscription must be paid in advance. This is a move in the right direction; there is no reason why a county or local paper should not be paid for in advance as well as eastern paper.

—The place for farmers to get a good square lunch at from ten to twenty cents, is at Ed. Baker's bakery. All the best brands of fresh oysters by the can or dish. Candies from 15 to 20 cents per pound, and other things in proportion. Give him a call.

—The COURIER office has new neighbors, who they are, where they came from or what they do, is unknown to the public. It is supposed to be some kind of an organization limited to six members, as six chairs, one table, one lamp and a stove constitute the outfit in the way of fixtures.

—Jim. Anderson went into the pork business one day last week, a taker came along the same evening and took his entire first day's purchase, consisting of one dressed pig. Printers would call that a "fat take," but Jim being of a peculiar nature is inclined to the opinion that the taker was a d—d thief.

—They have a new organization in this place called the the Angola Scientific and Historical Society.

—The Deciple mite society meets at the residence of J. Steifel this evening.

More annon, CLARA.

—The school house which was burned a few days since, in Butler township, was insured in the Franklin Fire Insurance Co., of Indianapolis. The loss was adjusted last week by Messrs. Cook and Lockwood very satisfactory to all parties. Mr. Broughton, the trustee, insured the residue of the school house in said company since the fire.

Newville Items.

—We have sleighing once more, but the prospects for it remaining is not very favorable at this time.

—Our stock buyers are still on the alert looking for hogs, but the prices are so low that the farmers do not want to sell.

—Times are dull, but if the sleighing lasts it will make some improvement.

—We have at last read the message of the President, and to our surprise he is in favor of freedom of the press and free speech. We are glad to learn that they are at last coming to a sense of their duty, as this was not always the principle of that party.

—The protracted meetings have come to a close; we have not learned of any accessions to the church, but perhaps the good seed has been sown, and like bread cast on the water, "will be seen many days hence."

—The writing school at this place has closed.

ALPHA.

—The members of the State Board of Agriculture and the representatives of regularly organized agricultural societies, will meet at Indianapolis, Jan. 7, 1879, for the purpose of electing eight members of the State Board, and to deliberate and consult as to the wants, prospects and conditions of the agricultural interests throughout the state.

—Mr. P. Stimley's new saloon, at the old stand of Charley Fox, is fast becoming a popular resort for those who desire a quiet game of pool or a little stimulent in the way of pure liquors, fresh beer, ale, &c. Mr. S. will be found ready to accommodate his customers at all times during business hours. Give him a call.

—Hollister has a new sign, "Eating House."

THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

While the winter snows are dressing
All the trees in spotless white,
And the twilight and the fire-light
'Round my ingle
Blend and mingle,
And the night
Creeps on apace, there towers
On my hearth a tree whose flowers
Sure were born in elfin bowers
Far removed from mortal sight.

'Tis the king of all the cedars,
And its branches, green and fair,
With their weight of golden fruitage
Bend and glisten,
And I listen
While the air
Seems with benisons replete,
Which my lips and heart repeat,
Borne on incense weird and sweet—
Incense sweet beyond compare.

Myriads of dainty baubles
Nestled in its branches [illegible]
Banks of shining, tinted tapers,
Flashing, gleaming,
Each one seeming
Like the star
Which, through all the toil and danger
Led the magi to the manger
Where was born the Royal Stranger
From the heavenly court afar.

As the tapers, slowly burning,
Set in darkness one by one;
And the troops of rosy children
'Round my ingle
Throng and mingle,
While the fun
And the look of glad surprise
Fade from out their sated eyes,
"Tell us now," my Princess cries,
"Of the Blessed Virgin's Son."

Little Princess Golden-Locks,
Throned upon my knee again
Waits to hear the old, old story,
New forever,
Which hath never Ended been:
How the Eastern sages bring
Treasures to the Peasant King,
And the hosts of heaven sing,
"Peace on earth, good-will to men."

A CHRISTMAS ADVENTURE.

BY JOHN A. CONWELL.

"How are you, Bob?"

"How'dy, doctor? Bad night this, for sich as you an' me," was the response.

It was a bad night for doctors and policemen; but Bob, buttoned up to the chin and wearing an oil-skin cape, seemed very well barricaded against the weather in general, and the cold rain of that night in particular, as he leaned against a lamp-post on the corner. Bob was a patrolman on the beat, and part of every night, rain or shine, he was to be found pacing up and down that part of Broadway, or leaning against that corner lamp-post. Bob had but one eye, and it was so near to his thin nose, and was so large, and his head was so wide through the temples, that he looked at first glance as if he had been originally created with but one eye, and that it had been placed in the middle of his face. How that solitary eye could glare! Even in the dark it seemed to shine with a sort of unnatural, phosphorescent glow, and any one who had observed it would seem to feel its influence long after its perambulating owner was out of sight. Aside from that evil-looking and misplaced eye Bob was generally considered a model policeman. Always polite and obliging and ready to accommodate, there was not a man on Broadway, from the Battery to Union Square, who could assist a lady across a crowded thoroughfare with more ease and grace than he. This particular night, which Bob had correctly described as a bad night for him and me, it was sleeting fast, a cold wind swept up from the bay, and I hurried on to my lodgings instead of halting, as I frequently did, to pick a bit of news or gossip from Bob's well-filled repository. It was Christmas eve, 1850, not late, and the street was quite full of people hurrying by under firmly-gripped umbrellas, or with coat-collars turned up and hat-brims turned down, with arms full of packages and faces full of delight. I had made arrangements to leave the city in the 5 o'clock stage in the morning for Westchester county, to eat a Christmas dinner with my sister, as had been my usual custom for years, and had my pockets filled with such purchases as I knew an expectant assemblage of young friends and relatives would look for. When I reached my room I replenished the fire in the grate, threw off my overcoat, and settled down in an easy old-bachelor's chair. I was tired, for during the afternoon I had assisted at a post-mortem examination of a body found in the East river. It was one of those cases of mysterious disappearance that occur occasionally now, but were much more frequent twenty-five years ago. Then it was not an extraordinary occurrence for returned Californians, with fortunes in gold dust, to be traced as far as the clipper docks, but no further. This was evidently a case of that kind. The dress and appearance were those of a returned miner, and on the body was found a part of a buckskin money-belt, profusely ornamented with bead-work, such as were made by the Indians of the Pacific coast. The design of the ornamentation on this belt was so unique that I desired to secure the missing portion, but it was nowhere to be found. I had been glancing over a report of the case in an evening paper, and had finally dropped to sleep, when I was startled from my slumbers by the loud ringing of my night-bell. I quickly aroused myself, and called down the speaking-tube to know what was wanted.

"Man hurt. Come down right off, an' bring your tools," was the response.

Putting on my overcoat and a heavy fur cap, I slipped a small case of medicines in my pocket, took a case of instruments, or "tools," under my arm and hurried down stairs. As I unclosed the door and stepped out the clock in the City Hall tower struck 12. I was surprised that my nap had been so long. The wind had risen to a perfect gale; the streets were slippery with ice, for the rain froze as it fell, and the mingled sleet and rain that were falling now struck the unprotected face like needle-prickings. My door opened into a small vestibule, not more than eighteen inches deep and but little wider than the door. I had but fairly stepped out into this vestibule when a blanket or shawl was thrown over my head and a pair of powerful hands seized each one of my arms. The act was so unexpected that I threw up my arms involuntarily and dropped the case of instruments, which clattered down the stone steps to the pavement.

"Pick up that kit o' tools, Bill, an' lug it along," said one of the men.

I tried to throw the fellow away from my arms and call for help, but the shawl muffled the sound of my voice, and the men held my arms as if in a vise.

"Don't worrit yerself. Nobody's goin' to hurt ye, but yer not to know where yer goin' to," said a gruff voice from one of the men at my side.

As I still inclined to be somewhat obstinate, a stout fellow pushed at my back, and the slippery condition of the sidewalks enabled him to succeed, evidently to his satisfaction, to judge by his chuckling from time to time.

"Stop that noise, Bill; d'ye want the cops down on us?" said the leader. I was hurried rapidly along until we reached the first street above my office. We turned down toward East river, and then I was rapidly spun around three or four times in the street and suddenly hurried along, for the purpose of confusing my ideas of locality and to prevent my retaining any recollection of the route over which I was being taken. Then it was I longed for a few moments of my friend Bob's time, with his glaring eye and his locust club. After proceeding a square or two further we halted, and I was placed in a sort of sedan chair. This was quickly swung upon the shoulders of either two or four men, I could not tell which, and rapidly carried along.

"Hello! what you got there?" I heard some one call.

"Only a one-legged chap 'at's got too much Christmas to walk on crutches sich a slipp'ry night as this," was the astonishing answer.

"We're takin' him home to his ma," continued the case-carrier.

Thinking that help was near, I made an effort to shout, but the fellow who was behind put his hands over my face, pressing the shawl into my mouth so as to effectually drown all sounds. This operation also closed up my nostrils, so that I was compelled to struggle for air, causing my captors to stop a moment. The shawl was removed, and my fur cap was pulled down over my eyes, and a woolen comforter, that one of the fellows had probably been wearing for a month, was knotted and placed in my mouth and tied behind my head. For an instant, while they were removing the shawl, I got a glimpse of our locality. We were in a narrow alley or court, and we seemed to continue in such places most of the time. This I could determine from the echoes of the footfalls of the men against the high walls. These echoes varied in tone as we traversed narrow alley-ways and passages or shot hurriedly across a street. It seemed to me that we had been traveling for hours, but in reality only about forty-five minutes, when I discovered from the sound of the chair-bearers' feet on a wooden floor that we had entered a building. The door must have been left standing open, as there was no halt for the purpose of turning any lock or knob. Shortly after entering the house, we began to ascend a stairway. The chair in which I was carried was suspended on pivots, in some way as it did not vary from its horizontal position while making the ascent. We went up four flights of stairs, which brought us to a door in the fifth story. This was opened after a little delay, and a hurried inquiry and response between some person in the room and those who had brought me there, and we entered the room. The chair in which I sat was placed on the floor, and the door through which we had come fastened with a wooden bar. The door and fastenings were the first things I observed after the cap was removed from my eyes. I was assisted out of the chair, for the cramped position and the cold, to say nothing of the fright, seemed to have stiffened me up. Upon looking around, I found that there were five men in the room, all wearing black cambric or silk masks over their faces. There was also a woman, with a sun-bonnet tightly tied under her chin. The room was not large—probably twelve or fourteen feet square—with a low ceiling, and two small windows, heavily curtained with old sacks. There was no carpet on the floor, no fire in the room, and no chairs. There was a low, wide trundle-bed, scantily supplied with clothing, in one corner of the room, and in the center stood a table, with benches along two sides of it. This seemed to be a kind of lounging and eating apartment. On the other side of the room, opposite the windows, a door opened into another room. This latter room was about the same size as the other, and had but one door, the one just mentioned, and no windows. Its source of light was a skylight in the roof, which seemed to be but a few inches above the ceiling. There was an old cooking stove in the corner with a lively fire in it, a half dozen chairs, and a barrel of water that was replenished through a small tin spout that came down from above, and probably led the water directly from the gutter on the roof. Near the stove, on a low bedstead similar to the one in the other room, lay the missing part of the beaded buckskin belt I had sought for at the Coroner's office. I began to realize now where I was and among whom.

"There's the man, doc. Been shot in a row. Fetch 'im out all right 'thout askin' any questions an' it'll be a mighty good night's job fur ye," said the same gruff voice I had heard before.

"An' if ye don't fetch 'im through it'll be the worst night's job y'ever done," added another fellow.

During all this time the men remained masked. The woman kept her face averted, and hid in the depths of her sun-bonnet, and busied herself about the stove. I stepped up to the side of the patient, who was groaning with pain. The men all followed and ranged themselves around the bed. It was evident that they thought him seriously hurt, at least. The injured man was a rough-looking customer, dark, bearded, large framed, with a scar on his forehead in the shape of a letter V, as if a piece of skin about an inch wide at the top had been stripped down from the roots of the hair to the nose and then replaced. His eyes were closed, except a spasmodic opening every few moments for an instant. He seemed to be suffering intensely. After baring his bosom and shaving away the matted hair that concealed it, I found a pistol or gun-shot wound in the chest on the right side, between the fourth and fifth ribs. He was bleeding internally, and the wound was of such a nature that I saw, after a very brief examination, that there was no hope for him, and so informed his fellows.

"Don't want no shenanigan now, doc. If that chap's life kin be saved, you're here to save it, an' damme if it won't be a sorry day fur ye, doc., if ye let it flicker out jest because ye don't think it's worth savin'," said a surly voice at my side.

I perceived that they were half inclined to fear that I might let their fellow die as a good riddance of bad rubbish. I protested that no human skill could save the man's life; that his death was but a question of time, and a short time at that, and desired them to take me out of the house as I could be of no service. I started toward the door.

"No, you don't go back now," said the leader, stepping between me and the door.

"You kin ease 'im off a little, anyhow, can't ye, doc.?" inquired one whose voice seemed a little tenderer than those of the others. The inquiry came from beneath the sun-bonnet.

"Not much," I responded, for in those days chloroform and hypodermic injections were unknown. I gave the wounded man some morphine, and took my seat on a stool that stood between the bed and the stove. The five men had withdrawn to the other room, but were in full view through the open door. They were in earnest conversation in low tones. I was watching them closely, for I did not exactly fancy the way things were drifting, when the mask accidentally dropped from the face of one of the men. If the wounded man had sprung from his bed and danced a hornpipe on top of the stove, I should not have been more astounded than I was at that moment. The falling of the mask disclosed the features of Bob, the policeman. His one eye never glared more fiercely. I involuntarily started to my feet and took a step toward him, with the intention of claiming his protection.

"Stay where you are," was his gruff command, and he gave the door a vicious kick that partially closed it. I didn't like the idea of being commanded to remain in that little room—and by Bob, too. It was incomprehensible.

The rain and sleet pattered and beat on the skylight overhead, the water noisily trickled down the little tin spout into the barrel, and a pot in which the woman was boiling something like soup bubbled over on the stove. I took my seat again on the stool and watched the steam hiss from the boiling pot. Under the influence of the opiate the injured ruffian breathed easier. The lid on the pot had a small triangular piece broken out of the edge, making an opening about as large as a silver quarter. The steam spouted from this opening in fitful jets. It seems strange now that I should at such a time and place have noticed such trivial things. The door between the rooms swung slightly open, and stood slightly ajar without attracting the notice of the men who were talking earnestly but not loudly.

"He seen me, knows who I am, an' damme if he sh'll git out o' here alive," were the first words I heard. They startled me.

"What! go back onto my beat an' let that calomel cuss loose to have me sent up? Not while there's water enough in East river to sink 'im in," he continued.

"Dead men don't never tell no tales," remarked another, with a chuckle.

"One of us has got to git," continued the policeman, "an' it ain't me. I ain't goin' to lose my place for him," and he pointed over his shoulder with his thumb toward me. "An' I expect all you fellers to stand by me as I have stood by you our twenty year. This feller's got to be anchored 'tween now an' mornin'!"

I had seen dead bodies, with heavy weights fastened to them, fished from the river more than once, and I knew what "anchored" meant. I trembled from head to foot, and the perspiration started from every pore. I do not think that ordinarily I am a coward, but here I was with five desperate men in the next room—men who had undoubtedly committed a murder within the past forty-eight hours, and who thought as little of taking a human life as of snuffing out a candle—discussing my death, and some of them urging it. There was no visible means of escape except the skylight, and that was beyond my reach. I had no arms; even my case of surgical instruments, except a probe I had been using on the wounded man, was in the other room. But, even if armed, what could I do against such odds, shut up in two small rooms? Nothing, except sell my life a little more dearly.

The pot boiled and bubbled, and I continued to stare at the escaping steam as it came out in little puffs from the triangular hole in the lid. I inhaled the aroma from the stew. I remember there were onions in it. One of the uppermost thoughts in my mind was that I would not be able to eat my Christmas dinner in the country the next day.

"All in favor of stoppin' his wind an' all trouble with it, say aye!"

Great heavens! was it possible that my life was hanging upon the vote of these cut-throats, and I powerless to prevent it?"

"I vote aye!" said the gruff-voiced fellow.

"Aye!" said another.

"If yer fellers wants yer supper, better eat it now. Things has been bilin' h'yer long enough," broke in the woman, who all this time had busied herself about the stove and seemed to know little, and care less, about what was transpiring in the other room.

"Let's fill our innards an' finish the vote afterward," was the response to this. The woman now stepped into the other room to arrange the table around which the men sat. My pocket-case of medicines lay on the bed, and I mechanically took it up. A thought, an intuition, an inspiration—call it what you will—flashed through my mind. It was executed as quickly as conceived. Opening the case, I selected the vial I wanted, not a large-sized one, my hands trembling so violently that I could scarcely use them, pulled the cork with my teeth and emptied the vial through the hole in the pot-lid into the boiling contents. I was placing the case in my pocket when the woman reëntered the room, leaving the door wide open behind her. The fellows had their pistols lying on the table—large, old-fashioned, single-barreled pistols, for there were no revolvers in those days. I arose from my seat. In an instant two of the pistols were leveled at me, with the exclamation:

"Set down there. Don't move till yer told to, or I'll let daylight into ye."

I resumed my seat, of course. The woman took the pot from the stove, poured the contents into a large bowl and set it on the table. She then brought out some yellow earthenware dishes, and, setting one before each of the men, filled it from the big bowl in the center. They huddled over their dishes and ate like so many hogs. The woman now for the first time shoved her bonnet back from her face and leered at me out of a pair of eyes that couldn't have had more devil in them if they had belonged to Satan himself. She seated herself on a box near the door with a dish of the soup in her lap, to which she gave her whole attention. Nothing was heard but the combined patter of the rain and sleet on the skylight overhead and the spoons. I began to grow nervous. It seemed impossible for me to sit still. One after another of the men emptied his dish and filled his pipe. How the moments did drag!

"Now let's go on with the votin' an'—suthin mighty curious 'bout this tobacker; kind o' makes me sort o' sick," said one.

"Bob, gimme a pull at yer wicker; I've got an all-fired hot pain in"—his words were cut off by another breaking in with:

"By jeeminy! fetch in the doctor; I'm burnin' up!"

A few moments more and the five men were writhing on the floor, and the woman was swaying to and fro on the box, with her hands clasped over her stomach. I arose to my feet. They did not notice me now; they were in other business. I stepped over the prostrate bodies of the men, unbarred the door that led into the hall, and started down stairs. I had gone down two flights, when I heard some one coming up. I ran to a window in the end of the hall and threw up the sash. I could not see the ground, and the cold rain beat in my face. A large tin spout ran down the wall close by the window. The footsteps on the stairway sounded nearer and nearer. I would rather trust the spout than those who were coming. I stepped up into the window, clasped the spout with my hands and knees, shut my eyes, held my breath, and trusted the rest to Providence. I reached the ground, cut and scratched and with torn clothes, but no bones broken. Where I was, excepting that I was on the ground, I had no idea. The ground was slippery, and I groped along the wall until I came to a narrow passage-way or alley covered over, but leading to a street, as I could see a street lamp in the distance. I hurried along as rapidly as I could, arousing a colony of noisy dogs on the way, until I reached the street, and then I ran—yes, ran—to get as far away from the accursed place as I could, and as quickly as possible. Not a solitary policeman was to be seen. It seems as if they never are when wanted. I could not recognize any landmarks, and turned a half dozen corners and ran along as many streets before reaching one that I recognized. I finally found myself on Broadway, at least two miles from home. Hurrying along, I reached my room as the clock struck 4. Bob wasn't on watch this time. I notified the Police Captain at the station house, and left in the stage an hour later for the country. When I returned to the city I learned that the police had discovered the locality from my description of the place, and found nothing but the corpse of the wounded man. What became of the others was never positively ascertained, though it was reported that they had recovered from the dose, and, after concealing themselves for a short time, finally sailed for Chili, and were lost off Cape Horn.

The Brooklyn Bridge.

There seems likely to be a halt in the work of completing the great suspension bridge over the East river, to connect the cities of New York and Brooklyn. By an act of the Legislature the two cities were to contribute a maximum sum of $8,000,000 for building the bridge. This, or at least New York's share of it, has been paid and expended, and yet the work is far from complete. Application having been made to the city of New York for more money, the Comptroller refused to give it. Application was then made to the Supreme Court for a mandamus to compel him to pay $1,000,000 to the Bridge Company; but Judge Barrett has denied the application, on the ground that the city has already paid all she is authorized to contribute toward the completion of the work. Probably the matter will come before the Legislature next winter, and some way will be found to enable the work to go on. There has always been much opposition to the bridge, especially by the shipping interests, which use the river; but, having been carried so far forward, and at such an enormous expense, it is unlikely that it will be suffered to remain in its present stage long. It is just in that condition where all the disadvantages are endured and none of the advantages enjoyed.

The Fastest Train in the World.

The fastest train run by the Northwestern railway does the distance from Euston to Rugby in 1 hour and 50 minutes; but this speed is equaled by the Southwestern mail, which runs to Dover, 70¼ miles, in 102 minutes. Both these are far exceeded by the Great Northern Scotch express, which only takes 129 minutes to run 105¼ miles to Grantham from London, and by the Great Western "Flying Dutchman," which reaches Swindon, 77 miles, in 87 minutes. These trains run at 51 and 53 miles an hour respectively, and the last-named remains, as for many years past, the fastest train in the world.—London World.

A Dinner at the Sultan's Palace.

The guest is not incumbered by too much ceremony; no stiff, high-backed chair bewilders him and destroys his ease; may I say it?—he has not the care of a lady whom he must lead into dinner, and upon whose wishes he must attend. He crosses his legs upon the cushion which is spread for him, takes his spoon in one hand and his serviette in the other, and without a word waits till the dishes come. A minute or so elapses, and then attendants bearing a huge round tray arrive, and deposit it between the convives. Upon this tray there is a large bowl of soup, together with a little plate, and one knife and fork for each guest. There are, besides, several tiny dishes, upon which are displayed sweetmeats, pickles, caviare, and olives; some pieces of bread complete the array. For a moment the diners regard the tray, and perchance taste an olive or a sweet. But the chief of the table, if he be an intelligent person, does not waste much time. With a wave of his hand to encourage his friends, he dips his spoon into the soup-bowl, conveys the rich gravy to his mouth, and in this is at once imitated by all his guests. Now and then one or other will drop a piece of bread into the bowl, and fish it out again, either for himself or a very particular friend, and so the dipping goes on till the soup is finished—the bowl empty. A pause ensues while some call for water, and others rest in anticipation of the next course and the next effort. Very shortly another dish makes its appearance; this time, perhaps, some kabobs, or a kind of hash, in which a good quantity of vegetables are used. In go the spoons once more, and the feast continues. Most probably the next plat will be cutlets or fowls, whereupon the various pieces are taken up with the fingers, and disposed of with some rapidity. And now comes the critical moment for you, if you are present at this feast as a stranger. You, as a European, will have placed your meat on your plate, and will be carefully cutting it up, when suddenly a more than ordinarily juicy morsel will be pushed into your mouth by a pair of very greasy fingers. You must not resent this; it is a token of loving-kindness, a sign that you are respected, esteemed, beloved. Eat it; you are a favored mortal. A dish of vegetables, pur et simple, very likely succeeds, and then one of pastry in which chopped meat is concealed, and, lastly, what the Turks who speak English tell you is the Ottoman plum-pudding—pillaw—with just enough meat in it to make it palatable. With your spoon once more you take your turn in the general scramble; you eat till the dish is empty, and then, like your friends, lean back till a jug and ewer are brought; water is poured over your hands, a cigarette is given you, and the coffee comes. Your Turkish dinner in the palace of Sultan Abdul Hamid is finished.—"Plevna, the Sultan and the Porte."—Gay.

Capturing a Desperado.

Great excitement prevails in Highland and adjoining counties over the capture of Bob McKimie, the notorious Black Hills desperado, who made his escape several months ago from Hillsboro jail. McKimie, after his crimes in the far West, returned to Highland county with plenty of money, married a handsome woman, bought a big farm, and settled down to make a solid citizen. He was traced, however, by Black Hills detectives, his identity was proven, and he was confined in jail to await examination. One night he made his escape, and nothing was afterward heard of him. Night before last smoke was seen issuing from the chimney of a deserted cabin on a farm near the border of Highland county. The suspicions of the neighbors were aroused, and, stimulated by the large rewards offered for his arrest, about 150 of them gathered at noon yesterday to capture the occupant. Two young men, bolder than the rest, named Roads and Jones, started to enter the cabin, and, when near the door, one of them saw the outlaw through the window. He raised his shot-gun and fired, and then ran. The next moment McKimie came out of the door, and, with a cocked revolver, made a prisoner of Jones, who undertook to stand his ground. Using Jones as a shield, he began working his way toward the woods, a revolver in each hand, threatening to kill his prisoner if the crowd came too close. After half an hour of parleying, a shot was fired from the crowd which took effect in McKimie's breast. The desperado still refused to surrender until a well-directed bullet was sent through his cheek. He then gave up, and was hurried away to Rainsboro, where his wounds were dressed, after which he was taken to jail at Hillsboro. After his capture he was greatly in fear of being lynched, and begged his captors to protect him. It appears that, after his escape, he attempted to flee to the island of Bermuda, whither his wife has gone, and committed a robbery to obtain money, but the draft he presented at the steamship-office in New York was not bankable, and he was obliged to return. Half a dozen indictments are pending against him in different counties of Ohio.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Revelations of the Hieroglyphics.

The Khedive of Egypt, a few weeks ago, presented an English gentleman with a mummy. The recipient was much pleased with the present, and, wishing to know of whose body he was possessed, employed two Egyptologists to decipher the hieroglyphics on the outer case. They both of them declared the writing to be the epitaph of a great King who lived some thousands of years ago. After the discovery, it was thought the opening of the package would perhaps reveal something that would be of great historical value, and many eminent men were invited to the unwinding, which progressed favorably until toward the close, when the mummy was found to be that of a woman.

THE Inyo (Cal.) Independent tells a good story of a mining man who rode down Kearsarge mountain on a pair of shovels. He went down a sheer descent of 1,400 feet, which is so steep that it makes one dizzy to look down it. He reached the bottom in safety, but since then he follows the trail.

SABBATH READING.

Peace on Earth.

"What means this glory round our feet,"
The Magi mused, "more bright than morn?"
And voices chanted, clear and sweet,
"To-day the Prince of Peace is born!"

"What means this star," the shepherds said,
"That brightens through the rocky glen?"
And angels answering, overhead,
Sang, "Peace on earth, good-will to men!"

'Tis eighteen hundred years, and more,
Since those sweet oracles were dumb;
We wait for Him, like them of yore;
Alas! He seems so slow to come!

But it was said, in words of gold,
No time or sorrow e'er shall dim,
That little children might be bold,
In perfect trust to come to Him.

All round about our feet shall shine
A light like that the wise men saw,
If we our loving wills incline
To that sweet Life which is the Law.

So shall we learn to understand
The simple faith of shepherds, then,
And, kindly clasping hand in hand,
Sing, "Peace on earth, good-will to men!"
—James Russell Lowell.

The Cross.

SERMON BY REV. DAVID SWING, OF CHICAGO.

* * * Many-sided was the worth of Christ. Paul did not extract his rapture from a single moment of his Master's life. That enthusiasm which pushed aside the Roman and Hebrew splendor, and which gave up all things for Christ, did not feed upon the manger alone, nor upon the death, but it drew its impulse from all the deeds and words and scenes in that life which had begun in humility and had passed above in a resurrection. The cross was the symbol which stood for all. It recalled all the sympathy, the love; it helped the memory and touched the heart; it glorified the whole history of the absent Jesus, and, as the word "throne" stands for the power of God and the power of man, and at its mention recalls the mighty empires of earth, or makes us see the universe obeying one all-wise voice, so the word "cross" came to Paul's lips as an affectionate symbol of all he knew and loved and hoped of Jesus Christ. In the immediate context the moral-influence theory streams forth in the thought that Paul must follow his Master and be crucified to the world as was his Lord; that no form or outward rite would avail; that he must himself become a "new creature." For, the hour the substitution theory is absent, it is repudiated, and Paul must himself die to sin and become transfigured into a new "creation." He says virtually, "You Galatians are placing hope in external forms, are keeping the law of circumcision; but God forbid that I should ever glory in an outward form. I shall glory only in that cross which puts to death all sin and brings to life all inmost purity." At other times, perhaps, Paul would have sung the words,

Nothing in my hands I bring.

but at this moment the moral influence of the cross was filling his mind, and he desired to bring to his God a religion in the soul rather than a religion of the raiment or of the body.

Christ had lived spotlessly; had shown no such narrowness as that which had stoned a Stephen, or had dragged doubting persons to prison; He had loved alike Jew and Gentile; He had lived in tenderness, not in the cruelty of a military chieftain; He had depressed the external to enlarge the spiritual; He had forgiven enemies; He had by day and by night been a moral hero; He had been a mediator for man; He had not shrunk from a fearful death; He had revealed a second life by rising from the dead; and in the midst of these sweet and altogether amazing facts Paul saw his Hebrew and Roman aims all turn to dust, and a cross to rise up out of the wide expanse of the future. The piece of wood pointing four ways, with the body of the divinest being of all history imaged upon it loving and dying, did not speak to Paul only one truth; it did not proclaim the theory of a "commercial transaction" nor the theory of a "moral influence," but that wood prefigured a new world. The four arms pointed out the four compass points from which all the four winds should blow all human love and wisdom and virtue and immortal life.

If ever there has been a human boast justified by history, Paul's boast over the cross must be declared now to be vindicated in the actual career of man. For when the sacred emblem passed into Rome, the imperial city, it broke up slowly the assemblages which met to see wild beasts fight with men and men transfix each other. A vernal air of charity passed over even cruel Rome, and softened that iron heart. As impassioned lips spoke and sang of this cross in later ages, slaves were set free, despotism changed into a mild monarchy or into liberty, children were born into an unusual care and education, and nations were born into a closer brotherhood, and the tomb of man began to be decked with the flowers of a new hope. When, to those vast public changes which have followed that cruciform word, you add all the private virtue and private happiness which have issued from it like perfume from the sandal tree, what hymns have been sung around it, what prayers offered in its memory, you will feel that, compared with this symbol, all other emblems of riches or power or pleasure fade. The Protestants have removed from the wood the dying form, because their hearts cannot endure the remembrance of such agony. They prefer the simple cross, along with the reflection that He who once suffered there has gone away to His paradise; but, if the Roman Catholics prefer the crucifix, we complain not, for it will recall to them, as the simplest cross to us, the greatest memory earth possesses. History proclaims it to be the most powerful symbol of all times.

In presence of the broad use which Paul made of this word, in the memory of the fact that he meant by the word not only Christ's sacrifice but all the charms of Christ's character and all the purest phases of human virtue; in presence of the fact that the Christian world has attached to it all forms of moral excellence, we cannot but conclude that the meanings of the words Savior and Redeemer are equally indefinite and equally elastic. They are many-sided, like a crystal, or many-toned, like the sea, or star-bedecked, like the sky. The cross never stood for the simple death of the Lord, much less did it ever stand for some one phase of that death; but it stood in the letters of Paul and has ever since stood for all the love and words and work of Him who died at last, lifted up by its timber and nails. Unable to enumerate all this multiform merit, the heart passes by the details, and gathers up the whole spiritual riches of Christianity in one word. As a nation whose climate and soil and laws and peoples and arts and customs are too large for perfect enumeration, groups all these qualities into one term—the eagle, or the shamrock, or the lion, or the pine, or the palm, so the holy religion of our temple, unable to tell the world at once all the worth of its Founder, lifts up the cross, and makes the emblem of its greatest event stand as the emblem of a whole empire of faith and love and life. As under the symbol of two wild plants two island nations live, and each nation, by its own leaves, sets forth or calls to memory its past and present, its soil, its language, its political triumphs and defeats, its loves and songs and griefs, so under one piece of crossed wood group the repentance, the charity, the faith, the love, the hope of a religion—by the word cross it means all of the soul's holy states and memories and expectations.

It, therefore, comes to pass that many denominations, and many individuals differing in belief, do all repeat one word and wear upon their hearts one symbol. The meaning of the word is so rich that, instead of its being exhausted by the virtue drawn from it by you or me, it lies almost untouched for him who is neither you nor I, but who comes to it with trust and affection. In that picture seen in so many windows of the streets, where a woman's form reaches up out of a stormy sea, and throws the arms around a rock, cut cruciform by nature, the spectators perceive no one significance in that cross. While the old and the modern schools gaze at the scene with differing thoughts, all agree in this, that the dying woman has found at last a power greater than that of the ocean about her feet. All spectators of many minds blend together in the words —She is saved!

The emblem is not one which any one sect may exhaust, but is rather one which all sects combined cannot measure. When you see the old saints all looking to it with hope, and then in more recent times behold that varied thought which has sprung up out of liberty repeating this one word—all that multitude of Christians between Calvin and Channing pronouncing the term Cross—do you not stand wonder-stricken that two pieces of wood could gather such differing millions under their shadow? But such was He who died upon the crossing beams. If, as an ancient said, the cross stood for the universe by its pointing four ways, right and left, or up and down, or toward the four compass points, thus sweeping the whole horizon, it was equaled by its victim on Calvary, for His wisdom and virtue and love and intercession looked in all directions, up toward heaven, down toward the depths of suffering, right and left; they swept the whole horizon of human life.

My young friends, the earth is old. It may have seen on its surface six or ten or fifty thousand years of that human existence which you see to-day. In all that long period the heart has knelt by some altar, and has come to the grave in some kind of a hope and trust. Many religions have come, bringing what of virtue and joy they knew; but no mortal in the long-gone centuries has prayed or acted or died, and no Deist of the thoughtful present acts or prays or dies in the name of any spiritual philosophy which can surpass or equal that worship, out of the broad bosom of which rises the cross of Jesus Christ.

The Henpecked Husband.

There are signs by which he is known, however, no matter in what society he mingles. He has the mien of one who is weary of the world, and yet, for some unaccountable reason, is not quite ready to leave it. There is a peculiarly careworn expression of countenance by which he may be distinguished—something quite different from the look of conscious responsibility which most married men wear. Around his lips the resignation of Prometheus lingers; premature crows'-feet gather annually around his eyes; his cheeks lack the rotundity that happier wedlock confers; from his shiny scalp the hair has vanished. He ventures his opinions in a hesitating style, as though he hoped they would suit, and would not be the means of precipitating a broil. He seems always on the point of apologizing for something he may have said, and when he smiles he does it in such a painful and inexperienced way that a spectator is almost moved to pity. At regular intervals he glances nervously at the door of the apartment in which he is seated, as though he dreaded the sudden and wrathful entrance of his imperial spouse to wreak upon him condign vengeance for some unpremeditated offense. Her clarion voice ever rings in his ears like a knell of departed peace. He can never get far enough away to entirely escape that ominous sound. She has a tongue that can put a girdle of fire around him in less than forty minutes, and he never feels sufficiently remote from its terrors. All his peculiarities are those of an extremely careful man. At times he has a scared look. Reticent, gloomy, disconsolate, patient, he wiggles and sneaks his way through life like one who has committed some hideous and unpardonable crime. He knows that he is pusillanimous—that a cockroach has more courage and self-esteem than he will ever boast. In fact, he suffers immeasurably more from what he thinks of himself than he does from all the other miseries he is called upon to endure.

A Cool Deadhead.

Dean Richmond once asked an applicant for a deadhead pass what were the grounds of his request. "Why," said the deadhead, "simply this: I don't want to pay for traveling if I can help it." The crusty old railroad king took the fellow to his heart, gave him a pass, and said in ecstasy: "Sir, I admire you. You are the first deadhead that ever told the truth."

Christmas Gifts.

If one has only the will to do and taste to fashion them, at a very trifling expense many really beautiful Christmas gifts can be manufactured with only a few days' care and labor.

The rough, irregular ends of the branches from the spruce tree can be twisted and turned in a variety of ways. After gathering them and selecting those which have the greatest number of buds at the ends, carefully remove the needle-like leaves; this is more easily done after they have been allowed to remain in the oven a short time; not too hot, for that would draw out the resinous gum and mar the beauty of the work, and, if too cool, both buds and branches will shrivel and be useless. Look them over carefully, now the leaves are off, laying aside the perfectly straight and well-curved ones, discarding the crooked and unpliable. The sprays should be from two to ten inches in length, and have a cluster of buds at the end of each one.

My first attempt was a hanging match-safe, which was so easy to do, and effective when on the wall, that I would advise a novice at the business to let that be the first effort.

Provide a sharp pair of scissors, pins both large and small, pasteboard, needle and cotton—or, what is better, silk—the color of the wood, and a small piece of some bright-colored material to cover the pasteboard which is used for the back of the match-safe. I used Turkey red, and found it admirable, as the varnish used when the work is finished does not injure the color. Cut the pasteboard about four inches square, and, pinning the material smoothly on the right side, fasten it securely by long stitches from side to side on the wrong. Now cover the right side of the back with the sprays, putting them on perpendicularly, and letting them project about an inch at both top and bottom; the first one should be so near the side edge that the covering of the pasteboard will not show beyond it; let this first one have the end with buds at the top of the work, and fasten securely in place by a stitch taken through the pasteboard, allowing the silk to pass over the wood, and not taking the needle through it; do this at both top and bottom. The next piece should lie as closely as possible to the first, and its buds should be at the bottom of the back; fasten it in the same way, and in this manner cover the entire back on the right side, having the buds of every alternate piece at the top and the others at the bottom of the work.

There should be two holders, one for unused and the other for waste matches. The little round boxes in which Stewart's spool-cotton comes are just the size, excepting a trifle too tall. Take off one end, and cut them down slightly; then, having a piece of Turkey red nearly half again as wide as the height of the box, fold in the raw edges until the strip is the right width; wrap around the box tightly, and fasten in the back with a few stiches; arrange the sprays on the boxes in the same manner as on the covered pasteboard, allowing them to project above and below not quite half an inch. When finished, fasten the boxes securely together, using a needle and strong cotton; then sew them to the back, right in the middle. Have two straight pieces about six inches long, which sew in the middle of the pasteboard, at both top and bottom, allowing the ends that have the buds on to project about four inches, the other ends lying in the other side of the back. Take a few stiches through the wood and board, and see they are well fastened in place. At each corner of the top and bottom sew pieces which project an inch from the foundation, and between each one of these and the middle piece put two more, grading them in height. Now the foundation is all ready, select some of the prettiest curved ones for the ornamentation. Let them go diagonally across the back from the middle of each side to both top and bottom, extending beyond the foundation, and forming a sort of lattice-work over it. Concealing the ends without buds under those that have, arrange a cluster of buds on each of the holders. Dissolve gum-shellac in alcohol until it is the consistency of thin varnish; then with a fine brush or a feather go over every part of the work, and, after it has dried in a warm room, apply another coat. Paste paper over the back to conceal the ends of the sprays and the stitches, a small piece of sand-paper at the bottom of the holders, and the work is complete. With an occasional coat of shellac, they will keep bright for years.—Harper's Bazar.

Grave Robberies.

The recent desecration of the grave in St. Mark's Churchyard and the theft of the body of the late A. T. Stewart have brought this infamous business of body-snatching before the public in various repulsive forms. The robbery of the Stewart grave, however infamous as it was, is not the worst form of this horrible business. That robbery was an isolated case, having no connection with others, planned by particular individuals for a particular purpose, namely, the extortion of a ransom from the friends of the deceased. They were willing to take the risks of comparatively light punishment for the large reward which they supposed would be offered by the wealthy estate for the return of the remains. It is not likely that the robbers were professionals, or that they carried on this ghoulish business as a means of livelihood, for in that case any other body would have answered their purposes, and would have exposed them to little or no risk. The recent confession of one of a gang of grave-robbers at Zanesville, Ohio, however, presents a phase of the business which will strike the public with horror.

This man Evans, after being accidentally discovered and lodged in jail, made a full and free confession, which goes to show that grave-robbery is a regularly-organized business in the West, with its methods of transportation, scales of prices, and its regular sources of supply and demand; and if in the West, why not all over the country? The details of his confession show that he has been engaged for several years in the business of body-snatching. The average price received by him for a body was $2, but in this case he was to have had $20—he had four bodies in his wagon when arrested. A few weeks ago he entered into a regular arrangement with a medical college at Columbus, Ohio, to supply it with bodies at a stated price. He was not alone in his operations. Of his two confederates, one was a young man named Hilliard, whose business it was to be on the watch for funerals, and secure the name, age and sex of the person who had died, the time of the funeral, and the exact spot where he was buried. The other confederate was an assistant to Evans, who helped unearth the bodies.

In the case in question, Evans and his confederates dug up the bodies of two men, a woman, and a young girl, and were engaged in transporting them to a medical college when arrested. If this were an isolated case the public would breathe more freely, but Evans' confession shows that it was only one of a series of operations that have been going on for years.—Chicago Tribune.

This year there are in Georgia 22,323 whites between the ages of 10 and 18 who cannot read or write, against 26,552 in 1874, and 63,307 blacks against 79,692 in 1874; total, 85,630 in 1878 against 106,244 in 1874.

Face to Face with Disease.

How often it happens that, although we have witnessed the ravages of disease in the case of others, we disregard his warning signals in our own. It is only when we find him face to face with us that we really perceive how grim he is. Then, perchance, when it is too late, medicinal aid is sought. His avant courier, his forerunner, is physical weakness. Fortify the system, and you are armed against him. The finest tonic for this purpose is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which renders digestion easy and complete, nourishes the system, improves the appetite, gives strength-yielding sleep, counteracts biliousness, and keeps the bowels in first-rate order. Leanness and unnatural wanness and sallowness of the face, are obviated by it, and so genial and beneficial are its effects that not only is the body invigorated and regulated by its use, but despondency banished from the mind.

To Our Readers!

The attention of all our readers is called to the attractive advertisement of J. L. Patten & Co., 47 Barclay Street, New York, who generously offer to send a beautiful Chromo Motto, 6x17 inches in size, to all who send 25 cents for a three months' subscription to their new illustrated magazine.

God has given us medicine to cure ourselves when sick, but the knowledge of their combinations is a mystery to most of us. That dreaded of all diseases, Heart disease, has defied nearly all remedies, but we are happy to be able to inform you that in Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR you have a certain cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold, and people are ready to testify to its beneficial results. There are some really wonderful cases of recovery from what seemed immediate death, and they have gladly given these testimonials, hoping they might be the means of benefiting others.

Among the many forms of Heart disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. Ingalls, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in his lecture on "The wastes and burdens of society," claims "man's natural life to be 80 years, and, as the average life is but 33 years, there must be a waste of 47 years." There is much of truth in this statement. If a man be unfortunate in business, it is attributed to the violation of some commercial law. Now, if a person be taken off in the prime of life, ought it not to be attributed to the violation of some physiological law? If people only knew better, they would live better and longer; but how can they profit by that which they know not of? The only popular work that meets this great want is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. In it the great problems of disease and health are fully discussed. The work contains over 900 pages and 250 colored plates and wood-cuts. Price $1.50 (post-paid). Address the author, R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.

Published Testimony establishes the fact that Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup is a sterling remedy for scrofulous and all similar disorders of a formidable type. Also that it cures white swelling, carbuncles, eruptive maladies of all kinds, gout and rheumatism. It moreover promotes a secretion and flow of healthy bile and directs it into the proper channels. The deplorable ailments produced by mercury are also remedied by it. Druggists sell it.

If you want the best fruit and flower paper, send one dollar to the Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardener, Rochester, N. Y., now, for 1879, and you get last three months of 1878 or a beautiful fruit or flower chromo, 13 by 16 inches, free. Specimens free. Liberal terms to club-agents.

We confidently refer our readers to the card of Dr. C. R. Sykes, in our issue of week before last. Dr. Sykes is an old resident of Chicago, a regular graduate, honest, honorable and responsible, and as a physician takes first rank in his chosen specialty of catarrh and its complications.

We beg to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Horace Waters & Sons, of New York city. They are offering special inducements for the holidays. Their pianos and organs cannot be excelled for purity of tone and elasticity of touch. Catalogues and prices will be mailed free on application.

Also, $1 for one dog, $2 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog; for the collection of which I may be found at the County Treasurer's office, in the town of Auburn, on and after December 15th, 1878.

Taxes may be paid in full, or in two installments. The first installment including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1879; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1879. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. penalty will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Road Receipts will not be received after the third Monday in April, only on delinquent taxes. No Road Receipts will be received on the November installment.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No County Order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday of February, 1879.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday of April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipt will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

DANIEL GONSER, Treasurer of DeKalb County.

Auburn, Ind., Dec. 12, 1878.

The following letter from the 67th Ohio regiment, which we find in an old copy of the Toledo Blade, may be of interest to some of our readers.

CAMP 67TH OHIO VETERAN VOLUNTEERS, BERMUDA, MAY 21, '64.

EDITOR BLADE:—As there are many anxious hearts in and around Toledo, following us, and as events are crowding thick and fast upon us, I will give you a short retrospect of the past week.

After the battle of the 10th inst., we had comparative rest and quiet until Wednesday last, when we were ordered to the front as pickets. To reach our line we had to go in under a sharp fire for about half an hour, with the enemy distant from us about two hundred yards. Expecting him to come in force on us, our boys hastily threw up some rough rifle-pits; these served us well next day. Early in the morning of Thursday they opened suddenly a most infernal artillery fire upon us, from about twelve pieces, some three hundred yards distant. When they thought we must surely be driven off, they advanced some infantry to take possession of our line. They soon retreated rapidly and did not appear again that day. We were relieved at night by the 142d New York, and the rebels came down on them and took the works.

While resting, about 1 o'clock on Friday, the order came that we must repossess our line. When we reached within four hundred yards of the enemy we came up with the regiment who relieved us, the night before, lying down. Our line was halted in full sight of the rebels and marched over the men in front of us, on to the rebels, and over our own works again. It was a brilliant though (to us) a dear action of about three and a half hours. One of many like incidents which came to my notice will show you the material of the men who but yesterday were your quiet and unassuming neighbors When we had gained the top of the rifle-pits, I found a man leaning against the earth thrown up in front of him, supposed to be a skulker from some other regiment. I ordered him to the front with us, when he pointed to his leg and showed that he was wounded. I then told him to go to the rear, when he said no, he'd be d—d if he would as long as there was one of them d—d rebel s— of b—s in front of him.

Struck with his pluck, I asked him what regiment, "67th." "What Company?" "Co. F." "What's your name, sir?" "L. T. PERCE." An hour afterwards, when reforming our line, he was still at his post. This is only one of many like cases, and I mention it only that the man who carries the musket and bears the brunt of the hardships, should get what he seldom does—his due.

In this connection, I must pay a tribute to the memory of a brave man, and noble soldier—Chas. M. Eurenius, of Co. E. He fell in the charge of yesterday, among the foremost. He was to have had a medal in a few days from Gen. Gilmore for his gallantry in going to the top of Sumpter in the face of its garrison. He died last night after having his leg amputated near the hip joint. Sergeants Carter and Hallet of Co. F. were killed. Altogether nine were killed and sixty wounded, including Capt. Emmerson of Co. F in the abdomen. Lieut. John C. Cochrane, Co K, left leg, amputated, and Lieut. Minor, Co. G, in the throat. This makes a total of casualties, for our regiment, in the last ten days of one hundred and forty-three. If we lost severely, we had a compensating honor.

After we had reformed our line and had established videttes, a horseman dressed in gray, suddenly emmerged from the thicket and rode in between the sentries of Cos. C and E. Instantly a hundred muskets were discharged and horse and rider came to the ground literally riddled. The horse must have had fifty bullets in him. The rider was extricated and proved to be Maj.-Gen. Walker of the rebel army. This is a good set off for Gen. Heckman. The rebel prisoners say we wounded at the same discharge Gen. Evans, also, but that his horse being unharmed, he escaped. Gen. Walker was surprised that he was treated so humanly, and he evidently did not expect it.

The energies and endurance of our men are being put to the test, and yet they bear it cheerfully. They have slept behind their guns, I may say, every night since they have been on the south side of the James, and often lay hard in the daytime; but they feel that it is not thrown away. We have very few cases of camp sickness—not a tithe of what is usual during camp life. Much of this exemption is owing to Drs. Westfall and Combs, who are as good and true officers to their comrades as our army possesses. They are well worthy of the trust they hold and fit successors of Dr. Forbes, who will be remembered gratefully by this command.

Having written more than I intended, I will close this hasty scrawl, interrupted half a dozen times by alarms from the gray-backs, who are within musket range.

Respectfully,
S., Co. E, 67th O. V. V. I.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

A Boston man has a vest made by "Fanny Fern." We suppose he will be averse to Parton with it until he has to Willis clothes to somebody.

Happy is he who has learned to do this one thing: To do the plain duty of the moment quickly and cheerfully, wherever and whatever it may be.

"It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross was in our composition"—and brass in our countenances.

When you assail the character of a living public man, always give the name of a deceased official as your authority, for the latter will never come back and deny it.

—Remember that there will be no postponement, and the sale of tickets to the Grand Concert at Ft. Wayne, Dec. 26, closes Dec. 20. Secure your tickets in time.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had 34 years experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this agency, with the name and residence of the patentee. By the immense circulation thus given public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Persons having made new discoveries or inventions, can ascertain free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to the undersigned. We also send free our Hand Book about the patent laws, patents, caveats, trade-marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions Address for the paper, or concerning patents, is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Billious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

A TORPID LIVER

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

THE DEATH OF THE OLD YEAR.

Full knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing;
Toll ye the church bell sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the old year lies a-dying.
Old year, you must not die;
You came to us so readily,
You lived with us so steadily,
Old year, you shall not die.

He lieth still; he doth not move;
He will not see the dawn of day,
He hath no other life above.
He gave me a friend, and a true, true-love,
'And the new-year will take 'em away.
Old year, you must not go;
So long as you have been with us,
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old year, you shall not go.

He froth'd his bumpers to the brim;
A jollier year we shall not see.
But tho' his eyes are waxing dim,
And tho' his foes speak ill of him,
He was a friend to me.
Old year, you shall not die;
We did so laugh and cry with you,
I've half a mind to die with you,
Old year, if you must die.

He was so full of joke and jest,
But all his merry quips are o'er.
To see him die across the waste,
His son and heir doth ride post-haste,
But he'll be dead before.
Every one for his own.
The night is starry and cold, my friend,
And the new-year blithe and bold, my friend
Comes up to take his own.

How hard he breathes! over the snow
I heard just now the crowing cock.
The shadows flicker to and fro;
The cricket chirps; the light burns low;
'Tis nearly twelve o'clock.
Shake hands, before you die;
Old year, we'll dearly rue for you:
What is it we can do for you?
Speak out before you die.

His face is growing sharp and thin.
Alack! our friend is gone,
Close up his eyes; tie up his chin;
Step from the corpse, and let him in
That standeth there alone,
And waiteth at the door.
There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend,
A new face at the door.—Tennyson.

The Amendment of the Patent Law.

[Scribner's Monthly.]

The Secretary of the Western R. R. Association, Mr. J. H. Raymond, replies in the January Scribner to the charge in the November number by Mr. Richardson, that the railroads are attempting to break down the present patent system. Mr. Raymond specifies the aims of the Association to amend the existing law, as follows:

1. A large number of suits were commenced in 1876, the cause of action in which accrued about 1855. A reasonable statute of limintations is desired.

2. A decree has been entered against the Chicago and North Western Railway Company for the infringment of a patent (the principal of which is alleged to have been infringed by the use of another subsequently patented device upon which a royalty had already been paid), which decree fixes, if fully sustained, the liability of that company therefor at about twelve hundred thousand dollars. The rule of recovery in equity patent litigation as now understood is confessedly absurd and unjust. The rule substituted is that the commercial value of the invention is to be determined by a reasonable number of applicable business transactions under the patent, plenary damages and expenses of suit to be added at the discretion of the court.

3. The provisions of the law allowing re-issues of patents on account of accidents or mistakes in the original issue are much broadened and a reasonable limitation of time within which such re-issue may be had is added, in order partially to prevent re-issuing of patents, so as to cover subsequent inventions; and the retroactive character, in two respects, of re-issues is taken away.

4. A provision for taking testimony in perpetuam, most carefully guarded, is introduced. The provisions of the general law in this regard are not applicable in patent cases.

5. Proceedings to annul invalid patents are provided.

6. A very large proportion of the patents now alive are useless as practical devices, and are useful only as the basis of infringment suits. Two fees, one at the end of four years of $50, and the other at the end of nine years of $100, are provided for, non-payment working a forfiture in order to get rid of the many patents whose lives are not worth these amounts.

7. The writer paid over $40,000 for patent licenses destroyed in the Chicago fire, the existence of which was admitted but the contents of which could not be proved, because the law, although allowing all other patent grants to be recorded in the patent office, did not admit licenses. The bill corrects this.

Religion in These Days.

Man's place in nature has never been so sharply and profoundly questioned as it has been during the past ten years. The answer which science presumes to give, when it presumes to give any, is not one which pleases or in any way satisfies itself. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Matter and force have manifested themselves in man, in form and phenomena and the matter and force which have made man shall at last be refunded into the common stock, to be used over and over again, in other forms and phenomena.

There is a body, but there is no such thing as mind, independent of body. The dualism of constitution in which have believed, and which lies at the basis of all our religion and philosophy, is a delusion. Out of all the enormous expenditure of ingenuity, or of what appears to be, or seems like, ingenuity, nothing is saved. The great field of star-mist out of which our solar system was made has been hardened into planets, set in motion and filled with life, to go on for untold ages, and then come to an end—possibly to become a field of star-mist again; and nothing is to be saved out of the common fund of matter and force that can go on in an independent, immortal life.

Man is simply a higher form of animal. God as a personality does not exist. Immortality is a dream, and the Christain religion, of course, is a delusion.

These conclusions seems to be the best that science can give us. Science believes nothing that it cannot prove. There may be a personal God, who takes cognizance of the personal affairs of men, but science cannot prove it; therefore a belief in a personal God is "unscientific." There may be such a thing as the human soul—a spirit that has a life, or the possibilities of a life, independent of the body; but it cannot be proved. Indeed, it seems to be proved that all the phenomena of what we call mind are attributable to changes that take place among the molecules of the brain. Therefore, a belief in the human soul is unscientific. Of course, if there is no human soul, there is nothing to save, and if there be nothing to save, Christ was, consciously or unconsciously, an imposter; and the hopes and expectations of all Christendom are vain. And this is the highest conclusion to which science seems to be able to lead us. Can anything be imagined to be more lame and impotent? We should think that every laboratory and every scientific school, and every library and study of a man of science, would seem like a tomb!

That this attitude of prominent men toward the great questions that relate to God, immortality, the nature of the human soul and the Christian religion, has sadly shaken the faith of a great multitude, there is no doubt. Society is honeycombed with infidelity. Men stagger in their pulpits with their burden of difficulties and doubts. The theological seminaries have become shaky places, and faith has taken its flight from an uncounted number of souls, leaving them in a darkness and sadness that no words can describe. All this is true. It is so true that tears may well mingle in one's ink as he writes it; but, after all we have everything left that we have ever possessed. Nothing is proved against our faith. Science has never proved that there is no personal God, no soul, no immortality, no Christ, and these are matters that we have always taken on faith. Not only this, but they are matters which science is utterly incompetent to handle. They are outside of the domain of science. Science can no more touch them than it can touch anything that it confesses to be "unknowable."—J. G. Holland; Scribner for January.

Roll of Honor.

Below are the names of pupils in school district No. 9, Keyser Tp., who were neither absent nor tardy during the school month, beginning November 1878, and ending Dec. 13th.

Addie Olinger, Sarah Myers, Loreane Bovee, Frankie Bolander and Abalshal Sleppy.

Several more names would appear in the above roll, had sickness and work not prevented their attendance.

LUCIUS BASSETT, Teacher.

The following notice was not received in time for last week's issue.

DIED:—Dec. 15th, 1878, George A. Ginder, youngest son of Jacob Ginder, aged 19 years, 9 months and 15 days. The death was the result of what seemed a trival accident, viz., a slight cut upon the right knee. Inflamation ensued and after two weeks of excruciating pain he expired. Truly a terrible stroke upon his aged parents. The funeral was largely attended at Mt. Pleasant Church. Rev. Butler, pastor.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

THE INDIANA STATE SENTINEL!
FOR 1879
HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO
One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepaired with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

A ROMANCE OF CHRISTMAS.

Sweet Josie stood with a thoughtful mein
 Before the glowing anthracite,
Dreaming a happy waking dream
 She meant to make come true that night.

"I do not think," she softly said,
 "If I should ask he would refuse;
And, when the Christmas feast is spread,
 Then love our cause shall win or lose."

The spacious mansion shone with light,
 Heart-full of happiness the host;
Of all the year fair Christmas night
 Held memories that moved him most.

Around the feast glad faces beam,
 Low words and laughter idly drift;
Then rose fair Josie, like some Queen—
 "My father, I would ask a gift.

"This morning in my mother's hand
 You laid a bracelet richly rare;
And scarcely you would understand
 That I for jewels did not care.

"This morning gold and love you sent
 To many a home where they are scant;
What I then said I really meant—
 Money is not the thing I want.

"But if you would make Josie gay,
 And all her happiness bring back,
Make life one long fair holiday,
 Then give her freely—Cousin Jack."

Just for a moment one could see
 A shadow fall on every face;
Then said the father, "I agree;
 That man must surely have some grace

"That Josie loves so tenderly.
 I'll take him on your word, my dear;
Bid him come home from over sea,
 And we will make him welcome here."

"Then, friends, make room, I have a guest
 Who must not pleasant welcome lack,
Of Christmas gifts this is the best—
 Come in and bring it—Cousin Jack!"

They met the sun-browned youth with joy,
 And Josie took, with grave delight,
The hand of the brave sailor boy
 Who came to her that Christmas night.

At Miss Quigley's.

A HOLIDAY STORY

"I think, girls, we ought to apologize," Joan Bramley said, as, with her three companions, she sat in the schoolroom Christmas morning. "I was dreadfully impertinent about the window, though I'm sure I had no idea what I was saying. And that image was too bad."

"It was too funny for anything," laughed Lou Taylor. "If I hadn't laughed when I did, I know I should have gone off like a torpedo!"

"But, if we apologize," suggested Sue, "it will look as if we wanted to get rid of our impositions."

"I'm sure I do, for one," sighed Claire, who was not the most brilliant scholar of them all.

"We can do them first," said Joan, "and then go—"

"In solemn procession," interrupted Sue; "in sack-cloth and ashes. If we tie our papers with crape it will add to the effect."

"I've a crape tie you may use," said Lou. "But, seriously, I think Joan is right. I am ashamed that Miss Quigley saw that image."

"Well, then," cried Sue, "let's work like Trojans now."

While the four are busily at work over the books, we may take the time to relate the transgression for which they were thus condemned to do tasks upon a holiday. They were the only boarders remaining at Miss Quigley's boarding-school through the holidays. Their homes were in East Machias, a town so far "down East" in Maine that in winter there was no getting to it without a voyage, beside which a trip to the North pole was a trifle; so they were to remain at school for the entire year. Lou and Sue were sisters; Joan Branley their cousin, and Clara Thornton an old neighbor.

The day before Christmas Claire had said, sadly enough, that this would be the first Christmas of her life without a tree.

"Let's have one, then," said Sue, boldly.

"It is impossible!" said her sister.

> "'And what's impossible can't be,
> And never, never comes to pass.'"

"The great Napoleon," returned Sue, "has the credit of remarking that impossible is the adjective of a very helpless sort of people. Why shouldn't we have a tree? Don't we know how to fix one?"

"If we had one to fix!"

"Oh, dear!" sighed Claire; "and there's woods and woods of them over there."

"I'll tell you!" cried Sue, jumping up and sending the contents of the work-basket in all directions, "Tommy Twinx!"

"Tommy Twinx?"

"I wish, Sue," remarked Lou, with an air of pathetic resignation, "that you wouldn't box the compass so often with the things in your basket. What has Tommy Twinx to do with the tree?"

"We'll have him get it!"

"Good!" said Joan, grimly. "Miss Quigley has never seen me speak to Tommy Twinx but once, and, to pay for it, I had to add a perfect ocean of figures!"

"I remember," added Lou, "How awfully shocked the Griffiness was when she heard me say, 'There's millions in it!' 'Slang, Miss Taylor!' she said. 'You may add the same figures, and will receive two demerits.'"

"I'll see to Tommy," said Sue, when they had done laughing at her sister's imitation of Miss Quigley. "But how will you get the tree into the house?"

"Have him leave it under the window behind the fence, and we'll pull it into the room."

Of course, the girls were delighted with the boldness of the plan, and entered into it with all zest. Tommy Twinx was the son of a widow who lived next door to the school, and who did washing for the pupils. Tommy's clothes, as Lou said, were "a miracle of patches," but both they and he were always clean and tidy. He was regarded as an ally of the girls, and did various errands, which, although not very harmful, were to be kept from the knowledge of "The Griffiness," as Miss Quigley was called.

And that brings us to Miss Quigley herself, who, as head of the school, certainly deserves to be honored with some particular notice. She was a tall, dried-up lady, with erect figure, a nose like a hawk's beak, and piercing, black eyes. Her thin hair was brushed back from her face, and twisted into a compact knob at the top of her head; there was a tradition in the school that when this was untwisted Miss Quigley's form lost its erectness, her dignity fell away from her, and there remained but a wreck of the severe teacher. She moved with a spasmodic, automatic motion, as if she was controlled by machinery within, of which, it may be surmised, her knob was the key. She shook hands with a rapid, fiery jerk, swooping down upon a visitor with a sidewise motion, not unlike the pounce of a fish-hawk.

The worthy lady was much afflicted with neuralgia, for the relief of which painful disease she had swallowed unheard-of quantities of anodyne liniment, until she seemed to be quite soaked full of that odoriferous compound, and all her garments, and her every breath, shed pungent fragrance on the breeze.

"She will never die like other folks," Sue said; "she will turn into congealed liniment—something like spermaceti. A tree for the healing of the nations will probably grow out of her grave. Her breath grows stronger as she grows weaker, and I don't think death will ever be able to take it."

The lady had very strict notions of propriety, and allowed her pupils very little freedom. All their pocket-money she took charge of; and, having been told that her own ill-health was the result of too free indulgence in sweets in her youth, she took good care that the girls should escape a like danger.

But, while we have thus digressed to tell of Tommy Twinx and Miss Quigley, Sue has concluded her arrangements with the former, and has been promised the "best little tree in McKeen woods."

The girls were busy all day, making gifts or arranging for the festival.

"I say, Lou," Claire remarked, "if I put on my crape tie for you, will you look astonished, and pretend that it is new?"

"Of course; only don't rob yourself."

"Oh, I can't wear it," answered the other, with the utmost candor. "It is too much soiled."

"'Large was her bounty, and her soul sincere,'" returned Lou, who was forever quoting something.

"Girls," said Joan, in her solemn voice, which meant that something important was coming. "Let's ask Slavey."

"What?"

"Invite Slavey?"

"The Griffiness would tear her limb from limb if she found it out," said Lou, "and probably devour her with liniment-sauce afterward."

"But she won't find it out," urged Joan. "It is Christmas, and Patty won't have any good time if we don't invite her."

Slavey was a tiny maid-of-all-work, with large eyes, apparently strained open by the extremely tight braiding of her hair; she moved about with a frightened air, every step an apology for her presuming to walk at all.

"Well, ask Slavey, then," Sue said, "and all save your cookies from supper. They'll help make a show. If the Griffiness did not count them we might have more."

"We must stop abusing old Quig," said her sister, thoughtfully. "It would trouble mamma."

"'Old Quig!'" laughed Claire. "What's that but abuse?"

"Blessed little mother!" sighed Sue. "She'd never say harm of a mosquito; and that I take to be the pinnacle of human meekness."

So the girls chatted, and the day wore on. Supper was eaten, and they waited with all impatience for 9 o'clock, which was the regular bedtime. Sue, behind the back of the mistress, occupied herself in making candy-bags from tarletan, although the others couldn't imagine what she expected to put in them.

The longest evenings must close, and at last the time came for them to take up their candle and file solemnly to the large square chamber, which for the vacation they all occupied together.

"Hurrah!" cried Lou, as soon as the chamber door closed behind them. "Now for the tree! 'On with the dance, let the joy be unconfined!'"

And she threw open the window, and began to pull vigorously at the string to which the tree was attached.

"Be careful! the string isn't very strong!"

Sue spoke too late.

Snap! The cord was broken, and the four girls stood looking at each other in blank dismay.

"Oh, Lou!"

"''Twas ever thus since childhood's hour,'" quoted Lou, the incorrigible. "I'm dreadfully sorry. Wouldn't I do for a tree?"

"Well," said Claire, dropping disconsolately upon the bed, "I knew something would happen."

"Something will happen," retorted Sue. "Can't we get a slip-noose on to it?"

"I'll tell you!" cried Joan, more excitedly than was her wont; "see here!"

As she spoke she dragged out of the worsted shawl upon which she had been knitting down stairs, one of the long steel needles. Fortunately it was not brittle, and she was able to bend it into a very tolerable hook.

"'Simple Simon went a-fishing,'" sang Lou. "Won't it be 'hooking,' to get a tree in this way?"

"The string won't hold!" Joan said; and, before they knew what she was doing, she had the sheets off her bed, and tied together at the corners.

To this the hook was fastened, and Sue began to fish.

"Do you feel a bite?" asked Claire, who was clinging to the angler's skirts to prevent her from tumbling out of the window.

"I've caught it! I've caught it! Pull away!"

"Hush! Quigley will hear!"

"It must be a whale!"

"It's too cold for anything but a frost-fish."

"Or a skate!"

"Sh-h-h-h!"

Amid such exclamations the tree was safely pulled in at the window, and the girls stood flushed and panting around it.

A white paper parcel was fastened amid the branches. Lou opened it with an air of triumph.

"Candy!" said Claire, who was noted for her love of sweets. "Where in the world did it come from?"

"From Mrs. Moffitt's, of course."

"But the money?"

Sue shook her head mysteriously.

"I know," exclaimed her sister. "It was that gold quarter you wore that Loisy Burton gave you. You were going to keep it always."

"Well," answered Sue, heroically. "I didn't know then that I was coming to spend Christmas in the cave of a Griffiness."

Joan pressed her friend's hand, for she knew what the sacrifice had been, and I may as well say here that she found means the next day of redeeming the keepsake from Mrs. Moffitt and giving it back to Sue, doubly precious for the added memories.

The tree was placed upon a table in the middle of the room, and firmly wedged with books. For lights they had to cut up their candle, which was, fortunately, a long one, and they fastened the pieces to the boughs with hair-pins.

The girls had, before the tree was talked of, prepared gifts for each other, and their home-friends had sent presents for each to some one else of the four.

It was easy for them to find something for Patty, so there were a goodly number of articles for the tree. Claire cut stars from gilt paper and fastened them at the ends of the limbs, while Joan very jauntily tied up the cookies with bits of gay ribbon.

"I am very sorry," Sue remarked, "that there is a bite out of my cookie. But Grif was looking at me, and I had to take one mouthful. I think it rather improves the shape, and I am going to mark it for Claire, as she is an artist and will appreciate that!"

At last everything was arranged, and Joan went after Patty, while the others lit the candles.

"It is too bad, girls," Sue said, "not to have the mistress of the house. "Here's for her, too."

She whisked a chair into the floor into it dumped a couple of pillows, and with the help of shawls and dresses, produced the grotesque figure of a woman in almost less time than it takes to tell.

Claire, who was a capital hand at a likeness, seized a crayon and boldly drew the face, without for an instant considering the pillow-slip. Lou put the finishing touch by tucking a liniment-bottle into the folded arms of the figure.

"Now she is saying, 'Young ladies, sweets in your youth may be sours in your age.' Isn't it capital?"

Little Patty came in, nearly frightened out of her small wits, but none the less delighted for all that.

"Oh, it's splendid!" she cried, softly. "It's better than Fourth of July and Jack-downings."

The dark fir-tree did look very pretty with its golden stars and half-a-dozen candle-ends, which glowed and shone as Christmas-candles should; the four cookies and the five bags of candy; the little bundles in gay papers and the white crape scarf draped gracefully over a couple of boughs. And I dare say that the girls never enjoyed any of the fine trees which they had at home more than this one which they had gotten up by themselves; and I fear that it must be confessed that there was added for the time being a very pleasant spice from the very mischief of the affair. But the trouble with this part was that it made them somewhat ashamed afterward, as we shall see.

A pretty sight, too, were the four—yes, the five young girls, their faces flushed with health and fun. They all talked at once; they made numberless harmless jokes, that can no more be told than soda-water can be carried about in a tumble.

It was well for them that Miss Quigley's room was at the other end of the house, and that Sally, the cook, was so sound asleep; for, although somebody at every third word cried "hush!" they could not help making a great deal more noise than they imagined.

"Do you suppose there is anybody asleep in the house?" asked Lou.

"I scarcely think it possible," Claire answered.

"I mean, do you think there are any who ought to be asleep?"

"Yes," Joan said, dryly. "Here are five."

Sue dressed for Santa Claus by putting on all the girls' furs, fastening upon her head a muff with a feather-duster jauntily sticking out of the top, and blacking an immense pair of mustaches upon her plump face.

"My dear friends," she said, standing by the tree, "I had not much trouble to get here, for I scented the house from the North pole, but I did find it difficult to enter the house. Miss Quigley keeps too huge fires for me to try the chimneys; a Griffiness guarded the doors, and had not that fine young man, Tommy Twinx, showed me the way by the window I fear I should not have got in at all, which would have been very hard on me, my dears, for the sight of your beautiful faces warms my blood like a wassail-bowl. My speech must be short, my lovely darlings, on account of the shortness of the candles, which is owing to the warm summer's making the white bears so scarce. But, if the gifts are not as fine as some I've brought you, they mean quite as much; and I am sure I wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, with less liniment and more liberty!"

This speech was received with great applause, and the distribution of gifts began. Sue dexterously pulled a label from the cookie Claire had hung for her, and culled it for Patty, who was so excited that she nearly strangled herself by trying to eat it, and, at the same time, laugh at Claire for sitting down upon her bitten one.

"What! that lovely white crape scarf for me?" exclaimed Lou, as it was handed to her. "Who could have given it to me? And it isn't so much worn, except in the creases and the places where it's been tied; and, if I wear the soiled side out, it will do nicely for pearl color."

Patty scarcely understood the fun, and looked a little shocked until Claire rejoined:

"It is a surprise I planned for you, dear. It is a great sacrifice, for it was so convenient to tie around the cat's neck. It is finest Canton crape, and I think the pinholes give it an air very dis—dis—mercy! somebody say distinguished in French."

But, aside from this good-natured banter, there were whispered little kindly words of thanks for knick-knacks, which showed the loving thoughts of the givers. Patty had long ago forgotten all about her mistress and the probable consequences if she should be discovered in this unheard-of transgression, and was in a state of bewildering bliss over the ribbons and pictures that had been bestowed upon her.

"Am I to keep them for my truly own?" she asked, "or is it only play give?"

"They are your truly own," Joan replied. "There is no make-believe about it."

"And that splendid ribbon, too?" Patty said, half to herself. "I'm as good as Sally, now."

All laughed at her simplicity, but I think they were all touched to see how easily they had been able to make the child happy.

At last the tree was bare and the candles all burned out, but the one piece that Joan had providently laid aside.

Each of the girls took a bit of the fir as a memento, and sadly they threw the tree out of the window.

What girl but has a quantity of such trifling keepsakes laid away—a pressed flower, a bit of ribbon, a favor from the German, a rude drawing—worthless things enough that still have the power of calling up old memories, sweeter for being mellowed by time. Do you think the girls ever came across that dried branch of fir in after years without seeing again the old room at Miss Quigley's, the little tree, and hearing the far echo of the laughter and fun.

But at this moment it was something more substantial than an echo which they heard.

"Be careful how you put down that window," Joan had said, but the warning was too late.

Bang! The sash fell with a noise loud enough, it seemed to them, to wake the whole town of Brunswick.

"Now you've done it! Patty, get under the bed! Throw those furs into the closet!"

"I hear the smell of the breath of a Griffiness!"

But no footsteps approached, and the panic gradually subsided, and the fun went on again.

"Girls," said Joan, holding up a package that she had taken from her trunk, "for days I have gone about with an awful secret locked in my breast; ever since I traded all my postage-stamps for this! The time for revelation has come. The midnight bell tolls. Sisters of the mystic circle—peanuts!"

They never quite knew how it happened, but at the last word the string broke and the nuts rattled to the floor in a perfect shower. At the same instant a step was heard in the passage. Joan seized Patty by main strength and pushed her under the bed, seating herself on the edge of it to conceal the child's feet, which would stick out. The others huddled themselves under the bedclothes as best they might, and pretended to be fast asleep. The door opened to admit Miss Quigley in a scanty costume, which made her look even more stern and awful than by day.

"She's been twisting her knob ever since the window fell," whispered Sue to Claire, by which it may be inferred that she could not resist the temptation to peep slyly between her half-closed lids.

"What are you doing, Miss Bramley?" demanded the mistress.

"Thinking," replied Joan, laconically.

"Thinking! What an extraordinary girl! Why are you not in bed? Didn't I hear a window fall?"

"How can I tell what you hear?"

"Did you let a window fall?"

"I let no window fall."

"Did you throw over a chair?"

"I threw over no chair."

"Did you drop a book?"

"I dropped no book."

"Did you drop anything?"

"I dropped nothing."

"Did you knock over anything?"

"I knocked over nothing."

Poor Joan was too anxious about Patty's feet to have any clear idea of what she was saying.

"You are very impertinent," began Miss Quigley; but she caught sight of the figure of herself, which none of them had remembered to pull over. "What!" she exclaimed. "A figure of me! With a bottle, too? I thought you better bred. And it does not in the least look like me. I never should know who it was meant for."

This was too much. Sue could contain herself no longer. She burst into a perfect shout of laughter, in which the others joined, all save Patty, who was as frightened as a mouse in a trap.

"Miss Taylor," demanded the indignant mistress, advancing, with a great crushing of peanuts under her feet, "what does this mean? What is that on your face?"

But Sue could do nothing but laugh and laugh and laugh, and Miss Quigley, whose knob, after all, may have been rather loosely twisted that night, couldn't help laughing, too, at the fair face all streaked with black from the mustaches and surrounded by a tangle of golden hair. Miss Quigley hastened to preserve her dignity by a precipitate retreat.

"Young ladies," she said, in her grandest manner, "you will bring me a translation of the first fifty lines of the second book of the Æneid to-morrow."

Without another word she left them to put the room to rights, send Patty trembling to her attic, and get to bed themselves.

As all were young and healthy, and very tired beside, I do not know that they slept any less soundly than usual, but they awoke with somewhat troubled minds that Christmas morning.

"It is not the getting into scrapes, but the getting out," Sue remarked, dolefully, as she paused in her boot-lacing to crack and eat a stray peanut; and they all agreed with her.

However, as we saw at the beginning of this story, if the reader is kind enough to remember, they concluded to make the best of things, and honestly to acknowledge their fault.

Before their dinner the tasks were all completed, even to Claire's, and delivered to Miss Quigley with what Sue called "truly edifying penitence."

Miss Quigley smiled benignly at their contrition.

"I am sure, my dear young ladies," she said, "I am happy that you are willing to own your fault. I am not so hard-hearted but you might have had your fun for the asking; but never mind that now. I thought you would be lonely, and I had asked Deacon Woodard to take you down to Bath in his chaise this afternoon. I am very glad you have done your tasks so that you can go."

"Girls!" cried Lou, as soon as they were out of "the presence," "isn't my hair all burned off? Such coals of fire! And after that image, too!"

I leave it to your imagination to paint their ride; but be sure they had a glorious time, and all fell in love with Deacon Woodard, who might have been grandfather to any of them. And that night, when they went up-stairs to bed, Sue burst out with:

"The blessed old Quigley! If her breath is as strong as a monsoon, her heart isn't so bad, after all. She is terribly hard on the candy question; but that's only natural, perhaps. Catch me ever calling her a Griffiness again!"

And so said they all.

An Unhappy Bridegroom.

A French manufacturer of imitation gold and silver jewelry for exportation, and consequently made in styles which are not in favor in France, some time since found that he was being robbed, and he was trying to trace the thief and manner of theft when he received a telegram from a friend who is spending the summer in a village in the environs of Paris. The friend acquainted him that, having been accidentally called that very morning to the Mayor's office of the village, he saw the marriage procession of one of the manufacturer's workmen, and noticed that the bride and bridesmaids wore a profusion of jewelry which, unmistakably, had come from the manufacturer's work-shop. The manufacturer at once remembered that some time before this very workman had quitted him, saying he was going to marry and to set up for himself in the country. He had noticed the embarrassed and confused manner of the workman, but attributed it to fear of meeting with a disagreeable reception. Several other incidents confirmed his suspicions. He at once took the railway, reached the village at nightfall, called on his friend, went to the head of the police, and all three went to the restaurant where the marriage feast was spread. When they entered the dining room, the bridegroom turned pale as death and every limb convulsively trembled. The bride fainted. The guests fled. The bridegroom's lodgings were searched, and a great many stolen goods were found in them. He was carried off to prison, there to spend his marriage night. It will be long before he rejoins his bride.

Cause of Stunted Trees.

The stunted, scraggy growth of the underwood in a forest is generally attributed to the fact that the smaller trees are overshadowed by the taller ones, and thus deprived of the light and air necessary to their development. But M. Grandeau, professor in the French School of Forestry, says that this stunted growth is caused by the larger trees acting as conductors, depriving the smaller ones of electricity. To test this view, he tried an experiment.

In April, 1877, he took two tobacco plants, each weighing 3¼ grammes, and having four leaves. They were both planted in boxes containg mould of identical quality, and placed side by side in a position favorable to their growth.

But one of them had placed over it a cage, consisting of four iron rods, one metre fifty centimetres high, joined at the top and covered with wire gauze, which permitted the free circulation of air, light and water, but completely protected the plant from atmospheric electricity.

They were left uninterfered with until the middle of August, when the results obtained were as follows: The plant in the open air had attained a height of 3 feet 5 inches, while the other was only 2 feet 4 inches; the former weighed 270 grammes and the latter 144 grammes; when dried, their respective weights were 30 grammes and 15¼ grammes.

Similar experiments made with maize and wheat gave precisely analogous results, so that M. Grandeau has come to the conclusion that the electricity of the atmosphere is equally necessary to vegetation as sunlight and air.

A Christmas Breakfast Without Invitation.

We should keep open house on Christmas day, in the good, old way of our Dutch predecessors, if not forefathers. The poor should share in our merry-making, and even our dumb friends should have cause to rejoice. This is all very well; but our little friends will imagine that they ought to have the liberty of sending out invitations where they furnish the banquet. But there are some children who will always be late in getting down for breakfast. The consequence is that breakfast gets cold, and that pussy and her family grow impatient. Now, I have no doubt the cats held a solemn council, and concluded that Santa Claus had carried all the children off, and that, of course, having vanished, would never need the breakfast.

They cried bitterly, for they liked the little children. I can almost see the tears running down their cheeks and quivering on their whiskers. But people cannot grieve for ever. Even cats must stop crying, and every child knows that after a good cry one feels terribly hungry.

So these cats wipe their eyes, and, thinking it a pity such a nice breakfast should go to waste, sat down and ate it up—the tears bursting out every now and then, they were so deeply affected.

"Scat! scat! you good-for-nothing cats!" cried the maid, as she drove them off. Wasn't it hard?

The U. S. Signal Service.

Gradually, the wild and ungovernable forces of nature are, through science, made of use to man. Following in the wake of the ingenious inventions for the use of steam and electricity, comes the organization of the U. S. Signal Service. Is it not wonderful that a system could be originated and perfected whereby an operator can accurately predict the weather of a distant locality? And yet experience proves our "storm signals" to be reliable. Equally great are the advances made in the science of medicine. Step by step, uncertainties and doubts have yielded to absolute certainty. The discoveries of Harvey and Jenner have been succeeded by the Golden Medical Discovery of Dr. R. V. Pierce. No longer need people despair because some physician has pronounced the lungs unsound. Hundreds of testimonials are on file in the office of Dr. Pierce from those who had abandoned all hope, and had been given up to die by physicians and friends. Incipient consumption, bronchitis and scrofulous tumors speedily, surely and permanently yield to the healing influence of the Discovery. If the bowels be constipated, use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. For full particulars see Pierce's Memorandum Book, given away by all druggists.

THE importance and value of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment to a family cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. It is both for internal and external use, and will prevent and cure diphtheria and all dangerous throat and lung troubles.

HALL'S BALSAM

Is the Leading Specific for Consumption.

It soothes and heals the membrane of the lungs, inflamed and poisoned by the disease, and remedies the night sweats and tightness across the chest, which accompany it.

CONSUMPTION

is not an incurable malady. It is only necessary to have the right remedy, and HALL'S BALSAM is that remedy.

DON'T DESPAIR OF RELIEF, for this benign specific may cure you, even though professional aid fails.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

Dr D. D. Wright, of Cincinnati, sends us the subjoined professional indorsement. "I have prescribed Hall's Balsam in a large number of cases, and always with success." He adds that "in one case a patient, with every appearance of confirmed consumption, was restored to his usual health soon after commencing to take the Balsam."

John Kuhn, of Lafayette, Ind., writes: "One year ago I was to all appearance in the last stages of consumption, and got so low our doctor said I would not live twenty-four hours." Mr. Kuhn further states that "after taking nine bottles of HALL'S BALSAM he is now in perfect health, having used no other medicine."

The above brief extracts are taken from a

MASS OF EVIDENCE

which has been accumulating during a period of TWENTY-NINE YEARS, proving the efficacy of HALL'S BALSAM in all cases where the breathing organs are affected, and showing the estimation in which the remedy is held by the public and the medical profession. Sold by all Druggists.

CHRISTMAS IN THE MIDDLE AGES.

The Northern nations of Europe overrunning most of the continent merged many of their national pastimes into the Christian ideas and habits that they adopted.

The strange mingling of the old faith and the new gave rise in each country to many curious customs, once held in high esteem in the courtly circles of the past, but in latter days left to the peasantry, and even there they are rapidly dying out.

Christmas has its quaint picturesque ceremonies, some of which have crept across the Atlantic, but there are others that never joined the emigrants, or, at least, never got naturalized.

The mistletoe of the Druids still hangs in honor in English homes, while all over Western Europe the Yule, or Christmas log, has maintained its dignity almost to our day.

The burning of the Yule log is an ancient Christmas ceremony, transmitted to us from our Scandinavian ancestors, who, at their feast of Juul, at the winter solstice, used to kindle huge bonfires in honor of their god, Thor. The custom, though sadly shorn of the "pomp and circumstance" which formerly attended it, is still maintained in various parts of the country. The bringing in and placing of the ponderous block on the hearth of the wide chimney in the baronial hall was the most joyous of the ceremonies observed on Christmas eve in feudal times. The venerable log, destined to crackle a welcome to all comers, was drawn in triumph from its resting-place at the feet of its living brethren of the woods. Each wayfarer raised his hat as it passed, for he well knew that it was full of good promises, and that its flame would burn out old wrongs and heartburnings, and cause the liquor to bubble in the wassail-bowl, that was quaffed to the drowning of ancient feuds and animosities.

So the Yule log was worthily honored, and the ancient bards welcomed its entrance with their ministry. The following ditty, appropriate to such an occasion, appears in the Sloane Manuscripts. It is supposed to be of the time of Henry VI.:

WELCOME YULE.

Welcome be thou, heavenly King,
Welcome born on this morning,
Welcome for whom we shall sing—
Welcome Yule.

Welcome be ye, Stephen and John,
Welcome Innocents every one,
Welcome Thomas Martyr one—
Welcome Yule.

Welcome be ye, good New Year,
Welcome Twelfth Day, both in fere,
Welcome saints, loved and dear—
Welcome Yule.

Welcome be ye, Candlemas,
Welcome be ye, Queen of Bliss,
Welcome both to more or less—
Welcome Yule.

Welcome be ye that are here,
Welcome all, and make good cheer,
Welcome all, another year—
Welcome Yule.

And here, in connection with the festivities on Christmas eve, we may quote Herrick's inspiriting stanzas:

Come bring with a noise,
My merry, merry boys,
The Christmas log to the firing;
While my good dame she
Bids ye all be free,
And drink to your hearts' desiring.

With the last year's brand
Light the new block, and,
For good success in his spending,
On your psalteries play
That sweet luck may Come while the log is a-tending.

Drink now the strong beer,
Cut the white loaf here,
The while the meat is a-shredding;
For the rare mince-pie
And the plums stand by
To fill the paste that's a-kneading.

The allusion at the commencement of the second stanza is to the practice of laying aside the half-consumed block after having served its purpose on Christmas eve, preserving it carefully in a cellar or other secure place till the next anniversary of Christmas, and then lighting the new log with the charred remains of its predecessor. The due observance of this custom was considered of the highest importance, and it was believed that the preservation of last year's Christmas log was a most effectual security to the house against fire. We are further informed that it was regarded as a sign of very bad luck if a squinting person entered the hall when the log was burning, and a similarly evil omen was exhibited in the arrival of a bare-footed person, and, above all, of a flat-footed woman. As an accompaniment to the yule log, a candle of monstrous size, called the yule candle, or Christmas candle, shed its light on the festive board during the evening.

During the Middle Ages the church came in to sanction the festivities and dispel any diabolic influence of the heathen origin. The yule log was sought for the castle by the vassal, chosen with care and brought home with rejoicing. Before it entered the great hall, however, the chaplain, in surplice and stole, with the acolyte bearing the holy water, came out to meet it. A benediction was chanted, the log duly sprinkled, the lord of the manor and his family joining in from the porch, while the deep voices of the peasantry rang out responsive from a respectful distance.

Blessed for use, the yule log was then borne into the hall, and the fire made ready to kindle as the midnight hour rang forth, when, without, bonfires blazed merrily.

A Fact Worth Remembering About Winter Rye.

It being one of the essential conditions in successful wheat-growing that if wheat-lands are plowed in "the dry" they must be "sown in the wet," it is worth the while to recollect that if, on land particularly favorable to wheat, rains do not fall in season to insure successful germination, rye may be sown with an almost absolute certainty of success. This we know from personal experience gained in the autumn of 1874, a remarkably hot and droughty year, when wheat sowed in September was utterly destroyed by the severe winter that followed, while rye, sown late in October, and some of it in November, came through safely and made an unusually fine crop in 1875. This is something worth knowing and acting on, particularly since the wheat crop of 1879 seems to have lowering over it, in the future, several of those dangerous climatic disorders which will reduce its outcome and yield below the average of the average year. If, early in the spring season, the prospects of a fair yield of wheat are good, then the rye-fields may be used for spring and summer pasturage, and pay as well as any foreign crop pays. Indeed, winter rye, in the winter-wheat region, almost always succeeds, when the wheat fails, and it may, therefore, be sown as a sort of premium paid for the insurance of the winter wheat crop.—Home and Farm.

Abraham Lincoln's Old Companion.

Dennis F. Hanks, the father of Mrs. James Shoaff, with whom he is now living in this city, was born on the south fork of Nolin's creek, three miles southeast of Hodgeville, in Hardin county, Ky., May 15, 1799, being now in his 80th year, and is quite vigorous for one of his age. He has now thirty-two grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. His first Presidential vote was for Andrew Jackson. His parents were natives of Virginia, and were among the first settlers of Kentucky. It was in the same neighborhood, in Hardin county, that President Lincoln was born, he and Mr. Hanks being boys together. Thomas Lincoln, father of Abraham Lincoln, emigrated from Hardin county, Ky., to what is now Spencer county, Ind., where, after a year's residence, the President's mother died. His father afterward returned to his old home in Kentucky and married his second wife, Sarah Johnson, whose daughter Dennis F. Hanks afterward married. When Thomas Lincoln returned to Spencer county, Ind., Mr. Hanks came with him, and here it was that Dennis F. Hanks taught Abraham Lincoln how to read and write. After living in Spencer county, Ind., about thirteen years, the families of Thomas Lincoln and Dennis F. Hanks, sixteen in number, emigrated to Macon county, Ill. Here he remained until the fall of 1831, when he (Hanks) removed to Coles county. A year after, Thomas Lincoln also removed to Coles county, eight miles south of Charleston, where he died. His second wife died in 1866, at the age of 80 years.

At the time of the election of President Lincoln, all of the sixteen persons who emigrated together from Spencer county, Ind., to Macon county, Ill., were living, while only three of them now remain alive—a sister to the wife of Dennis Hanks, at Farmington, Ill., a nephew of Dennis F. Hanks, now living on the old Thomas Lincoln farm, and Dennis F. Hanks, now living with his daughter, Mrs. James Shoaff, in this city.

It was while his father lived in Macon county that Abraham Lincoln left his father to fight the battle of life by himself.

In the summer of 1866 Dennis F. Hanks, John Hanks, his cousin, and James Shoaff, the founder of this paper, removed the old Thomas Lincoln cabin from Macon county to Boston, and exhibited it on Boston Common to thousands of people. This was the only thing ever allowed to be exhibited on the Common in that city. Many rails were also taken from the old farm to Boston, and manufactured into canes, and sold.

In 1864, during the riot at Charleston, when Dr. York, of this city, was killed, and quite a number of the rioters were arrested, Mr. Hanks was employed by them to go to Washington and intercede in their behalf with President Lincoln, which he did. While on his way there he was robbed of his money at Crestline, Ohio, but having his through ticket, which the pickpockets did not get, he was enabled to get through. He went up to the White House and informed the usher that he wished to see Mr. Lincoln, when he was informed by that dignitary that he could not see him, as that was not the day for the President to receive visitors. "Yes, but I must see him," said Mr. Hanks. The usher then asked him for his card. "I have no card—tell him Dennis Hanks wants to see him. Show me the door to his room," said Mr. Hanks, as he walked past the usher. This was done, and as Mr. H. walked into the room he exclaimed: "How are you, Abe?" The President left his desk, and, walking toward him, exclaimed: "Why, Dennis, what in the world brought you here?" and threw his arms around the old man and embraced him. He soon made known his errand, secured what he went for, and started for home the next day.—Paris (Ill.) Gazette.

Christmas.

Christmas! The glad sound awakes a thrill of joy in many a heart. The children clap their tiny hands and laugh aloud in the exuberance of their mirth as bright visions of varied toys and rich confectionery flit before their minds. The sound of merry sports, the gathering of the social band, the banquet—all scenes of joy. Shout on, bright children, for your innocent mirth will rise as incense to Him who was once a little child.

Christmas is coming! is the cry of the young and gay, and with light hearts they prepare for the festival. The holiday robes are chosen, and the presents selected which shall bring joy to so many hearts. Nor is the church forgotten amid the gathering of holiday array, for that, too, must be robed in beauty. The young claim its adornment as their appropriate sphere, and rich garlands of evergreen, mingled with scarlet berries, are twined around its pillars or festooned along its walls. Swiftly speeds their welcome task, and a calm delight fills their hearts as they remember Him who assumed mortality and passed the ordeal of earthly life, that he might be, in all things, like unto mankind. Blessed be this thought; and if, after years shall bring sorrow and bitterness, you may remember that the Holiest has trod that path before you, and that deeper sorrow than mortal ever suffered once rested on his guileless head.

Christmas wakes in the hearts of the aged memories of other years when the pulses of life beat full and free, and their keen sensibilities were awake to the perception of the beautiful. Now the dim eye can no longer enjoy the full realization of beauty; the ear is deaf to the melodies of nature, but they can drink from the fountain of memory, and, while looking upon the mirth of the youthful, recollect that once they, too, were light-hearted and joyous. Blessed to them is the approaching festival, and, as they celebrate the birth of the Redeemer, they remember that he bore the trials of life and the pains of death to insure the resurrection of the believer, while faith points to the hour when they shall inherit the glory prepared for them by His mission of suffering.

An English Fire.

The parade, labor, skill, and paraphernalia required to maintain and manage an English fire are bewildering to a foreigner. There are the grate and the ornamental fender, and rug before the hearth; the steel shovel, tongs, and poker, that are kept for beauty, not for use, and the steel poker, tongs, and shovel that are to be used. Need I say that the foreigner always undertakes to employ the wrong poker, and is detested accordingly? Then there is the handsome coal-box that stands by the fireside, and the ugly coal-scuttle which the maid carries in and out to replenish the former. Matches, waste-paper, bundles of kindling wood ad libitum, and the first issue thereof is smoke. Presently there comes flame, and then, after an hour's manipulation, heat is generated—not much heat, but still enough to make one wish for more. Meanwhile, the fire consumes the coals with a fiendish disregard of their price per sack. By way of revenge, I presume, everybody who enters the room gives the fire a savage poke. But, like Stephano's fish in "The Tempest," it is a most delicate monster. Let but a foreign hand touch the poker, and the fire grows sullen and dies out. Every man thinks he can dress a salad, every man thinks he can poke a fire; these are the least venial of human errors. When the fire dies, either naturally or by some unskillful touch, it strews the whole fender with its ashes. Then one of the maidservants produces a box full of black-lead and brushes, takes away the ashes and sifts them, and, by the dint of much work, polishes the grate again. There is no other institution in England so troublesome, vexatious, unsatisfactory, and ungrateful as an English fire; but the people love it and praise it and shiver around it, as if it were a fire from heaven, like that which lighted the altars of the gods.—Appletons' Journal.

The Last World's Fair.

The total receipts of the Paris Exhibition amount to $2,530,749. This is much less than the receipts of our Centennial Exhibition, but yet it must be regarded as remarkably successful, as may be seen by a comparison of the exact figures of the receipts of the seven great World's Fairs:

1851, London	$2,120,000
1855, Paris	640,000
1862, London	2,042,650
1867, Paris	2,103,675
1873, Vienna	1,032,390
1876, Philadelphia	3,813,750
1878, Paris	2,530,749

Cart Loads of Medicinal Rubbish

are swallowed by invalids, and their physical troubles thus kept alive for years, when that peerless tonic stimulant and corrective, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters would speedily set the disordered and worn-out mechanism of the system in active and healthful operation again. It has been demonstrated over and over again that the requirements of the sick are answered far better by the Bitters than by a majority of the miscalled remedies of the pharmacopœia. The stomach is strengthened, the liver regulated, the bowels put in proper order, the blood enriched and purified, and the nervous system rendered tranquil and vigorous by this inestimable family medicine and safeguard against disease, which is, moreover, a most agreeable and effective appetizer, and a cordial peculiarly adapted to the wants of the aged and infirm, delicate females, and convalescing patients. It is, besides, immensely popular as an antidote to malaria.

CAN you any longer doubt when we bring you such positive testimony as this that Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is a cure for Heart Disease:

Mr. Ingalls—In 1862 I was troubled with a derangement of my heart; was so I could do no work; took various remedies, with but little relief; procured a bottle of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, and one bottle did what other remedies failed to do, removed the trouble; and since 1863 have had no return of the trouble. You are at liberty to use this as you wish.
MRS. W. C. WELLS.

Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, &c.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

WHAT tortures are inflicted by a disordered liver. Pains in the right side and under the right shoulder blade, headache, nausea, indigestion, costiveness, unpleasant taste in the mouth and low spirits are among its indicia. Besides, the saffron tinge it imparts to the skin is the reverse of becoming. But DR. MOTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS speedily dispel the symptoms by remedying the disorder which produces them. Sold by all Druggists.

A WONDERFUL discovery. Freckles, Pimples, Moth, Sallowness, Tan, Black Heads, Blotches, Rough Skin, etc., positively cured by Mrs. Shaw's Moth and Freckle Lotion. By druggists, $1. Particulars free. Address Mrs. Dr. L. K. Shaw, 140 E. 28th St., N. Y. Mrs. Shaw's Liver Pill—best in the world.

AN ARTICLE OF TRUE MERIT.—"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are the most popular article in this country or Europe for Throat Diseases and Coughs, and this popularity is based upon real merit. 25 cts. a box.

IT is impossible to sell the best article of any kind as low as the poorest can be afforded. But the prices of Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are not much more than those of very inferior organs; while the difference in quality, and especially in durability, is very great.

WE confidently refer our readers to the card of Dr. C. R. Sykes, in our issue of three week ago. Dr. Sykes is an old resident of Chicago, a regular graduate, honest, honorable and responsible, and as a physician takes first rank in his chosen specialty of catarrh and its complications.

FOR upward of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

THE NEW YORK SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the Truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper of the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, or for the poor man against the rich man, but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect, or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogues every time. It is for the honest Democrat as against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Republican as against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated it speaks out for the right. That is THE SUN's idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds, and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879 than in 1878, 1877, or any year gone by. THE SUN is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly with the affairs of to-day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest, and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases, and to expound, according to its well-known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an important part of THE SUN's work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN as a political, a literary and a general newspaper more entertaining and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid. The SUNDAY SUN, in addition to the current news, presents a most entertaining and instructive body of literary and miscellaneous matter, in bulk twice as great, and in value not inferior to that of the best monthly magazines of the day, at one tenth of their cost.

The WEEKLY SUN is especially adapted for those who do not take a New York daily paper. The news of the week is fully presented, its market reports are furnished to the latest moment, and its agricultural department, edited with great care and ability, is unsurpassed. The WEEKLY SUN is probably read to-day by more farmers than any other paper published. A choice story, with other carefully-prepared miscellany, appears in each issue. The Weekly protects its readers by barring its advertising columns against frauds and humbugs, and furnishes more good matter for less money than can be obtained from any other source. The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free. Address

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, DEC. 26th, 1878

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

A

Bondholder

Explains Why He is

—A—

Bondholder!

His name is not

Belmont.

His Fortune is Not large.

Last week the COURIER contained the following item which is going the rounds of the western press:

"Child's political primer:
Who owns the United States?
The people.
Who owns the people?
The politicians.
Who owns the politician?
The bondholder.
Who owns the bondholder?
The devil."

Which brought to the surface a BONDHOLDER in our very midst. Said BONDHOLDER became indignant, and with his usual promptness orders the COURIER to be discontinued, as will be seen by the following communication. Bear in mind while reading, that the communication is not from the hand of a common MAN, but a BONDHOLDER. Here it is verbatim:

For the COURIER.

MR. EDITOR:—You will please discontine my paper after Jan. 1, 1879, as the time for which it is paid then expires. My reasons for discontinuing are two-fold. First, I am one of the class your paper characterizes as "belonging to the devil," namely, a bondholder, and of course you do not desire patrons of that class. I came to this country nearly half a century ago a poor boy. By industry and self denial, such as not one in a thousand is willing to practice, I have become a capitalist, that is, I have acquired enough so that now, as old age and infirmity has overtaken me, I can by investing in my country's promises to pay, have something to make comfortable the few years I may yet live, and something to guard the companion of my toils and privations from want and sufferings, should she out live me. In doing this I have become a "bondholder," and as you say, "gone over to the devil." In the second place, your paper on questions of finance, advocates men and measures that in my view are detrimental to the best interests of the country, calculated to array labor against capital, to foster discontent and riot, to divert the attention of the people from the real course of their financial troubles to imaginary ones. The above are my reasons briefly stated.

J. P. WIDNEY.

When the term "bondholder" is used by orators and writers of the present day, it is generally understood to mean the organized gang of government robbers with headquarters in New York and London, who hold the bonds of our government by the million dollars worth, and not the small fish throughout the country, who happen the be possessed of a few "promises to pay" as a legitimate investment of their few thousand dollars. True, a man holding but a single bond, is a bondholder, yet he is not regarded as being of enough importance in the estimation of the "bloated" bondholder to be entitled to recognition, nor to be advised of the secret plottings of the leeches who are daily draining the national treasury.

Our BONDHOLDER says he has "become a capitalist;" does that make him a better man—more entitled to respect of the community than many others who are not "capitalists," but who have dealt honorably with their neighbors, and assisted in building up the town and surrounding country, educated their children and provided things necessary for a pleasant home, thereby winning the affections of their children with a certainty of reward in the days of old age? Let those who know him best answer. He says that our paper, "on questions of finance, advocates men and measures that in my (his) view, are detrimental to the best interests of the country, calculated to array labor against capital, etc. Yes, thank God we do advocate men and measures contrary to the views of money sharks everywhere, we advocate legislation favorable to the poor as well as to the rich, we advocate honesty among the people of all classes. He talks about arraying labor against capital, fostering discontent and riot; imaginary troubles, etc. These are subjects upon which the common people do their own thinking, they need no agitation, and should receive no encouragement, yet the money power of the country is doing more to-day to disturb the quiet of the country than all the newspapers in the land combined; day by day it is becoming more apparent that the capital of this country is being concentrated as fast as possible, and no opportunity is lost by its manipulators to give labor a blow. Wipe out the goverment bonds at the earliest possible moment, then the nations' cancer will be permanently cured, and capitalists will be compelled to invest their money where it may do labor some good.

St. Joe.

—Jingle, jingle, go the bells.

—Log hauling is the order of the day, and the saw mill men are feeling good.

—J. D. Leighty and lady will spend Christmas in Churubusco.

—Henry Jaggars and family will spend the holidays in Metz, Steuben county, Ind.

—The protracted meeting at this place did not pan out very well, the minister failing to put in an appearance at the appointed time. We understand that Brother John officiated at one of the appointments.

—Professor Kimball, of Ft. Wayne, is laboring with the people of Sodom, trying to teach the Sodomites how to sing. For the information of forigners we would say that we have never known any one to be turned to salt that looked on our Sodom.

—Our winter term of school under the management of Miss Josie Thomas is progressing finally, but Josie does not like to have her dry wood burnt by after night meetings.

—Appearances indicate that the people of St. Joe will soon have a new church.

—During the week past, there has been shipped from this station, seven car loads of hogs, three of sheep, one of cattle, and two of wheat. Hogs are worth from $2.00 to $2.25 per hundred, cattle $2.00 to 3.00 per hundred, sheep $3.50 per hundred, wheat 86 @87 per bushel.

—Again we have to record the death of one of our oldest citizens, Washington Testison, after illness of one day, died Saturday morning. The deceased leaves a large family to mourn his loss.

—Daniel Sullyan, a brakeman on the B & O. road met with an accident here on Wednesday last, which has since resulted in death. He was uncuppling cars while in motion, his foot caught in the frog or between two rails, the cars being in motion he was unable to extract his foot. Throwing himself as far out as possible, he saved himself from being crushed to attoms,—two wheels passed over his legs, crushing one to a jelly from the knee to the hip. His wife and brothers were sent for, and on their arrival he was removed to Tiffin, where his sufferings were ended in death.

Newville Items.

—Good sleighing and cold weather.

—The schools are still progressing all right, and we hope that it will continue.

—Mr. Kimbal, of Fort Wayne, has commenced a singing school in Newville.

—Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Ryan are off on a visit to Farmer City, Ill. Will return about the holidays.

—A merry Christmas to the editor, and all the readers of the COURIER, is the wish of your correspondent.

—The mercury is looking down for a small hole to hide in, until the genial rays of old Sol warms it up again.

—Times are still dull, perhaps they will revive a little if the weather stays cold and the sleighing remains good.

—Mr. T. W. Nelson has returned with his family from his trip to Kansas. He did not find things as he expected.

—Mr. Alex. Comparet and family have moved away from Newville, they went to the neighborhood of Metz, in Steuben county.

—As yet we have not heard of any Christmas trees, or anything of that kind going to take place in Newville. Well, considering the state of the finance, perhaps this is best. Give your surplus to the poor and needy.

—This is the first christmas for a number of years that some of our churches have not prepared a christmas-tree for their Sunday school scholars. An occasion of this kind greatly pleases the little ones and should be regularly indulged in every year by the superintendent and teachers of our sabbath schools And then, you know, it greatly enhances the number of pupils just before christmas.

—There was a rooster at the Fort Wayne poultry show that the proprietor had refused $500 for. We had better have a poultry show here and test the value of some of our roosters.

A Happy New Year.

Before our next issue, another year will have dawned; another leaf will have been turned within the volume of life. New Year's Day from time immemorial has been kept as a day of rejoicing. All, hail the new year, as a harbinger of more prosperous times; no matter what our condition may have been in the past, we persuade ourselves that the future is gilded with bright hopes of happiness. Friendly greetings, sunny smiles, and generous wishes "are plentiful as stars." Earnest vows involving a higher and nobler existence are made on earth and carefully registered in heaven. The custom of commemorating the birth of the new year seems to have been in vogue in every age. The ancient Druids were accustomed to cut the sacred mistletoe with a golden knife, in a forest dedicated to the gods, and distribute it as new year's gifts to the people. The past year has been fraught with much good and ill. "Death's shafts" have flown thick. Thousands of happy homes have been desolated by this fell destroyer; grim poverty with remorseless tread has stalked through the land leaving destitution and misery where once was peace and plenty. Yet, what we deem our greatest sorrows often prove but blessings in disguise; and when taking a retrospective view of the past, if we find much to pain and sadden us, we also find an abundance of blessings from the hand of Him who "doeth all things well." Then let us be satisfied.

With this issue we close the first half year of our labors in connection with the COURIER, how well we have succeeded in satisfying the wants of our patrons, is best known to them. Six months ago we came among you an entire stranger, and owing to bad health and a pressure of business duties we have been unable to visit our nighboring towns and country to make the acquaintance of our large list of subscribers. Up to this time we have been laboring under great disadvantages, but have endeavored to render satisfaction in our editorial duties and in the management of the paper and office. In the future we expect to be able to build up a county paper second to none in the state, and with the assistance and encouragement of our friends, hope to establish an office that will be an honor to the town and county. May our hopes be realized, and may the coming year be freighted with peace, prosperity and happiness to all. God grant that when the bells are rung at midnight to celebrate the exit of the old and advent of the new year, that they may "Ring out the old, ring in the new,

Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true."
Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that hear we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Signor Bosco.

Below we give a little anecdote of one of his feats before royalty:

Signor Bosco spent the winter of 1858-9 in Berlin, and was one day summoned to appear at the palace in order to exhibit his performances before the present Emperor (at the time Prince Regent,) and the Court. Among other apparatus he had a terrestrial globe upon which Prussia was made to appear very small. Signor Bosco advanced to the Prince, who was sitting on an arm chair in the front row, and asked him to take the globe in his hand. The Prince did so, when to his astonishment the formerly little Prussia began to assume much larger dimensions. "Your Royal Highness preceives," says Bosco, "how Prussia will become aggrandized under your hands." The trick was loudly applauded at the time, but little did the spectators imagine that what was intended as a courtly jest was destined to become a political earnest within seven years from that time.

—The concert given at the German Reform church last Saturday evening under the direction of Mr. Wm. Groscop, was without an exception, a grand success The singing generally was good, and the rendition of "The old clock," by Minnie Hebel and Emma Ruhl was well received, and the little ladies deserved the repeated applause. "Courting in the rain," by Chas. Groscop, was also appreciated, and one could have heard a house fall down during its execution—yes you could! In short we would say the concert throughout was creditable to both scholars and teacher.

NOT SURPRISED.

When we consider the little attention paid to the laws of health, we are not surprised at the indifference manifested in relation to purity of daily food. If all articles were like Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, this indifference might answer; their perfect wholesomeness would insure us against all evil consequences.

An A 1 Time.

Last Saturday evening we accepted an invitation to share in the pleasures of a sleighing party in company with Mr. and Mrs. Silvers, Mr. and Mrs. Houston, Mr. and Mrs. Shilling, Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer, Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Spooner, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, Mr. and Mrs. Scott, Mr. and Mrs Rakestraw, Mr. and Mrs. Houghton, Mrs. McIntyre, Mrs. Ralston Mrs. Barclay, Mrs. Thomas, (of Ohio) and our betterhalf. At the appointed hour, conductor Silvers in charge of the "Long John," propelled by four chargers, with Mr. Houghton at the end of the strings, began to gather up the load of humanity. It was not long until we were speeding away over the "beautiful," amidst the sounds of the jingling bells, to arrive in due time at the residence of Mr. Christ. Buss, about five miles from town. No sooner had we arrived than we were met at the door and welcomed to warm and comfortable quarters. It was soon observed that Mr. Mitch Houston was becoming uneasy, and upon inquiry it was ascertained that supper was about to be called and Mitch was anxious to enter the dining room among the first for fear that there would not be room for his feet, he was fortunate enough to secure a seat at the first table which he was careful to retain for the second, and the last seen of him he was still eating. The occasion was much enjoyed by all, and will be remembered as one of the pleasantest of the year. Mr. and Mrs. Buss and Mr. and Mrs. Silvers deserve thanks for their hospitality, and bountiful supply of that which sustains life.

The man who has the entire management of a country newspaper on his hands is the most over worked individual in the community in which he resides. Day after day, week in and week out, his labors never cease. He has no time to devote to systematic reading, but he is compelled to gather the news at a single glance at his exchanges, and what information other men require hours of reading to gain, from the very force of circumstances the editor is compelled to glean at a hurried glance of a few moments. Is it any wonder, then, that he is sometimes mistaken as to facts, and that his reasoning therefrom is erroneous? Again, some person, in the privacy of his own room, will write a communication for the newspaper, of a column in length, and will devote to it three or four hours of time, and will then imagine that it would be nothing but fun to do an editor's literary work, but let him have every week for years nine or ten columns of such matter to prepare no matter how much his attention may be divided by business cares and private affairs, and at the same time knows that at least a thousand self-appointed critics are ready to pounce upon his production, and unsparingly pick it to pieces, and they would not view an editor's work so lightly, and so uncharitably pass judgment upon the same. The editor is compelled to gather, frequently under difficult and embarrassing circumstances, the local news of town and county, he has to glance over all his exchanges, picking out at a single glance such articles as he thinks will re pay a perusal; he has to write editorials and read proof amid all the interruptions that take place every few moments in a printing office; he has his mind often overtaxed in the business management of the office, and every week nine or ten columns of original matter must be written, whether he feels like writing or not. When this is all done, he knows that his work is not over, but that every week in the whole fifty-two of the year, it must be repeated. Those who think it is nothing but fun and an easy matter to run a newspaper, should be compelled to try it a week or two. Despite all this, many men increase the cares of the weary editor by neglecting to pay promptly what is justly his due.—Albion New Era.

—Someone struck a hog belonging to Jno. Gross, with a sharp instrument which caused its death. Jno. feels very indignant over the matter.

—There is a rumor that one of our painters and a girl from the rural districts will soon be o-n-e. This is very acceptable marriageble weather indeed.

—The two sun-dogs visible on each side of old Sol, on Tuesday morning are reported, by the old inhabitant: too immense. In fact they were dog-gone big.

—A sad-eyed youth hailing from Waterloo took in a little too much of "the terrible distroyer" Saturday night, and the consequence is he is out just one hat.

—There was no fun of any consequence on christmas. Let us have a lively time on the opening of the new year, if its nothing more than a fantastic parade."

—There was a temperance advocate in town this week whose abdomen would touch a figure four on a quail trap at a distance of twenty paces or less. His stay was brief.

—There are now about 300 cases on the docket. At the beginning of this term there were only three state cases. The next term will be held in February next with a large number added to the above figure.

—The hack team that carries the mail and passengers to the Junction, drove by Frank Culbertson, ran a way Tuesday. They soon got loose from the sled and did not do much damage.

THE FINEST AND MOST NATURAL.

The finest, purest, and best flavors for cakes, puddings, pastry, &c., are Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts. In this age of adulteration, it is gratifying to find one to stick by the old path of honesty, and consumers owe it to themselves to patronize such efforts.

—Pedestrains find the middle of the road a great deal better walking than the side walks. Some one surprise their front walks by cleaning them off once—only once.

—Mr. Gordon, our photographer entertained the little folks at the Presbyterian church Tuesday evening with some panoramic views. They were highly appreciated by the juveniles.

—The evening frieght on the Eel River Road was delayed here all night last Monday. One of the valves in the engine bursted which caused the delay. It was almost impossible for them to raise steam enough to side track.

—Mr. Mulcay, of the Saginaw railroad, left here Tuesday evening for a a new field of labor. He has accepted a position on the Cin. W. & M. R. R. at Elkhart, Ind. Mr. Copper will fill his place at the Saginaw depot for the present.

—Dave Culver's team got tired standing in the cold Monday evening. They broke their hitching straps and "lit out" for home in a lively manner. When crossing the Eel River R. R. they came very near coming in contact with with an iron horse that was backing up. They just crossed in time.

—There is a horse running at large on our streets that is nothing but skin and bones. It is a shame to turn out a dumb brute such weather as this to starve. It would be a great relief to the animal if some "christian" would shoot it—in the mouth with a bale of hay.

—Remember that the musical convention now in progess here under the direction of Prof. S. W. Straub, of Chicago will close next Saturday night with a concert. Many singers are already in form abroad. A programme of strictly first class music will be rendered. Admission 25c. Come.

—Mrs. A. J. Little with her usual energy, gave the COURIER boys. and her family relatives a turkey dinner yesterday. When the plates of each was upturned the individual found a tasty necktie, which will no doubt be exhibited around a "bed-sheet" collar at the Neoteric hop to-night. They all return their sincere thanks and greatly appreciate her kindness.

—The following officers were installed at the new hall of Auburn Lodge No— F. & A. M., last Saturday evening:

Herschel's Weather Table,

FOR FORETELLING THE WEATHER, THROUGHOUT ALL THE LUNATIONS OF EACH YEAR, FOREVER.

This table and the accompanying remarks are the result of many years' actual observation, the whole being constructed on a due consideration of the attraction of the sun and moon in their several positions respecting the earth, and will, by simple inspection, show the observer what kind of weather will most probably follow the entrance of the moon into any of its quarters, and that so near the truth as to be seldom or never found to fail.

If New Moon, First Quarter, Full Moon or Last Quarter happens between	In Summer.	In Winter.
Midnight & 2 a.m.	Fair	Frost unless wind southwest.
2 and 4 a.m.	Cold and showers.	Snow and stormy.
4 and 6 a.m.	Rain	Rain.
6 and 8 a.m.	Wind and rain	Stormy.
8 and 10 a.m.	Changeable	Cold rain if wind west, snow if east.
10 and 12 a.m.	Frequent showers.	Cold & high wind.
12 and 2 p.m.	Very rainy	Snow or rain.
2 and 4 p.m.	Changeable	Fair and mild.
4 and 6 p.m.	Fair	Fair.
6 and 8 p.m.	Fair if wind northwest.	Fair, frosty if wind north or n. e.
8 and 10 p.m.	Rainy if south or southwest.	Rain or snow if south or s. w.
10 and midnight	Fair	Fair and frosty.

OBSERVATIONS.—1. The nearer the time of the moon's change, first quarter, full and last quarter are to midnight the fairer will be the weather during the next seven days.

2. The space for this calculation occupies from 10 at night till 2 next morning.

3. The nearer to midday or noon the phases of the moon happens, the more foul or wet weather may be expected during the next seven days.

4. The space for this calculation occupies from 10 in the forenoon till 2 in the afternoon. These observations refer principally to the summer, though they affect spring and autumn nearly in the same ratio.

5. The moon's change, first quarter, full and last quarter, happening during six of the afternoon hours, from 4 to 10, may be followed by fair weather; but this is mostly dependent on the wind, as is noted in the table.

6. Though the weather, from a variety of irregular causes, is more uncertain in the latter part of autumn, the whole of winter and the beginning of spring, yet, in the main, the above observations will apply to those periods also.

7. To prognosticate correctly, especially in those cases where the wind is concerned, the observer should be within sight of a good vane, where the four cardinal points of the heavens are correctly placed.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

SARATOGA, N. Y., had something of a financial flurry last week. Two banks—the Commercial and First National—closed their doors....Dr. Bradford, a New York physician of hitherto fair repute, has been sentenced to fourteen years and six months imprisonment in the penitentiary for malpractice.

TUESDAY, the 17th of December, marked an important event in the financial annals of the United States. On that day, for the first time in sixteen years, gold sold in New York city on a par with greenbacks....At Philadelphia, ex-President Morton, of the Market Street Railway Company, and Samuel B. Huhn, who pleaded guilty to fraudulently over-issuing the stock of the company, were sentenced each to ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

JUDGE HILTON, of New York, the manager of the Stewart business, has sent to three of the principal Jewish charitable institutions of that city a letter announcing money donations by Mrs. A. T. Stewart, and the Jewish people are considerably exercised in consequence. Wide difference of opinion prevails among the Jewish people as to what is best to be done in the matter on account of the ill-feeling engendered by Hilton's action in excluding Joseph Seligman and his family from the Grand Union Hotel, at Saratoga, in the summer of 1877. Some prominent members of the Jewish church are strongly opposed to allowing the donations to be received, while others argue that the gifts come from Mrs. Stewart; that she should not be held responsible for Hilton's acts, and that the Jews have no quarrel with that lady....An English woman—Mrs. Adah Anderson—has commenced a remarkable pedestrian undertaking in New York, namely, to walk 2,700 quarter miles in as many quarter hours.

IN 1862, a mob of Molly Maguires, led by one Jack Kehoe, cruelly murdered F. W. S. Langdon, a mine boss, in Carbon county, Pa. After a lapse of sixteen years, justice has at last overtaken the chief participant in the crime. Kehoe paid the penalty of his crime on the gallows, at Pottsville, Pa., on the 18th of December.

A SHOCKING calamity is reported from Cohoes, N. Y. The house of Patrick Rourke was destroyed by fire, and Rourke and his five children perished in the flames....An official statement shows that the savings banks of Massachusetts have lost about 80,000 depositors during the past year, and with them $27,500,000 of deposits.

THE WEST.

A HEARTRENDING accident recently occurred near Sabula, Iowa, on the Mississippi river. The river being partly frozen over, a man named Lane took his wife and two children out for a little diversion on the ice. Placing them on a hand-sleigh, he shoved the party ahead of him by means of handles attached thereto. All at once the whole party broke through the ice and were drowned. Their bodies had not been recovered at last accounts. [illegible] son, a widow lady, and her three children, were recently found murdered in Kearney county, Neb. The bodies were found concealed in a hay-stack. No clew to the murderer....The Chicago Tribune prints extensive telegraphic reports regarding the winter-wheat outlook throughout the Northwest, which are generally of an encouraging character. In many localities the average has been reduced by reason of the unusual drought which prevailed during the fall months, while in others the acreage has been largely increased, and prospects are good for an abundant crop.

A FIRE on Fourth street, St. Louis, last week, destroyed $250,000, the principal sufferers being Jaccard & Co., jewelers, and B. C. Powell, carpet dealer....Advices from Oregon report another Indian war as imminent.

THE German Savings Institution, one of the oldest and heretofore considered one of the soundest banks in Cincinnati, has gone to the wall.

MENTION has heretofore been made in this column of the burning at the stake, in Nebraska, of two alleged cattle-thieves by indignant herders who had suffered from their depredations. It now turns out that the men were innocent, while the mob that put them to such a horrible death was composed of thieves and desperadoes. There is much feeling over the affair in the region where it occurred, and the Governor of Nebraska has offered a reward of $10,000 for the arrest of the men who committed the diabolical crime.

THE SOUTH.

AT Meridian, Tex., a few nights since, while most of the citizens were at church, fifty masked men compelled the jailer to open the prison, entered the cell of Mart and Tom Harrels and riddled them with buckshot, making another prisoner hold the light.

WASHINGTON.

AT Mount Carrie, Fla., four negroes attempted to burn a mill, and beat the Superintendent's wife, and compelled her to give up $400. The negroes were arrested, but a band of masked men overpowered the guard, took the prisoners in front of the Baptist Church, shot two dead, and mortally wounded a third. The fourth escaped....Pryor Jones and Smith Jackson, colored, were executed last week at Bastrop, Texas, in the presence of 3,000 persons principally negroes.

THE Treasury Department, to stimulate sales, contemplates fixing commissions on subscriptions for the 4 per cent. consols, up to June 30, 1879, as follows: On subscriptions of $100,000 to $1,000,000, ⅛ of 1 per cent. From $1,000,000 to $10,000,000 ¼ of 1 per cent. On amounts in excess of $10,000,000, an additional commission of 1-10 of 1 per cent....It is said that the Inter-State Commerce bill for regulating railway tariffs will be for the benefit of railroads and to the injury of producers, as it enables the roads to make their own rates so long as they are uniform and not discriminating.... There is a proposition before the Ways and Means Committee to place a coupon stamp upon every cigar manufactured or imported, and a number of members of the House have indorsed the idea as a cheap and certain manner of collecting the tax.

SECRETARY SHERMAN sent to the Senate last week an answer to Senator Beck's resolution calling upon him for information. The Secretary says that "under existing law either gold coin or the standard silver dollars may be used in the payment of interest on the public debt. The law does not direct which shall be paid, but leaves it to the discretion of the department, to be exercised upon considerations of public policy."....A delegation of tobacco manufacturers is in Washington, urging the reduction of the tax on the weed to 16 cents per pound....Congress has passed a bill for the erection of a new bridge across the Potomac at Georgetown.

A CALL has been issued by the Secretary of the Treasury for $10,906,100, being the rest and residue of the bonds outstanding under the act of March 3, 1865, consols of 1865, not included in previous calls.

GENERAL.

MINISTER KASSON writes from Austria that he thinks the United States can make a treaty with Persia which will be to the interest of our cotton manufacturers....Gen. Grant's house in Washington, which cost $25,000, has been sold by his agent for $18,000 to an Ohio lady, who now occupies it. The house has been long vacant.

THE Manhattan Savings Bank robbers asked $500,000 for the return of the $1,500,000 in United States bonds which were stolen. Congress has now ordered that duplicates of such bonds be issued to the bank.

THE most foolhardy attempt at ocean navigation by means of small boats ever made is in contemplation by Herbert Burrill, of Boston. Burrill will attempt the unparalleled feat of crossing the Atlantic, doubling the Cape of Good Hope, and then crossing the Indian ocean to Australia, in a craft nineteen feet in length and two and one-half feet deep. She is to have an iron keel weighing one hundred and fifty pounds, and is to be sloop-rigged.

BAYARD TAYLOR, American Minister to Germany, died at Berlin on the 19th of December. His disease was dropsy. Mr. Taylor was born in 1825, and was, consequently, 53 years of age. The deceased was a great favorite at the German capital, although accredited only a short time. The Emperor William, the Crown Prince, and Prince Bismarck greatly esteemed Mr. Taylor, whose appointment as Minister to the German Court was extremely welcome to them. Mrs. Taylor and her daughter devotedly nursed the deceased during his long illness, and their bereavement is indescribably sad.

POLITICAL.

SENATOR THURMAN authorizes the statement that he will under no circumstances stand as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio next fall.

FOREIGN.

AFTER a long debate, the motion in the British Parliament for a vote to censure on the Afghanistan policy of the Government was defeated by a majority of 101, being nine or ten less than had been counted upon by Beaconsfield's supporters.

A HITHERTO harmless lunatic, who bears the appropriate name of Madden, has been arrested in London charged with threatening the life of Queen Victoria.

PRINCESS ALICE of Hesse, second daughter of Queen Victoria, died of diphtheria at Darmstadt, Germany, on the 14th inst. She was born in 1843, and married in 1862.

IT is reported that Schouvaloff will now endeavor to bring into effect the constitution which he was instructed by the Czar to prepare....From Constantinople it is reported that Turkey will at once settle the Grecian question and conclude a definitive treaty with Russia.

ALL the capital and reserve funds of the West of England and South Wales District Bank are lost, and there is a deficiency of $1,500,000 which the stockholders must repair.... In the British House of Commons, a few days ago, Sir George Campbell criticised Turkey's course in continuing to import large quantities of arms from America while asserting its inability to provide for the Rhodope fugitives.... William Anderson, an Englishman and Superintendent of the Eastern Telegraph Company in Crete, was murdered lately in Candia.

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch says the Russian Mission at Cabul has been formally and officially withdrawn.

THE Prussian Chamber of Deputies has adopted a resolution asking the Government to transfer the control of the Prussian railways to the empire as speedily as possible....News comes across the waters of another marine horror. The steamer Byzantine, bound from Marseilles, France, to Constantinople, collided with another vessel and sunk. The loss of life is placed at 150.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, Dec. 13.—SENATE.—The bills introduced and referred included the following: By Mr. Plumb, to provide for the temporary increase of the army in emergency; by Mr. Conkling (by request), to amend the laws relating to pensions. This bill concerns the fees of attorneys. It is claimed that the present regulations prevent those entitled to pensions securing the services of respectable attorneys....Mr. Morrill, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably on the Senate bill to authorize duplicates of the registered bonds stolen from the Manhattan Savings Institution in New York city. Passed....Mr. Gordon introduced a bill to secure a more efficient collection of the revenue from cigars. Referred....At the expiration of the morning hour, consideration was resumed of the bill in regard to the count of the electoral vote, and Mr. Bayard spoke in its favor. Mr. Eaton opposed the bill. Mr. Merrimon believed the passage of this bill would be satisfactory to the people. Mr. Garland opposed the bill upon constitutional grounds. Mr. Hill spoke in opposition to the bill. Mr. Thurman said he would not discuss the bill at this late hour. He would content himself by voting against it. After some further discussion between Messrs. Hoar, Cockrell and Edmunds' the bill was read a third time and passed—yeas, 25; nays, 20. ....Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.—The resolution looking to an investigation of the official conduct of J. J. Davenport, the United States Supervisor of Elections at New York, was adopted without objection, after being amended so as to make the investigation extend to his conduct on the days of registration....Mr. Shelley, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported a bill to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railroad from the tide-water to St. Louis and Chicago. Recommitted.

SATURDAY, Dec. 14.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Sparks, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Indian Appropriation bill, which was made the special order for Wednesday....Mr. Durham, from the same committee, reported the Military Academy Appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, which, with trivial exceptions, were non-concurred in....Mr. Philips submitted a resolution reciting the late Indian raids in Kansas and Nebraska, and the capture of marauders, and calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to why he had not surrendered the guilty and responsible parties of such Indian bands to the authorities of Kansas and Nebraska. Adopted....The Senate bill authorizing the issue of duplicates of registered bonds stolen from the Manhattan Savings Institution, in New York, was passed....The Senate bill to regulate the Presidential elections was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the committee on the subject.

MONDAY, Dec. 16.—SENATE.—Mr. Blaine called up his resolution directing an investigation into the recent elections in the South. A motion to table the resolution was rejected. Mr. Thurman's amendment extending the investigation into the alleged forced assessments of administration office-holders for election-campaign purposes, was adopted. Mr. Conkling announced that it would be impossible for the Judiciary Committee to conduct the investigation, and it was provided in the resolution that the matter should be placed in the hands of a committee of nine Senators. An amendment offered by Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, to conduct the investigations with open doors led to a protracted debate, and the resolution went over.... Mr. Beck offered a resolution commanding Secretary Sherman to appear in person before the Senate and state what reason he has, if any, for failing to inform the Senate how much silver coin has been received for customs duties, and how much has been applied to paying the interest on the public debt. Mr. Morrill objected, and the resolution went over under the rule....Several bills were introduced and referred....A motion to take up the Texas Pacific Railroad bill was defeated by six majority.

HOUSE.—The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Hobart (Ala.), a bill requiring United States Marshals to carry prisoners arrested by them to the nearest court; by Mr. Young (Tenn.), a bill for the relief of settlers on Hot Springs reservation, in Arkansas; also, bill to extend time for putting in claims for bounty, etc.; by Mr. Brentano (Ill.), a bill to amend the act for the coinage of the standard silver dollar; by Mr. Wood (N. Y.), to make United States notes receivable for duties on imports; also, bill respecting protests on appeals from seizures by Collectors of Customs; by Mr. Cox (N. Y.), for the removal of political disabilities; by Mr. Phelps (N. J.), providing for the circulation of national-bank notes of less than $5 after resumption, the same as before; by Mr. Lathrop (Ill.), to place the silver coinage of the United States upon the basis of its intrinsic value—it proposes to make the silver dollar of 412½ grains and minor coins relatively of like weight and fineness, provides for free coinage without limit, and makes all silver coin legal tender for any amount, when not otherwise specified in the contract; by Mr. Fort (Ill.), proposing a penalty of $1,000 to be imposed upon any national-banking association for each offense in refusing to receive or pay out standard silver dollars the same as other lawful money....A resolution was introduced by Mr. Kelley (Pa.), directing Secretary Sherman to furnish a statement of the amount of Government gold deposited with the banks at the beginning of each month during Mr. Hayes' administration.

TUESDAY, Dec. 17.—SENATE.—The Blaine resolution came up, and Mr. Merrimon read a speech in reply to Mr. Blaine. He was followed by Mr. Wallace, who vehemently opposed the resolution. Messrs. Whyte and Morgan also spoke in opposition, after which the resolution was put to a vote and adopted by yeas, 56; nays, 6. Those voting in the negative were Messrs. Eaton, Hill, McCreery, Morgan, Wallace and Whyte....The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was passed as amended by the Senate committee....The Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and Messrs. Allison, Blaine and Davis (W. Va.) were appointed a committee of conference.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the entire day, in committee of the whole, to the consideration of the bill appropriating $450,000 to meet the deficiency in the appropriation for the postal-mail service, and prohibiting any increase in the postal-car service during the present year, which was finally passed, after a protracted discussion.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 18.—SENATE.—Mr. Paddock called up the bill recently reported from the Committee on Military Affairs to amend the posse-comitatus clause of the Army Appropriation bill for the present fiscal year, so as to provide that it shall not be construed to apply to any part of the army or portion thereof engaged in the protection of life and property in the States and Territories subject to Indian insurrection. Amendments were agreed to so as to name the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Oregon, Nevada and the Territories subject to Indian insurrection, etc. The bill then passed....The House joint resolution appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses incurred by committees of the Senate and House in investigating into the cause and prevention of epidemic diseases, was passed.... The House bill giving twenty condemned cannon to the Custer monument at West Point was passed....The Pension Appropriation bill was passed without material amendment.

HOUSE.—The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Ryan—Giving jurisdiction to the District and Circuit Courts of Kansas over the Indian Territory; by Mr. Corlett—For the improvement of the Yellowstone National Park....The bill appropriating $50,000 for the expenses of the Committee on Yellow-Fever Epidemics was passed....The Senate amendments to the Fortification and Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bills were non-concurred in....Mr. Boone introduced a joint resolution extending until the 18th of February the time within which the Joint Committee on the Transfer of the Indian Bureau may report. Passed.

THURSDAY, Dec. 19.—SENATE.—A communication was received from Davenport, the United States Supervisor of Elections at New York, suggesting amendments in the Naturalization laws. Referred....Mr. Christiancy reported a substitute for the bill of Mr. Beck to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes. The substitute provides for the repeal of section 820, providing a test oath for jurors.... Mr. McDonald introduced a bill to reimburse several States for interest on the war loan and for other purposes. Referred....The House bill appropriating $450,000 for the transportation of mails by railroads was passed....The Vice President announced as the select committee to inquire whether the constitutional rights of citizens were violated in the recent elections, in accordance with the resolution of Mr. Blaine, Messrs. Teller, Cameron (Wis.), Kirkwood, Bayard, Wallace, Bailey, and Garland. ....Mr. Burnside addressed the Senate explanatory of the new bill for the reorganization of the army.

HOUSE.—J. G. Young took the seat made vacant by the death of J. J. Leonard, of the Fifth Louisiana district....Mr. Cabell asked leave to offer a resolution reciting the charges made against Alexander Rives, the Judge of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, in regard to his action in issuing writs of habeas corpus for bringing before him two prisoners, now in custody under a charge of murder, and directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the facts connected with his action, and what action should be taken in relation thereto. Messrs. White and Hale objected.... The House went into committee of the whole on the Indian Appropriation bill, which was finally passed.

The Oldest Printer.

"Fifty-seven years at the case," said the foreman of the World composing-room to the reporter, as he pointed out an old gray-bearded man picking up type in the corner of the room. The old man stood where the sunlight fell full upon him, and he was chewing tobacco under his green shade and clicking type in his stick unconcernedly. "He never stops chewing. He comes down here at 6 in the morning and works till 6 in the evening. He never eats a mouthful nor takes a drink; he lives on tobacco."

"Uncle Bob," said the reporter, as he approached the old type-setter and touched him on the shoulder, "how old are you?"

The old gentleman looked up kindly into the reporter's eyes, and answered, "I was 75 day before yesterday."

His name is Robert Tappan, but everybody calls him Uncle Bob. "I was born in Kingston, Ulster county, in 1803. I entered the office of my uncle—the Ulster Plebeian—in 1821. I worked on the same press that Jesse Buell used. I came to New York in 1824, on the James Kent, and we took Lafayette on board at West Point and brought him to New York with us. When I came to New York I went into Maj. Noah's office, the Enquirer, then on the Courier and Enquirer, where I worked steadily for twenty-one years. Mr. Webb presented me with a magnificent Bible, and I've kept it twenty-four years."

On the day following the above Uncle Bob came down to the office with the Bible in a basket. "Here," he said, as he opened the book and pointed to the fly-leaf, "read this."

> Presented to Robert Tappan, on Xmas, 1854, as a very slight testimony of respect and regard for his character and appreciation of his valuable and faithful services in the office of the Courier and Enquirer from 1832 to the present time, by his friend,

The old man then whipped out his genealogical record, written with blue ink on a narrow slip of paper. It went so far back that it was perplexing to dive for. He skipped a few generations as he pointed about an inch from the top of the slip and said, "I've got a pair of sleeve-buttons belonging to Christopher Kiersted, who was the father of my grandfather Luke. Luke was a surgeon in the Revolution with Washington, at Newburg."

And then, as he traveled by a pan-handle route over the blue ink, he said, "A grand-nephew of Gov. George Clinton married my grandfather's sister. I was married on Dec. 15, 1831, to Maria C. Low, of Flatbush, whose grandfather was Col. Bauman, of the artillery regiment that placed the flagstaff on the Battery on the day the British evacuated New York. He was afterward appointed first Postmaster of New York."

Uncle Bob lives in Brooklyn with one of his married sons. He is fond of life and enjoyment, and on Hallow-eve played "blind-man's buff" and "button, button" as lively as any of the family. He has been at work on the World ever since he left the Courier and Enquirer, which is now nearly fifteen years.

"You have read many handwritings in your time, haven't you, Uncle Bob?"

"Yes, indeed; but old Bennett's was the worst I ever tackled," he answered. And once more the click of his type sounded in the corner.—New York World.

Jealous of a Corpse.

A scene of a very disagreeable nature is said to have occurred recently at a funeral in this city. It seems that a young married lady who died had, previous to her marriage, received the attentions of a gentleman who afterward married another lady. At the funeral of the former lady the wife of the gentleman, who is practicing his profession in this city, repaired to the house where the last sad rites were being performed, and, when the minister of the gospel had finished his eulogy of the deceased, she approached the coffin and began to address the assembled friends and relatives in an excited manner. From what could be gathered from her excited utterances, it would seem that she was jealous of the deceased, and she announced that, should her husband approach the coffin even so much as to look at the corpse, she would tear out his eyes. The woman became excited and violent in her demonstrations, and considerable confusion resulted among the astonished persons present. She was finally ejected from the room, and, for fear that another scene should occur, a gentleman was dispatched to the pavement outside, where her husband was, and requested him not to enter the house. This unpleasant incident has occasioned a great deal of gossip since its occurrence, especially as all parties occupy high social positions.—Pittsburgh Leader.

THE crew of a shipwrecked vessel were lately killed and eaten by the blacks on the coast of Queensland, Australia. The bodies of two of the men were found in an oven on the mainland opposite the King's reef, on which the vessel struck. The features of the men were unrecognizable, the skulls being smashed in and parts of the flesh being removed; but traces of paper, clothing, etc., in the neighborhood of the camp left no doubt as to their identity.

A CONNECTICUT wife wants a divorce because her husband bound her with a rope, poured kerosene oil over her, and threatened to burn her up. He replies that he was only enforcing proper obedience.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Letter from Our Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14, 1878.

Only two weeks of the session gone, and five appropriation bills passed by both houses, shows that our national law-makers have their working harness on. If they keep on at this business pace, the real work of the session will have been disposed of long before the ides of March roll around.

A feature of the past week's proceedings in the House is the large number of bills introduced relating to our silver coins. Mr. Felton, of Georgia, introduced a bill to compel national banks to receive the standard silver dollar as equivalent in value to gold coin. Mr. Hewitt, of New York, wants to provide for the free coinage of gold coin, and a standard silver dollar of the same unit of value, the coins to be interchangeable at the United States treasuries. Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, proposes to compel national banks to receive legal-tender coins on deposit at par, and to compel the United States Treasurer to exchange Government notes for Government coins. The House refused to suspend the rules and pass a bill prohibiting the further coinage of the trade dollar—154 yeas to 91 nays, not two-thirds. It also—150 yeas to 81 nays—refused to pass, under a suspension of the rules, the resolution of Mr. Fort declaring that the legal-tender quality of the silver dollar of 412½ grains shall be maintained.

Among the bills introduced in the House this week, is one reducing the number of Representatives in Congress from South Carolina from five to two, representing the white inhabitants, and leaving the colored voters without representation. The measure is a Republican one, and the reason given for it is that the colored voters are not allowed the free exercise of the right of suffrage, and that, in proportion to the number of white voters, the State has an undue representation in Congress.

The joint commission appointed at the last session to inquire into the propriety of transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department has finished taking testimony, but will probably not make their report to Congress until after the holiday recess. It is pretty well understood that a majority of the commission is favorable to the proposed change, and that they will so recommend in their report. It is generally believed, however, that whatever this report may be, or whatever may be the action of Congress in regard to it, the President, being opposed to the transfer, will veto any bill that passes both branches of Congress directing the transfer to be made. If Congress, therefore, passes a bill it will not become a law unless it is passed over the President's disapproval by a two-thirds vote of both the Senate and House.

Reports have time and again gone out from the capital, within the last month, that Atty. Gen. Devens was on the eve of retiring from the Cabinet. Such reports are without any foundation. The public may rest assured, unless something unforeseen turns up, that there will be no change in the Cabinet for months to come. This statement is made on the very best authority.

There is an immense amount of unfinished business before the present Congress. The calendar of the daily order of business in the House shows the amount of legislation pending. Of business undisposed of at the end of the last session there are 7 reports of committees, 5 House bills and resolutions with amendments of the Senate, 116 bills from the Senate on their first and second reading, 4 concurrent resolutions, 1 motion passed with a motion to reconsider pending, 91 bills in committee of the whole house on the state of the Union, and 225 bills on the private calendar. There are also a large number of committee reports to be presented. Of the pending Senate bills there may be mentioned: Extending the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad; authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of Union soldiers who have been interred in private village or city cemeteries; to provide for the appointment of an additional Circuit Judge in the Second and Seventh judicial circuits; to aid in the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at Fort Snelling; to grant additional homestead rights to settlers within railway limits; in relation to the Kansas Pacific railway, and Senator Edmunds' Electoral bill.

The joint commission appointed at the last session of Congress to mature plans for the reorganization of the army made their report this week, in the shape of a carefully-drawn bill. The following is a brief abstract of its salient features: The number of General officers is reduced to six, the ranks of General and Lieutenant General ceasing with the present incumbents, consisting of two Major Generals and four Brigadier Generals. There are now three Major Generals and six Brigadiers. The Adjutant General's Department and the Department of Inspection are consolidated, with the reduction of six officers in the two departments. Reductions of the number of officers are made in the other staff departments also. The number of Chaplains is reduced by eight. In the future there are to be no staff officers below the rank of Major. The cavalry regiments are reduced from ten to eight, the infantry from twenty-five to sixteen, making a reduction of nine regiments. The artillery regiments remain unchanged. In all, 136 regimental officers are to be mustered out. The regimental organization is to consist of four battalions instead of ten companies, as now, of which battalions three are to be officered and two manned. Each battalion is to consist of four companies. The fourth battalion is to be neither officered nor manned, and will be raised only as authorized by Congress. For the present the cavalry regiments will contain three battalions fully manned. In the artillery only two will be. An infantry regiment will consist of eight companies, and with the army at 25,000 men a regiment will be 730 strong. All bands and details of bands are abolished, as is all extra-duty pay. Post traderships are also prohibited, and the Commissary Department is required to supply all the wants of the soldiers. The manufacture of arms by the Ordnance Bureau is positively prohibited, and they are required to purchase in open market. This will practically stop the manufacture of arms at the arsenals. No change is made in the pay of officers, and a slight increase is made in that of non-commissioned officers. The retired list is opened, instead of being limited by law, as is now the case, to 400 officers. All General officers are to be retired at 65, and officers of a lower grade at 62.

The officers mustered out are to receive a year's pay for every five years' service, where their record is good. Where it is doubtful they will receive one year's pay at the discretion of the President.

Brutality in Colleges.

Neal Dow, in a recent letter to a New York paper, tells the story of a weak, puny lad who, while a Freshman at college, was dragged from his bed on a winter's night, held under the pump until he was insensible, and then left on the snow to freeze to death, while the boys who had been torturing him went quietly home.

The boy revived, however, in time to save his life. He had pluck and common-sense. Knowing that it would be useless to appeal to the college authorities for justice, he had the ruffians arrested, brought before the Criminal Court, and punished to the full extent of the law.

Mr. Dow suggests that this is the only way to put an end to the practice of "hazing," which is, in fact, nothing but the brute attacks of reckless boys upon lads younger and weaker than themselves.

There is no reason why the sons of cultured people in colleges should be permitted to commit outrages for which a poorer ruffian would be sent to jail. College authorities are often disposed to shirk the responsibility, as in the recent case at Princeton. This timidity is probably due in weak colleges to the fear of driving students away, and so losing a part of the revenue.

In the great Polytechdic school at Bethlehem, Pa.—where the tuition is free—a case of hazing occurred last winter, and the leaders were promptly expelled, while their assistants were suspended for a year. This sentence seemed hard, as two of the latter came from Russia; but it was inexorably carried out. There will be no more hazing in that college.

On the other hand, here is a case which occurred in a college in Connecticut about a year ago. Some young men of the higher classes invited a sickly boy—a Freshman—to supper. Very much flattered, he accepted the invitation. After supper, it being near midnight, they proposed, as a proof of his courage, that he should go alone to the graveyard and climb up on the pedestal of a monument, on top of which stood a marble figure of Peace.

The boy, being a plucky little fellow, went and climbed on the pedestal, when the figure waved its white arms and uttered a frightful shriek. He staggered, fell, struck his head on a stone, and was taken up insensible, to die the next day. The truth of the occurrence was carefully concealed from his parents and the legal authorities.

Murder and Lynch Law.

Grant county, Ky., has officers who are too cowardly, or too corrupt to enforce the laws; therefore Frank Turner, although he had killed four men, was still at liberty. Nobody dared to quarrel with him, and, in order to get an antagonist, he sought out Peter Judd, who had recently fought with the desperado's brother. Turner called Judd out of his house and demanded an apology. Judd instantly promised to apologize. Turner was disappointed by this easy victory, and commanded Judd to apologize on his knees, hoping that he would, by refusing, give a pretext for bloodshed. Judd submissively got down on his knees. Then Turner stabbed him to death. The officers did not arrest the murderer even then, but a mob hanged him.

IT is estimated that a ton of fair engine coal will convey a freight or passenger train thirty-five miles.

The Record of the Dying Year.

A Complete Catalogue of All Its Important Events.

OLD YEAR.

I stop to think—it seems so strange
Another year has passed away;
For oh! it seems not long ago
I hailed its first glad rising day.

But he must die, as all must die,
And leave no mark or trace behind,
Except a name—a useless thing
When death you with his cords doth bind.

How many hopes, how many fears,
In this short space forever gone;
How many now are lying low
On whom the New Year's day did dawn.

How many griefs, how many joys,
Have moved the changeful human heart;
While some will with the Old Year die,
New griefs and joys with New Year start.
L. A. Osborne.

One hundred and two societies, twenty-eight newspapers and eighty-eight books and pamphlets have been prohibited in Germany since the promulgation of the Anti-Socialist law. In Northern Germany there is but one journal of Socialist proclivities left; in Central and Southern Germany there still remain eleven. All these have changed their names since the new law, and try to conceal their bias.

FARM NOTES.

Holidays.

The holiest of all holidays are those
Kept by ourselves in silence and apart—
The secret anniversaries of the heart,
When the full river of feeling overflows—
The happy days unclouded to the close.
The sudden joys that out of darkness start
As flames from ashes; swift desires, that dart
Like swallows singing down each wind that blows.
White as the gleam of a receding sail;
White as a cloud that floats and fades in air;
White as the whitest lily on a stream,
These tender memories are; a fairy tale
Of some enchanted land we know not where,
But lovely as a landscape in a dream.
—Longfellow.

Around the Farm.

There is no better means to be used as a device for more heavy feed for stock than bran when it is cheap.

A correspondent of the Gardner's Record says he has destroyed worms in flower-pots without injuring the roots of the most delicate plants by sprinkling the soil with mustard-water—a tablespoonful of mustard per gallon of water.

Farm Yards.—A good, well-hung gate will save its cost the first year in the time saved by stopping to put up bars whenever any one passes. Farm gates are pleasant for master and men, and in England there are good, substantial ones opening into every field, so that the farmer can go all over the farm without dismounting. There are no wagon-ways of any kind, without gates for the convenience of equestrians, in that country.

A Good Mess for a Milch Cow.—A writer who says that one good cow gives all the milk needed in a family of eight persons, and from which was made 260 pounds of butter last year, gives the following as his treatment: "If you desire to get a large yield of rich milk, give your cow every day water slightly warm and slightly salted, in which bran has been stirred at the rate of one quart to two gallons of water. You will find, if you have not tried this daily practice, that your cow will give 25 per cent. more immediately under the effects of it, and she will become so attached to it that she will refuse to drink clear water unless very thirsty; but this mess she will drink most any time and ask for more. The amount of drink necessary is an ordinary water pail full each time, morning, noon and night."—Southern Farm.

To Relieve Choked Cows.—In the always-interesting proceedings of the Elmira Farmers' Club, as officially reported in the Husbandman, we find the following: "My way is to open the mouth of the choked animal and insert a clevis wide enough to keep the jaws distended, and give space for the passage of a boy's hand. I hold the clevis in place, while my boy passes his hand through and picks out the apple or other obstruction. Any boy whose hand is small enough to pass without crowding, can easily remove the trouble with entire safety. I have tried to do it myself, but my hand is too large. There is no difficulty or danger if the clevis is firmly held in position." Another member said that an easy way to bring relief is to cause the choked animal to jump over high bars, as high as may be leaped with considerable exertion. It never fails to eject the offending substance or cause it to pass downward. He has tried it many times, always with success.

Saving Seed Corn.—There has been a good deal said about saving seed corn, and a good many foolish notions advanced, such as ransacking the field before the corn is cut, and selecting the ears that ripened soonest, leaving on about one-third of the husks to be hung up in the peaks of some building; others recommend putting into barrels or boxes, etc. To put seed corn into a tight barrel or box would be the worst treatment it could have. It should be put where it can dry out as soon as possible. In going around the field, picking ears before husking, you will not get the best, but will fritter away much time; besides, selecting seed corn is a common-sense business operation, with no fine or critical points about it. All will admit that the best-developed and best-matured ears are the right ones to be saved for seed, and the easiest way to obtain these ears is the best. I have raised the same kind of corn for fifteen years without changing the seed, and it has steadily improved all the time. And yet, I don't attribute all the improvement to the selection of the seed, but part of it to cultivation, for no variety of corn can be kept up to a proper standard without good cultivation. Any corn will degenerate and run out if not half cultivated although great pains may be taken in selecting the seed; but, by obtaining good crops, the variety will improve. Now, for the way to save the seed: After the corn is husked out of the shock and thrown on the ground, take a basket and go from one pile to another. The ears will all be in sight, and in this way the best in the field can be obtained with little trouble. Put it where it will dry out quickly, the quicker the better. I have practiced this plan for fifteen years, and never missed having excellent seed that sent up a strong and vigorous stalk. Never plant the butt or tip kernels, never pick the largest corn, but good, fair-sized kernels, closing well over tip of ears.—Practical Farmer.

Down Among the Dead Men.

At length a fifth ball struck Gen. Gordon, now Senator from Georgia, full in the face, and entering his cheek, knocked him senseless. He fell, and for some time his prostrate body was wrapped in the smoke of battle. We hear from Gen. Gordon's own lips a story that in a metaphysical point is exceedingly interesting. He said that when he fell he was utterly incapable of moving. He gradually began to think of his condition, and this is the half-dream and half-soliloquy that he carried on: "I have been struck on the head with a six-pound solid shot. It has carried away my head. On the left side there is a little piece of skull left. But the brain is gone entirely. Therefore I am dead. And yet I am thinking. How can a man think with his head shot off? And, if I am thinking, I cannot be dead. And yet no man can live after his head is shot off. I may have consciousness while dead, but not motion. If I can lift my leg, then I am alive. I will try that. Can I? Yes, there it is; lifted up! I'm all right!" The General says that every stage of this soliloquy is indelibly stamped on his mind, and that in his exhausted state the reasoning was carried on as logically as ever man reasoned at his desk. Doubt succeeded argument and argument displaced doubt just as logically as could be. He says he will never forget with what anxiety he made the test of lifting his leg—with what agony he waited to see whether or not it would move in response to his effort, and how he hesitated before trying it for fear that it might fail and his death be thereby demonstrated.—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Egg Balls.—To make egg balls, beat up the yelks of three hard-boiled eggs in a mortar with the yelk of one raw egg; make into balls and drop them into boiling water for two minutes.

To Keep Butter Cool.—A flower pot wrapped in a wet cloth and placed over a butter plate, will keep the contents of the plate as hard as if it were kept on ice. Milk will not sour if the can containing it be wrapped in a wet cloth.

A Dainty Dish.—Take pieces of cold meats of any kind, chop fine, season with pepper and salt, juice of a little onion; break over the meat two or three eggs; add a small piece of butter; stir all together; pour it upon nicely-buttered toast; serve hot; garnish with parsley.

Soiled Clothing.—In Germany, where the family washing is done only twice a year, the heaps of soiled clothes would often assume formidable proportions if they were piled in baskets, so the good hausfrau provides herself with long, smooth poles and lays these across the beams of the roof, and hangs the soiled garments upon them. American housewives, with large families, might use this plan to advantage.

French Knots.—Every dabbler in embroidery thinks that she can make a French knot, but there are few who who know the rapid, old-fashioned way of doing it. The silk should be held down firmly by the left thumb, at about an inch to the left of the place where it comes through the cloth, and then the needle should be passed under and over the thread three times, and then through the cloth close to the point where the silk comes up.

The White Mountain Cake.—Four eggs well beaten, with two cups and a half white sugar, one heaping cup of butter, one cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, five cups of flour, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one of lemon, a heaping cup of raisins—whole, without stoning—half a cup of candied orange-peel and citron sliced, and half a cup of almond-meats sliced. It is a delicious cake, and this amount will make two common-sized ones.

A Hint.—Like the leaves, summer calicoes, however pretty, fade. Then bleach your dingy dresses, ladies. Let them be washed and boiled in hot suds until all the color possible is extracted, then finish the job by scalding lye and washing with suds and lying on the first young grass. Good prints and other articles of dress are frequently cast aside because they are faded, but they may be made to render good service by this mode of bleaching.

To Detect the Adulteration of Teas.—The simplest method is to burn the tea and weigh the ashes. Any kind of tea, from the best quality down to the most common, must not leave over 5 per cent. of ash; while the adulterated sorts have actually given 35 to 45 per cent. of ash, proving that at least 30 to 40 per cent. of worthless or injurious stuff has been added. If a pound of such tea were to cost $1, it would contain from 60 to 70 cents' worth of tea and some six ounces of plaster, sold for about 6 cents per ounce.

Boiling Hams.—Soak over night in warm water a ham of about ten or twelve pounds weight. In the morning scrape and clean perfectly. Then put it into a large ham kettle filled with cold water and let it simmer, not boil at all, for half an hour. Then pour off the water and put to it more cold water. When it gets hot add a pint of cider vinegar. For a ten-pound ham, reckoning after it begins to boil, allow three hours for cooking and a half an hour for every additional pound; don't let it ever boil very hard at any time. When done take it out, remove the skin, and stick whole cloves into it, cover with bread crumbs and bake a half hour. Put a cut-paper frill around the bone, and cover with currant jelly and parsley.

Cooking Fruit.—Raspberries may be cooked the same as strawberries; be sure that they are heated to a good boiling temperature; if cooked too long they will be hard and undesirable. A hot, steady fire as for ironing is the best. Fruit ought to cook quickly; a slow fire consumes time, renders the fruit hard, and drives off in steam all the delicate flavor which it is desirable to preserve. Blackberries should be canned the same as raspberries. Gooseberries and currants require considerable sugar and more cooking. Gooseberries should be well done, so that the skins may be tender, and they will admit of more than twice the water that is used with strawberries.

The Methodists.

According to the latest statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as printed in the Christian Advocate, there are now in the world 4,489,877 Methodist members and probationers and 74,969 local and 29,206 itinerant preachers, distributed as follows:

	Itinerant Preachers.	Local Preachers.	Lay M'bers
United States, inc. for. mis.	23,194	26,642	3,396,909
Canada, inc. for. mis.	1,652	4,247	187,857
Great Britain, do. do.	3,705	41,338	848,969
Ireland, France, Aus'lia.	655	2,742	90,000

The total Methodist population is estimated at 20,000,000. In the United States the Methodist Episcopal Church has 1,688,788 members and probationers, against 1,671,608 last year, indicating an increase of 17,180; 11,308 itinerant preachers, a gain of 29, and 12,560 local preachers, a gain of 23. In the previous year in local preachers there was a loss of 120.

INDIANA REPORTS.

AUDITOR OF STATE.

The report of the Auditor of State of Indiana presents the following figures:

On the 31st of October, 1877, the amount of cash in the treasury was $405,303.27.

During the year ending Oct. 31, 1878, the receipts from all sources were as follows:

To general fund	$1,501,840.14
To common-school fund	1,166.99
To school revenue for tuition	1,809,540.38
To college fund	9,880.28
To college-fund interest	8,457.44
To swamp-land fund	307.71
To fund of unclaimed estates	1,067.38
To new State House fund	48,398.97

SECRETARY OF STATE.

The annual report of John E. Neff, Secretary of State, shows that during the year there have been issued and attested 2 proclamations, 48 warrants, 62 requisitions, 103 pardons, 38 remissions, 6 commutations, 3 respites, 588 commissions to State, judical, and county officers, 1,252 commissions to Justices of the Peace, 814 commissions to notaries public.

The statistics furnished by Charles P. Hutchinson, Clerk of the Bureau, show that the total cost of printing, binding and stationery for the State for the two years ending June 30, 1877, was $4,091.03. This makes the total amount for the three years and four months since the present system was adopted $53,567.54.

The report says that the Governor, Secretary and Treasurer, who were appointed by a joint resolution to examine the claim of Benton county for reimbursement for the extraordinary expenditures in the prosecution and conviction of James L. McCullough for the murder of Wm. G. Morgan in 1865, recommend that the Legislature allow certain of the expenses, amounting in the aggregate to $973.70.

A Domestic Missionary.

During Thanksgiving evening, in a social society circle held at a residence in the First ward, among the subjects discussed was "Bob" Ingersoll's unbelief in future punishment, and a lady, well known for her vim and pluck, spoke up and remarked with an emphasis unmistakable: "I'd just like to be Bob Ingersoll's wife for a short time; I'd make him believe there was a hell—see if I wouldn't!" The company smiled "bias," but didn't pursue the subject further.—Binghamton Leader.

A life insurance company refuses to pay the policy on the life of Peter A. Tighe, of Memphis, who died of yellow fever, on the ground that the family cannot furnish the proper certificate. The doctor who attended him, the undertaker who laid him out, and the clergyman who officiated at his funeral, all of whom are necessary to the execution of such certificate, have themselves since died of the fever.

At Gussowka, Russia, a man suspected of incendiarism, causing the death of seventy horses, was thrown, by the furious populace, into the flames.

Also, $1 for one dog, $3 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog for the collection of which I may be found at the County Treasurer's office, in the town of Auburn, on and after December 16th, 1878.

Taxes may be paid in full, or in two installments. The first installment including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1879; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1879. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. penalty will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Road Receipts will not be received after the third Monday in April, only on delinquent taxes.

No Road Receipts will be received on the November installment.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No County Order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday of February, 1879.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday of April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipt will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

Cipher Dispatches.

(Indianapolis Sentinel.)

If congress concludes to investigate the cipher dispatches, the democratic party will not only acquiesce, but will give the proceeding its approval. Under the worst aspect of the case, after eliminating radical lies and relieving the facts from radical tortures, there will be little left to create unrest or anxiety. It will simply be shown that radical villains, having control of the vote of Florida, and having arranged the whole matter for auctioning off the state, offered the electoral vote to the highest bidder, and that the subject was debated by democrats as to the propriety of purchasing of thieves what belonged to the democratic party by every right known to the constitution and laws of the country and of the state. Beyond this, nothing will appear upon which to hang a resolution or invite discussion. It will be shown that Samuel J. Tilden, the president de jure, neither offered money to purchase the electoral vote of Florida nor any other state, and that he positively knew nothing of dispatches indicating a purpose or a wish to obtain a vote by such means—and with this belief the democratic party is unconcerned as to the final disposal of the matter. But the operations of the radical party, as will be disclosed by the report of the Potter Committee will show an aggregation of aggravated villainy that will astound the civilized world, and it is to break, if possible, the force of these revelations that Blaine's tactics owe their origin. The Potter Committee will have the frauds of the radical conspirators, from first to last, set in order, classified and arranged, linked and welded, so that they can no more be obscured or removed than a chain of mountains. The report of the Potter Committee will locate every radical den, map out every pathway and drag to the surface every radical conspirator. It will reproduce every radical lie and perjury which formed an ingredient of the colossal crime which placed Hayes in power, until it stands out in history bleak, bare and black, attracting the gaze of the world, a thing around which the lightnings of the people's indignation will center through all time. It will show that the perfidious scoundrels from the smallest go-between—the liar of small dimensions, such wench wretches as Lize Pinkston—up to Noyes Harlan and John Sherman, have al been rewarded by Hayes, and are now luxurlating in federal offices under the protecting and fostering care of Hayes. It is to counteract these disclosures of this report that Blaine and his confederates are now at work. The country understands the tactics; the people are aware of the purpose, and their defeat is certain. The radical party is outlawed. The people have condemned it, and it must sink by the weight of its own wickedness to soundless depths of infamy.

To Girls.

Never marry a man who has only his love for you to recommend him. It is very fascinating but it does not make the man. If he is not otherwise what he should be, you will never be happy. The most perfect man who did not love you should never be your husband. But though marriage without love is terrible, love only will not do. If the man is dishonorable to other men, or mean, or given to any vice the time will come when you will either loath him or sink to the level. It is hard to remember, amidst kisses and praises, that there is anything else in the world to be done or thought of but love-making; but the days of life are many, and the husband must be a guide to be trusted—a companion, a friend, as well as a lover. Many a girl has married a man whom she knew to be anything but good, "because he loved her so." And the flame has died out on the hearthstone of home before long, and beside it there has been sitting one that she could never hope to lead heavenward—or who, if she followed him as a wife should, would guide her steps to perdition. Marriage is a solemn thing—a choice for life, be careful in the choosing.—Belgravia.

No man has a riget to do as he pleases, except when he pleases to do right.

If any one speaks ill of you, let your life be such that none will believe it.

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

CAMP LIFE AT SILVER CLIFF.

What Man Will Do For Wealth.

SILVER CLIFF, COLO. Dec. 16, '78.

DEAR COURIER:—The storm clouds hung low over the mountain tops all day, and to-night it is snowing, with a fall of over a foot already on the ground You who are cosily situated in the bosom of your families surrounded with comforts, and yet have spells of discontentment, would only want a mere taste of what some endure here in pursuit of means to obtain these comforts, to be forever hushed as to your hard fate. What will not man do for gold? has yet found no answer that does not embrace every degree of hardship, privation, danger, crime and even death itself for its attainment. Down the mountain side miles away from human habitation, is a Mexican larruping a six mule team to reach the summit even at a late hour, while the wind sweeps up the canon, enveloping team and all as in a cloud of snow. Here comes a teamster across the valley, aiming for the point he wants to reach, and yet slowly, wearily he plods along, no friendly fence, or naked tree to guide him nearer home; slowly and sadly, with the keen air pinching his fingers and ears, he moves along, peering into the gloom for a sign, or listening for the least sound that will cheer, and arouse his well spent energies, but they come not, and with his mechanical "go long, boys," to the poor dumb brutes that labor heavily in the cumbersom snow, he thinks perhaps of the home of his youth and earlier manhood, where the fire was warm and the hours were bright and joyous and happy, and a sigh wells up, and he wonders what man will not do for gold. Many of these poor fellows, "freighters" they are called here, were lost in the snow storm of last week, some of them only a few miles from their destination. The snow so completely shuts out everything, that when one is in a valley forty miles long and ten wide (and not two as you had it the other week) it is impossible without a trail to tell which way he is going ing. A gentleman started for Rosita during the storm, only seven miles away and had to retace his steps three times before he arrived there.

But I want to give you some idea of camp life in these mining regions. While the snows lasts, little can be done at prospecting, and as a consequence it brings the miners into camp. We will go along down Cliff street where the snow along the sidewalks is trodden into a hard, frozen pavement. Suddenly the dulcet tones of a violin are heard, and as we draw near the great crowd is pouring in and out of what is called the dance house. There is no distinction in these crowds. The speculator, the mine owner, the miner himself, the desparado, the gambler, the lawyer, the doctor, the thief, the assassin, all in one common stream pour into these dens nightly. Let us go in. The first thing that presents itself is the bar with all its tinsel glitterings and barbaric attractions. Two or more spry young fellows whose manipulations of the glasses would call forth the admiration of a Chicago rumseller, are ready to pour out liquid damnation at twenty-five cents per glass. Opposite the bar sits a man at the table around which is gathered a motley crowd, eager in the pursuit of their favorite pastime—"faro." To his right sits a man on a high stool called the 'look out' with two of Colt's navies well in hand, to say nothing of "bowies" and weapons of smaller calibre. Beside the seller are great stacks of ivory chips which he sells for fifty cents apiece, with which you bet on any numbered card in the deck, from the deuce up to the ace. The picture of each card being painted upon the table before him. No money is used in betting. It would take to long to describe the game.

As we move farther on we come upon a chuck-a-luck board, where dice are used to decide the bets. Still farther along we strike another table at which the favorite game of twenty-one is dealt out to its admirers. Now comes an open space. A violin, of doubtful cremonian paternity, accompanied by a banjo that a negro wouldn't 'cognize, strike up a wail and the dance begins. A brisk looking fellow with a sombrero chucked down over his eyes brings out his "gal," the sorriest looking specimen of a female that ever disgraced the festive board, is joined by three other couples, fully as lucky in looks and manners. Now the fun begins. Imbibed with whisky the dancers soon become animated, and the double shuffle has no clearer field than a dance house. Some fellow in the crowd gives expression to a remark that brings down half the house in a roar of laughter, to which a response is made by one of the frail participants which is greeted with loud guffaws, and the dance goes on. At the conclusion of the dance the sets are marched to the bar where they indulge in libations that would kill a mule in twenty four hours. An additional quarter is given the "gals" as an incentive to action. It is one of the most disgusting scenes that one can well imagine.

Yonder is a fellow upon a platform singing out in a loud voice certain numbers, at the same time turning an urn shaped vessel containing a number of ivory balls, each one of which has a number painted thereon. Around several tables upon which are large pasteboard cards containing certain numbers corresponding with the numbers in the urn, is another crowd of a high type, each supplied with a number of grains of corn or beans, endeavoring to get them in a row on their respective cards as their numbers are called, when they have the glorious and undisputed right to yell out "keno." This is the amusing pastime called keno, where the winner gets all that the rest put in except the per cent. retained by the gamsters. The screech of the fiddle, the call of changes, the yell of the keno man, the rattle of checks on the deal boards, the clicking of glasses at the bar, with now and then as a variation the report of a revolver or two, together with an air heavily laden with the perfume of whisky and tobacco smoke, presents a scene as varied and unique as old Nick could well desire.

Plunging out through the crowded passage way we leave the worst place of the city and pass down a thorough fare of quickly constructed store rooms with their supplies which prove a ready sale in a mining town. There are over one hundred of these stores now in operation, which up to this time have done a heavy business. The heavy snows of winter will cause a dullness in the leading trades, while hotels and restaurants will reap a rich harvest, to say nothing of saloons and gambling hell. Here come two fellows on their bronchos, or Mexican horses, with full equipment of blankets, shovel, pick, etc., strapped to their saddles who have just left Nevada to try their fortunes in the new discoveries here. With a small army tent they locate on a vacant spot and pr[illegible] to prospect. Turning their bronchos loose in the morning they start with rations, pick and shovel to hunt for indications over the numerous cliffs, peaks and mountains in their locality. Having arrived at a point not already staked they examine the surface stones and rocks, and if satisfactory commence digging into the bowels of the earth. It depends upon their persistency how long they will dig in this one place, some holding out for several days, and others abandoning it in as many hours. Some are lucky and strike it rich, while others pass over good rock and find nothing. The geologist and scientist have no show here. Nature, apparently, contradicts herself about every two hundred feet of space. She seems to have labored with every conceivable whim during her volcanic distress in this locality. The "tenderfoot," or a new comer, has as much show of a rich mine as an old miner of '49. You can see little heaps of earth and rock dumped out from holes along the cliffs and mountain sides indicating the presence of prospectors, and yet one tenth of the territory of surface indications has not been prospected. In good weather little bands start out in every direction, buoyed with the hope that they may yet strike a lead, and this is the way prospecting is done.

Yonder comes a strange procession just entering town. Tinkle, tinkle, goes the sheep bell attached to an old "broncho," and behind him bellows about forty "burros," or perhaps, the saddest looking beast you ever saw. They are the legitimate fruit of the jack and jennet, and are, therefore, not pack mules as some call them, although they are used for that purpose. They are generally about three feet high, and look as though they had been born too melancholy. It really makes one sad to look at them, especially if you have a brotherly feeling about you. They are docile from habit and are constitutionally opposed to anything naughty, because of any exertion it might require. He will follow a sheep bell all day humbly, patiently, and at night wonder why he did so. A neat fitting saddle is made for him with breeching and breast strap like a set of harness, upon which is placed a reduced fac-simile of a saw-buck, upon these you can carry a weight up and down the mountain sides averaging one hundred and fifty pounds each. The "burro" and the pack saddle are like union and liberty, inseparable. These processions are generally manipulated by Mexicans, one in the lead and one in the rear. Thus, over two tons can be transported over mountains where railroads cannot touch, which pays from one to four dollars per hundred according to the distance. When their day's journey is ended they are turned loose to brouse upon what they can get, under the guardianship of the bell broncho, in fact, these mountain beasts of burden seldom, if ever get any grain. But I fear I worry your patience. I will tell you something about ranch life in my next; Mexican horses and Texan cattle, though I may not be able to do so before I return, which may be about the first of January. TOM.

HOW TO BREED SALABLE HORSES.

Indiana Farmer.

In a conversation not long since with the superintendent of one of the most important street railroad lines in America—a company that constantly employs some 2,000 head of horses, he remarked to the writer that his company had learned by experience that it did not pay to buy light horses. They had commenced with the idea that a 900 to 950 pounds horse was the size best suited to their wants, but they gradually learned the importance of greater weight, until finally they had come to the point 1,100 pounds was as light a horse as they cared to buy at any price. Many of the very best horses are found to be not less than 1,200 pounds weight. In addition to this they require them to be low, short-legged, heavy, compact horses—pony-built fellows, with the best of legs and feet.

Now the horse best adapted to the use of this company, is the horse best adapted to all the other street car lines of the country. The three companies in Chicago, combined, employ about 6,000 head. St. Louis, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Boston, New York, and Brooklyn, will probably, each employ an equal number, to say nothing of hundreds of other cities employing smaller numbers. Then, the vast army of omnibus horses in the towns and cities must be of a still greater size while the thousands of trucks, baggage wagons, transfer wagons, express wagons and others for moving heavy freight about the cities, require horses weighing not less than 1,400 pounds, and even those weighing 1,600 are still more highly prized.

These being the sort of horses that commerce requires, it needs but a small grain of common sense to perceive that these are the horses for farmers to raise for profit. The demand for horses of average weight is very limited indeed, and is confined to light driving on the road. And then to sell at all must be of the very choicest quality—fast and stylish—and only the very best among them can be sold. The supply of such horses is always greatly in excess to the demand It becomes then an interesting question how these 1,200 to 1,600 pound horses can be had with certainty. Happily we are not left to conjecture upon this subject. There is a race of horses that have for centuries been bred with a view to rapid darft, and this is the Percheron-Norman horse of France.

The omnibus horses of Paris which are of this light type of the Percheron race, have for years been the admiration of all intelligent horsemen who visit that metropolis, while the larger type are unequaled for heavy draft. In the quality of the feet and legs as a race, they have no superior, while in hardiness and docility they stand confessedly at least, the equal of any other stock. They have been so long bred to these points that they transmit these with greater certainty than any other breed. Indeed it is a conceded fact among all well informed men that there is no heavy breed of horses in the world so well established as the Percheron-Norman of France.

The way, then, to breed from our common stock the sort of horses that commerce now demands is manifestly to couple their mares with purely-bred Percheron-Norman stallions. The result is almost always satisfactory when the right stallion is shown; not the great, coarse, loosely made shaggy brutes that some of our importers have brought over—of Belgian or Flemish blood, but the gen[illegible], compact, blocky purely-bred Percheron-Norman—sound and hardy as a nut from head to foot. Such are the horses that always prove successful in the stud, and to which every farmer can breed with a reasonable degree of certainty that the produce will be a salable horse at a good price.

Benefit of Walking.

[Plymouth Democrat.]

Hall's Journal of Health, one of the most sensible publications we know of, gives the following excellent advice on walking. We have tried it for the past year and a half, walking from two to five miles a day, and can truly say we have derived more real benefit from this healthful excercise than from all the medicine with which we were drenched for the same period prior to that time.

"Walking briskly, with an exciting object of pleasurable interest ahead, is the most healthful of all forms of excercise, except that of encouragingly remunerative, steady labor in the open air; and yet multitudes in this city, whose health urgently requires excercise, seldom walk, when they can ride, if the distance is a mile or more. It is worse in the country, especially with the well-to-do; a horse or carriage must be brought to the door, even if less distance have to be passed. Under the conditions first named walking is a bliss; it gives animation to the mind, it vivifies the circulation, it paints the cheek and sparkles the eye, and wakes up the whole being, physical, mental and moral. We know a family of children in this city who, from the age of seven, had to walk nearly two miles to school, winter and summer, weather sleet, or storm, or rain, or burning sun, they made it an ambition never to stay from school on account of the weather, and never be "late," and one of them was heard to boast that in seven years it had never been necessary to give an excuse for being one minute behind time, even although in winter it was necessary to dress by gas light. They did not average two days' sickness a year, and later they thought nothing of walking twelve miles at a time in the Swiss mountains. Sometimes they would be caught in drenching rains and wet to the skin; on such occasions they made it a point to do one thing; let it rain, and trude on more vigorously, until every thread was dry before they reached home"

Knowing People.

There are always some people in every community who imagine themselves, to use a common phrase, "very smart," and they are generally of the busybody kind. One of these can do more harm in a town or neighborhood than a dozen good people can set at rights. No minister ever comes into a place but these smart ones can pick any amount of flaws in his every-day walk, or his sermons are always too hard, or "he can't preach," and a hundred other imaginary imperfections, which the less pretentious never think of mentioning. But these knowing ones do not stop here; for no enterprise was ever started but was contrary to their views. Other folks never build a pig-pen, a smoke-house, a corn-crib, a barn, a dwelling, a school-house or a church to suit these babblers; and no newspaper was ever run according to their ideas of business, "and I won't have anything to do with it, and I'll keep everybody else from it that I can."

THE
INDIANA STATE SENTINEL!
FOR 1879
HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO
One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and, what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE long trial of James A. Whalen's suit against Gen. Sheridan, which has occupied the sessions of the United States Circuit Court in New York city for some time, was ended last week. The jury remained out only an hour, returned with a verdict for the defendant, and were discharged. Whalen, it is understood, will appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, in case motion for a new trial is denied, for he does not propose to give up his fight for $416,978.57 while a ghost of a chance is left to gain it.

AT Wilmington, Del., the other day, George Draper (colored), convicted of murder in the second degree, was placed in the pillory in a blinding snow-storm; afterward he received sixty lashes, and now goes to prison for life.

THE Directors of the Mount Sinai (Jewish) Hospital, of New York, have declined to accept the proffer of $500 by Judge Hilton, on behalf of Mrs. A. T. Stewart....A boiler explosion at Troy, N. Y., killed two men and seriously injured four others....The St. Louis express, bound west on the New York Central railroad, while stopping at a station five miles east of Buffalo, was run into by the Chicago express, bound west, and two men named A. Gay and Michael Mahoney killed, and one named George Vick had a leg broken....The statue of Charles Sumner, authorized by the meeting in Faneuil Hall, in March, 1874, was unveiled at Boston last week by Gov. Rice. The statue is in the Public Garden.

THE WEST.

THE Indianapolis Savings Bank has closed its doors....Lawrence O. Hall, a clerk in the London and San Francisco Bank, of the latter city, stole a package of $30,000 and left for parts unknown.

AT Zanesville, Ohio, Dr. Heyl and one Eaton were sentenced, respectively, to twelve and four months' imprisonment and $1,000 and $100 fine, for grave robbery....The great bridge that spans the Mississippi at St. Louis has been sold under a mortgage foreclosure. It was bid in by a New Yorker named Thomas for $2,000,000.

HOLIDAY week is always a harvest time for places of amusement, and managers always endeavor to "have their dishes right side up" during the rain of Christmas and New Year's patronage. McVicker, at his Chicago Theater, during Christmas week produces a double bill, consisting of a popular domestic drama, "A Woman of the People," followed by the farce "That Blessed Baby."

S. D. RICHARDS, who murdered Mrs. Harleson and her three children in Nebraska, a short time ago, has been arrested at Steubenville, Ohio. The monster has made a full confession of the murder of the Harleson family, and also acknowledges to three other murders, all neighbors of his. He is a Quaker by birth and religion.

MRS. MACK has been convicted at Janesville, Wis., of murdering her husband, and sentenced to a life term of imprisonment.

THE incipient Indian war in Oregon has been stamped out, and Chief Moses and several of his fellow-warriors have been arrested and placed in durance vile.

THE SOUTH.

THERE was a double execution at Fort Smith, on the 20th of December, the victims being a Creek Indian named John Postack and a negro by the name of Diggs.

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch announces the disappearance and supposed murder of Lott Clark and Bill White, two colored men, near Caledonia, about fifty miles below Shreveport, while on their way to New Orleans, where they were summoned to appear before the United States Grand Jury as witnesses in the election troubles. They were taken possession of by a mob, and it is supposed were killed.... A dispatch from Jacksonville, Fla., says the State Canvassing Board has completed the canvass of the votes of the November election, and given the certificate to Hull, Democratic candidate for Congress. This result was arrived at by throwing out Brevard county, which gave a Democratic majority, on the ground that the returns were fraudulent, and Madison county, which gave a Republican majority, on the ground that one precinct was not included in the returns from that county. The County Canvassing Board of Brevard county has been indicted by the United States Grand Jury for making fraudulent returns, and are in jail in default of $3,000 bail each.

AT Junction City, Texas, Tom Doran and Louis Temple fought with pistols. Doran killed Temple. The latter's father pursued Doran, shooting him twice fatally, and then stabbed the body eleven times, and cut the throat from ear to ear....A report has reached Little Rock of the lynching of four horse-thieves at Corning, Clay county, Ark.

THE Court House at Maysville, De Kalb county, Mo., has been burned. All the county records, excepting those of the Circuit Clerk and Treasurer, were destroyed. The value of property consumed is said to be $100,000.

GENERAL.

THE death of Gen. Alpheus S. Williams, member of Congress from the Detroit (Mich.) district, occurred at Washington on the 21st of December. Gen. Williams was 68 years old, and had been a resident of Detroit forty-three years. In 1846 he organized the Michigan regiment, served with distinction through the Mexican war, and on his return was appointed Major General of the State militia. In 1849 he was appointed Postmaster of Detroit by President Fillmore. In the late Rebellion he was commissioned Brigadier General, commanded a brigade in the Shenandoah campaign, and succeeded Gen. Banks as commander of the Twelfth corps. After the march to the sea he was brevetted Major General. In 1866 he was defeated by H. P. Baldwin for Governor, and was sent as Minister to San Salvador by President Johnson, and in 1874 and in 1876 he was elected to Congress.

THE venerable Catholic Archbishop Purcell has written to the Pope asking to be relieved on account of the infirmities of old age.

THE house of John O'Brien, near Dublin, Ont., was burned, and his wife, son and daughter perished. Himself and other members of the family, while walking through a furious storm to the nearest house, were badly frozen. O'Brien will probably die.

CHOLERA and famine are desolating some of the northern provinces of Brazil. Among the horrors reported as occurring among the wretched people are carrion-eating and cannibalism....The steamship State of Louisiana has been lost on the Irish coast.

WASHINGTON.

THE following sub-committees of the House Committee to Investigate the Yellow-Fever Epidemic have been appointed to visit the afflicted sections: Messrs. Garfield, Chittenden and Morse to visit Memphis and vicinity, and Gibson, Hooker and Young to visit New Orleans and vicinity. The sub-committees of the House and Senate will sit and act jointly during their Southern tour.

CONGRESSMAN BEVERLY M. DOUGLAS, of Virginia, died at the National Hotel in Washington, last week, after a brief illness, of inflammation of the bowels....Ex-Senator Ramsey, of Minnesota, is favorably mentioned as a candidate for the Berlin mission. The friends of Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, are pressing the claims of that gentleman for the vacant post.

COMMISSIONER RAUM will ask Congress for an increase of $75,000 in the appropriation for the expense of collecting the internal revenue.

AFTER examining the whole subject, the First Comptroller has decided that no portion of the $20,000 appropriated for the use of the Senate to investigate the frauds in the electoral count can be applied to the purposes of the Blaine committee. The committee will therefore have to wait for a separate appropriation, in which case the House can have a chance at debating the Southern question, and it can also be reopened in the Senate.

GEN. HOOKER, a member of the commission appointed to consider the expediency of transferring the Indian administration to the War Department, says the report of the majority of the commission will favor the transfer. He thinks the report will be ready before the 1st of February.

THE suit against the Government, brought by the heirs of Stephen A. Douglas for certain cotton captured by the United States Government in Mississippi during the war and sold as abandoned property, has been settled finally in the Court of Claims by judgment in favor of claimants....Over 50,000 tea plants have been distributed to farmers by the Agricultural Department during the past year, and liberal distribution is to be continued. The Commissioner is said to be confident that tea-culture will flourish in this country.

POLITICAL.

THE Blaine investigating committee held its first formal session immediately after the adjournment of Congress. Senator Bayard offered a resolution stating that inasmuch as the President had made certain charges, that he be requested to place before the committee all testimony that he could properly communicate. This was after Mr. Garland had made the point that there were no specific charges before the committee to work upon. It was voted down by a strict party vote. Mr. Garland then said they must have some charges to work upon, and, inasmuch as Mr. Blaine had originated the charges and had brought about the investigation, he (Garland) submitted a resolution calling upon that gentleman to furnish specifications upon which the committee might base the inquiry and carry out the instructions embraced in the resolution authorizing the investigation. This was adopted. A resolution was adopted that the committee sit with open doors. It was also decided to send a sub-committee to New Orleans.

IT is reported that the President will, at an early day, make a clean sweep of all the Federal officials in Louisiana.

SENATOR BAYARD, says a Washington telegram, has formally entered the field as a candidate for the Presidency. His headquarters have been established at his home in Wilmington, Del., where an organization is now being rapidly effected. The sinews of war will not be wanting. It is expected that he can confidently rely upon all the necessary material assistance from New York; besides, his own fortune is ample.

FOREIGN.

THE German Government committee of inquiry has rejected Prince Bismarck's tobacco-monopoly scheme, and favors a duty according to weight, as advocated by the National Liberals. It is believed that Bismarck will not accept the decision ....The students in some of the Russian universities are giving the Government considerable trouble, and many of them have been arrested.

THE last of the King of Denmark's daughters was married at Copenhagen on the 21st of December—the Princess Thyra Amelia Caroline Charlotte Anne espousing Prince Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, "King of Hanover" and Duke of Cumberland....It now transpires that Bayard Taylor had suffered for a long time from kidney complaint. He attached no importance to the malady, which his physicians unfortunately always mistook for symptoms of dropsy. These symptoms increasing, he was twice tapped. He confidently believed in his recovery to the last, and was in no wise alarmed at his condition....The report that the Ameer of Afghanistan has fled to Turkistan is confirmed by official advices.

THERE is great destitution and suffering in London and its environs. The poor-houses are full, and the usual agencies of public charity are over-taxed....A cable dispatch reports unusually severe weather throughout Great Britain and Continental Europe. Many of the railroads have been blocked by snow. ....Advices from the seat of war in Afghanistan report that the British forces occupied the important town of Jelalabad on the 20th of December. The occupation of this place will afford comfortable winter quarters, with facilities for defense, which the English may possibly need before the winter ends. ....Something like a "reign of terror" exists in Russia. The police throughout the country are arresting suspected persons, and the students are especially subjected to persecution on account of their attempt to petition the Czarowitz for redress of their grievances.

THE official inquiry into the Pomerania disaster has resulted in the acquittal of the Captain and officers of the ship from all blame on account of the terrible disaster....A Vienna dispatch says that 40 per cent. of the Bosnians who returned to their homes will have perished by spring if the weather does not moderate.

SULEIMAN PASHA, who was recently tried at Constantinople for mismanagement of the Turkish armies, in the late war, and sentenced to perpetual banishment, has received a full pardon....Advices from Mexico state that a revolution is going on in Guadalajara, caused by the levying of an onerous tax. Several citizens have been killed in the streets, and numbers of prominent gentlemen imprisoned.... A correspondent at Kuram, in Afghanistan, says an Afghan soldier in the British service was hanged for firing to warn his countrymen of the advance on Peiwar pass. Eighteen others were sentenced to terms of from seven to fourteen years' penal servitude for desertion. The same correspondent says a proclamation of the Ameer of Afghanistan has been discovered, dated Nov. 11. It shows he had declared a holy war against the British.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, Dec. 20.—SENATE.—Mr. Beck's bill to repeal section 820 of the Revised Statutes (the jurors' test-oath clause) was passed....After some other business of an unimportant nature the Senate adjourned to Jan. 7.

HOUSE.—The House, after a short and uninteresting session, adjourned till the 7th of January.

A Mere Cipher.

Vice President Wheeler understands fully the insignificance of his office during the tenure of a robust President, and doesn't hesitate to add a joke of his own to the many current concerning the place:

"A few weeks after I became Vice President," he said, "I went one Sunday to a church in Washington. The good minister prayed for the President and the Cabinet, and for the Senators and members of the House of Representatives, and the Governors of the several States, and, finally, for the heathen, but made no mention of the Vice President. As I was walking home Sam Shellabarger came up and took my arm, and said 'The preacher was rather hard on you to leave you out of his prayer altogether.' 'Yes,' I replied, 'it struck me that he was; he put me down below the heathen as not worth praying for at all.' After a while I got over fretting about my uselessness in the Government machine, although I always appear to myself somewhat like a contingent remainder or an administrator de bonis non."

A Maine Editor's View of Death.

The editor of the Gardiner (Me.) Journal has recently had a narrow escape from death, his horse running away as he hung in the wheel. He thus describes his sensations: "'Oh, can't some of my spirit friends do something to help me out of this scrape?' beseechingly I said or thought. It was a prayer not laid down in the books, and perhaps the form was not staid nor formal. Short as it was it did me good. I saw then crowds of spirits around me—part of whom I knew. 'I do not see what they can do,' I thought, and, as they seemed to hover round the front part of the wagon, and over the horse, I wondered how they kept up with him. Then I thought, perhaps they'll take the old horse's strength away—but I couldn't see very clearly how they were to do this—for old Robin was a hard customer to 'dematerialize.' I probably should have lived but a few seconds longer. The reins had worn off upon the wheel, just when my strength was all gone. Had I died people would pityingly have said it was a horrible death —but I really suffered very little. All the pain I have suffered up to now has not been equal to what I suffered last summer in a day from the bite of an insect. The shock was such that my nerves of sensation were benumbed. I had no fear; in fact, there was a physical sort of feeling that it was a bundle about three feet long, with a sort of handle to it—which was my left leg, probably—that was bouncing along over the ground, which I was trying to untangle. Then there was another self who had to take care of the wheel, untangle the rein, talk to old Robin, yell to the dog, and attend to matters generally; while the third self seemed to do the thinking, and I kind of liked that one the best. I had often heard that in such crises as these one's whole life passes in review before him, and I thought of that fact, but I had no such experience. I had only one regret for deeds done or left undone, and that was that I had neglected my usual custom of taking accident tickets, and this regret I felt ashamed of. My only thought was of my wife. The knowledge that I have faced death unflinchingly is not without satisfaction to me, and there is a something that I feel, which I cannot describe, that assures me that there were more powerful influences than my own aiding, comforting and sustaining me. My religious friends will say it was the Good Father, and it matters not what we call it—the feeling is the same. I do not feel of sufficient importance to merit God's special providence, but that loving friends from the other sphere may have comforted and sustained me is not repugnant to my common sense, and does not lessen my idea of the goodness and greatness of the Creator."

Number Seven in the Bible.

In seven days a dove was sent.

Every seven years the land rested.

Jacob served seven years for Rachel.

Jacob mourned seven days for Joseph.

Abraham pleaded seven times for Sodom.

On the seventh day God ended His work.

The golden candlestick had seven branches.

Jacob was pursued a seven-days' journey by Laban.

Every seventh year the law was read to the people.

Naaman washed seven times in the river Jordan.

On the seventh day Noah's ark touched the ground.

Solomon was seven years building the temple, and fasted seven days at its dedication.

On the seventh day of the seventh month the children of Israel fasted seven days in their tents.

Job's friends sat with him seven days and seven nights, and offered seven bullocks and seven rams as an atonement.

A plenty of seven years and a famine of seven were foretold in Pharaoh's dream by seven fat and seven lean beasts and seven ears of blasted corn.

In the destruction of Jericho seven persons bore seven trumpets seven days; on the seventh day they marched around seven times, and at the end of the seventh round the walls fell.

In the Revelation we read of seven churches, seven candlesticks, seven stars, seven trumpets, seven plagues, seven thunders, seven vials, seven angels and a seven-headed monster.

The Golden State.

California has a total area of 100,000,000 acres, including 30,000,000 held by private ownership, 7,000,000 inclosed, 4,000,000 cultivated, nine-tenths of the cultivated land being in cereals, and 82,000 in grape vines. California has 2,500,000 bearing trees of fruits of temperate climates—apple, pear, peach, plum, prune, apricot, nectarine and cherry; 300,000 bearing trees in subtropical fruits—orange, lemon, lime, fig and olive; 400,000 almond and English walnut trees.—Alta-California.

AUGUSTE GUIDI and his wife were very miserable in San Francisco. They had been married only a few months, but were already discouraged by poverty, having been accustomed to an easy, careless life. Guidi sent a letter to a friend, requesting him to go to a certain spot in a suburb of the city, find a bit of red paper, and follow a trail of similar pieces until he came to "something startling." The friend did as requested, and found the dead bodies of Guidi and his wife. They had committed suicide.

WHILE a farmer of Monroe, N. Y., was prying upon a large flat stone in a quarry his hand touched something cold and clammy. He raised the stone, and found a ball made up of forty-five large black snakes.

LAST summer, during the heated term a young man had the audacity to strike his father. The attending physician pronounced it a veritable son-stroke.

THE LATE BAYARD TAYLOR.

Brief Record of a Busy Life.

The Chicago Tribune, in chronicling the death of Bayard Taylor, which occurred at Berlin, Germany, on the 19th of December, says: The story of his life is briefly told, for it has been mainly spent in travel and books, and the former has been largely utilized in the service of the latter. He was born in Chester county, Pa., Jan. 11, 1825, and in 1842 commenced his life work as an apprentice in a printing-office in West Chester. Three years afterward he made a tour through Europe on foot, and upon his return in 1846 published "Views Afoot; or, Europe Seen with Knapsack and Staff," which aroused a very general ambition among tourists to travel in the same pedestrian style. During the next year he edited a newspaper in Phœnixville, Pa., and then went to New York, where he became identified with the Tribune, to which journal he has contributed more or less ever since, and in which many of his smaller works have made their first appearance. In 1849 he made the tour of California, and returned by way of Mexico. The year 1851 was spent in the East, and during his tour he ascended the Nile and also traversed a large portion of Asia Minor. In 1852 he set out from England, crossing Asia to Calcutta, thence going to China, where he joined Commodore Perry's Japan expedition. In 1862-'3 he was Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg, Simon Cameron then being Minister. After residing some time in Germany, for which country he had a special affection, he returned to his native land and made several lecture tours which were remarkably successful, as few lecturers ever had so much to say to people that was new and entertaining. In 1874 he revisited Egypt, and in the same year went to Iceland to attend the millennial celebration, where a poem of his was read.

His travels have enriched our literature with many works, among them, "El Dorado, or Adventures in the Path of Empire" (1850); "A Journey to Central Africa" (1854); "The Lands of the Saracen" (1854); "Visit to India, China and Japan" (1855); "Northern Travel; Summer and Winter Pictures of Sweden, Denmark and Lapland" (1857); "Travels in Greece and Russia" (1859); "At Home and Abroad, a Sketch-Book of Life, Scenery and Men" (1859); "Colorado, a Summer Trip" (1867); "Byways of Europe" (1869); and "Egypt and Iceland" (1874).

His literary work has not been confined to books of travel. His busy pen was almost constantly employed, and his ambition and industry led him through almost every department of literary activity. As a poet, he was characterized by vigor and force united with purity of sentiment rather than by the imaginative faculty or by the dreaminess and mystery that characterizes so many of our latter-day poets. Among the volumes of poetry which he has left the best known are: "Poems of the Orient" (1855); "Poems of Home and Travel" (1855); "The Picture of St. John" (1866); "The Ballad of Abraham Lincoln" (1869); "The Masque of the Gods" (1872); "Lars, a Pastoral of Norway" (1873); "The Prophet" (1874); "Home Pastorals, Ballads and Lyrics" (1875), and "Prince Deukalion" (1878). He also ventured into the realm of fiction, but not with that degree of success which characterized his poems and works of travel, and produced "Hannah Thurston, a Story of American Life" (1863); "John Godfrey's Fortunes" (1864); "The Story of Kennett" (1866), and "Joseph and His Friend" (1870). In translations his work is the most valuable, because it is the best that has ever been done by an American writer, while in the case of his splendid version of Goethe's "Faust" it may be fairly questioned whether it is not the best translation of that great poem ever made in any country. In addition to his poems, books of travels, novels, and translations, he has edited a "Cyclopedia of Modern Travel," the "Frithiof's Saga," Auerbach's "Villa on the Rhine," and an "Illustrated Library of Travel, Exploration and Adventure." The same graceful work which he has done for foreign authors has been done for many of his own works, which have been translated into German, French and Russian.

His literary activity continued to the very close of his life. If we are not mistaken, one of his strongest reasons for wishing the position to which President Hayes has appointed him was that he might be where he could easily secure materials for his "Life of Goethe," upon which he was at work when death suddenly intervened and the pen dropped from his hands. Few American writers will be so sincerely mourned, for few of them are so well known to the people. His strong, rugged, vigorous nature; his genial, hospitable, manly bearing; the purity as well as excellence of his works, and his chivalrous character as a gentleman, will commend his memory to his countrymen. The story of his death will be told and his memory will be tenderly recalled in almost every part of the world. Among the snows of Iceland, in the shadow of the Pyramids, under the palms of India, wherever his restless feet have wandered, there will be friends who will be pained to know that this great strong heart has ceased to beat, and that the wanderer is forever at rest.

How He Got a Pass.

The art of putting things so as to produce the conviction which is followed by action was known to a poor fellow injured by a railroad accident out West. The Transcript tells the story:

He was a brakeman, and had been hurt in the discharge of his duty. His home was in the East, and the road which he had served passed him to the terminus of its line. The next did the same, and also the next; but at last he came to a Superintendent who hesitated. The poor fellow pleaded his case. He was a railroad man. He had been hurt at his post. He had been passed by all the other roads.

"All very well," said the Superintendent; "but I can't see my way clear to give you a pass. If you were working for a farmer, and were to get hurt in his employ, would you expect another farmer to get out his team and take you to the next town?"

"No, sir," said the brakeman; "not that exactly; but if he was hitched up and going my way, I should think he was mighty mean if he wouldn't give me a ride."

He got the pass.

Grave-Robbing.

The recent robberies of the grave have brought up some curious anecdotes of the state of affairs which existed in England about fifty years ago, when "body-snatching" was a regular trade. So skillful were the robbers that they required but fifteen minutes to draw a body from the grave. No trace was left of their work.

One of these men, Burke, being in church one day, heard that passage of Scripture read which describes how Hazael killed the King by smothering him with a wet cloth. This method struck Burke as sure and safe from detection, and by it he committed many murders for the sake of the profit he reaped from the sale of the dead bodies. The devil can be found even behind a text of scripture by those who want to find him.

When Burk's murders were discovered, the English public was seized with a panic. One of the oddest manifestations of this craze was the queer devices of dying persons to protect their bodies from the resurrectionists. In Buckinghamshire a Major Backhouse, an old East Indian officer, was buried by his own orders in front of his house, on a solid pyramid of flint, twelve feet square at the base, in which he was placed upright, a drawn sword in his hand.

A Baronet of Yorkshire was buried at night ten feet deep in a level potato field, the ground being plowed up at once to remove all chance of discovery. Another country gentleman's coffin was swung to the branches of an oak tree in front of his hall door. Another was covered with twenty tons of stone, and still another cased in lead and hung to a beam of his own barn.

The terror extended even to this country, and precautions against grave-robbery were more common fifty years ago than now, when there is more danger.

There is yet standing near one of the iron furnaces of Kentucky a square brick building, in the upper room of which is the body of a former owner, by his own request, remained for twenty years unburied, the lower apartment being furnished and occupied by his wife and family as an arbor.

Cremation is just now strongly urged by its advocates as the only certain protection for the dead. There is, however, as yet but one cremation furnace in this country, a private one in Western Pennsylvania, built by Dr. Le Moyne, of old Abolition notoriety.—Youth's Companion.

Life in Mexico—A Cold-Blooded Massacre.

I am just in receipt of a dispatch from Guadalajara, State of Jalisco, containing the most startling news. Cold-blooded assassination has apparently been resorted to by the agents of the present Government to check the expression of opinion. The newly-elected Governor of Jalisco, Senor Riestra, a firm partisan of Vallarte, has decreed an extraordinary tax of 1 per cent. on all real estate and capital. That is to say, if a man owns lands that the assessors see fit to estimate as worth $100,000—probably twice its value if brought to market—he must at once pay $1,000. This, in addition to the regular onerous taxes. A merchant who may be unfortunate enough to have $500,000 worth of stock on hand—on which stock, within the last two years, he may have paid a heavy prestamo—must again hand over $5,000 cash.

Convinced of the injustice and hardship of this tax, the merchants of Guadalajara and other towns in the State telegraphed to President Diaz a protest, and asked for protection from the General Government. No answer to this appeal was received, however, and when this tax was being collected all who protested against it were at once imprisoned by order of Gov. Riestra. The merchants who had signed the telegram to the President were all imprisoned without delay.

On the evening of the 3d the people of Gaudalajara held a mass-meeting on the public square of that city to protest against these outrageous proceedings. The intolerant Governor, to convince the people of Guadalajara that they had no right whatever, either to hold mass-meetings or to protest against any acts of his, ordered a detachment of troops out of the Government palace. These troops drew up in line, and, without the slightest warning, fired on the peaceable crowd, killing in pure wantonness five of Guadalajara's prominent merchants. It is reported that one of the slain was an English citizen.—City of Mexico Cor. New York Herald.

A New Branch of Education.

One of the most painful incidents attending the loss of the Pommerania is related by an eye-witness in the following words:

"While the boat was rowing about we saw many people in the water with life-preservers wrongly put on, so that the lower part of the body was floating, while the head was under water."

This serves to show how commonly an erroneous notion of the way to use life-preservers prevails.

In these days there is no person who can be certain that he will not be exposed to the dangers of the sea. Travel, by water as well as by land, has become almost universal, and with its great increase the danger of accidents, like that which occurred to the Pommerania, is augmented also. Under these circumstances knowledge of the proper use of life-preservers may be the saving of many lives.

There are some practical matters of this kind of so much moment that it would seem almost worth while to make them a branch of common-school education. How to use a life-preserver might be taught in ten minutes, and the knowledge might be just the turning point between being lost and being saved, as it was to so many in this instance.—New York Sun.

THE PEDOMOTOR.

A Little Contrivance That Will Walk a Lazy Man Twelve Miles an Hour.

[From the Philadelphia Record.]

The newspaper carrier who serves papers to the attendants in the Permanent Exhibition building goes his rounds at the rate of twelve miles an hour. He travels on machines not unlike roller skates, which are called pedomotors, according to the inventor, Mr. J. H. Hobbs, an architect on Walnut street. The day is not far distant when the whole city will be on wheels—when pedestrians will be skimming through the streets at the rate of ten miles an hour without any more effort than is now put forth in perambulating half that distance.

The pedomotor consists of four tough, light wooden wheels, supplied with an outer rim of tough india-rubber. These wheels are secured to a frame the shape of the foot, which is strapped to the pedal extremities in the usual manner. Unlike roller-skates, the wheels of these little vehicles are not under, but are placed on each side of the foot, thus giving the wearer a good standing, as well as a solid footing. The rear wheels are three inches in diameter, while those in front are but two and a half inches. This gives the foot a slight incline, and, when in motion, has much to do in impelling the pedestrian forward. Extending from the toe, with a slight curl toward the ground, is a piece of casting termed the pusher, which is simply used in mounting an elevation or steep incline. From the center of the heel a small brass wheel extends backward, serving as a guide as well as a brake. The whole scarcely turns the scale at a pound weight. In using them no more effort is required than in ordinary walking. The wearer steps with his regular stride, and is amazed to find himself skimming over the ground so rapidly with so little muscular effort. Mr. Hobbs explains the mystery of the rapid movement in this manner: A man whose stride is thirty-two inches will traverse forty-eight inches, or one-half further, with the pedomotor. This is because the body is in constant motion. "For instance," says he, "the traveler starts, and, while he raises one foot to step, he continues rapidly onward until that foot is set down and the other raised to make another step. This gives him more momentum, and away he goes over two miles in the same time to accomplish a mile with the feet. No effort of the body is required for their use, as in skates. The traveler simply plants one foot before the other, and finds himself whizzed along at a lively rate."

Damp Buildings and Health.

At the International Health Congress, recently held in Paris, the evil effects of damp and dirt as promoters of disease and attendant misery were freely discussed. Speaking of dampness, a member of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain said that "incessant moisture and driving rain make their way through the solidly-constructed walls, while persons who inhabit cheap little houses are exposed to the fatal effects of our climate. Several years ago an English company discovered a peculiar deposit of silica, with which they prepare the petrifying liquid, the use of which may be intrusted to the most inexperienced workmen. It sinks into the walls with rapidity, and petrification takes place, so that the wall is covered with a coating impenetrable as stone. The wall may be washed. Should there have been contagious diseases or other infections, the walls may be exposed to destructive fumigations, or washed with antiseptics, without affecting the surface. The liquid is generally mixed with coloring matters that are not poisonous, or it is used in its simple state for the first coating, to which is added the silicate paint, that possesses the great advantage of not discoloring, cracking or having any chemical action upon metal, rendering it peculiarly suitable for buildings to be painted white, and, being nonporous, it does not hold moisture, and its attendant livery of dust and dirt that cling to our erections so soon after they have been painted."

THE celebrated trotters, Rarus, Sweetzer, Adelaide, Volney and Calmar, are now quartered at the State Agricultural Park at Sacramento, Cal. Trials of speed are taking place.

FARM NOTES.

SOME light soils suffer from certain manures as man suffer from alcohol. The stimulation caused by them is followed by an injurious reaction, resulting in sterility.

RIPENESS in sweet potatoes may generally be determined by cutting several and allowing the cut surface to dry. If they dry evenly white, without dark spots, the crop is considered mature and ready for digging.—North Carolina Farmer.

THE wicks of kerosene lamps should be changed frequently, or, if not too short, washed in strong, hot soap-suds, with some ammonia in the rinsing water. We think the trouble with poor light from kerosene lamps probably arises from the wicks being full of the sediment or refuse matter which comes from the oil, and that impedes the free passage of the kerosene through the wicks.—Christian Union.

HOW TO SAVE CLOVER SEED.—Cut the clover about the 15th or 20th of September. The usual way of cutting the clover for seed is to cut with a reaper set to cut very low, and to cut it off in small bunches. Then turn these bunches two or three times a day. Do not commit the common error of taking it in too soon, or the clover will be hard to thrash. The seed should be thrashed out with a clover huller.——Toronto Globe.

THE end of the potato nearest to the plant is called the stem-end, and the opposite the seed-end. At the seed-end the eyes are much more numerous than elsewhere. It is generally conceded that these are more excitable than the others, and consequently start first. In illustration of this fact are the experiments of Dr. F. M. Hexamer, of New Castle, N. Y. Out of 100 potatoes planted whole, 98 started from the seed-end. —New York World.

CLIPPING FOWLS' WINGS.—To prevent poultry from flying, etc., it is a common practice to simply cut the feathers of a wing; but these, unfortunately grow again. A plan much adopted here is to cut the extremity of the pinion, or tip-bone, about half an inch from the articulation. This maims the wing for life. The operation must be performed when the bird is four or five months old, and in the spring or autumn. The wound quickly heals.—Paris letter to New England Farmer.

TEMPERATURE FOR SEEDS.—Seeds are more easily killed by high temperature than low. Though no seeds have been known to germinate below 37 degrees Fahrenheit, they are, with few exceptions, destroyed by a temperature above 168, and many kinds perish below that point. They will not germinate above 128 degrees. Most seeds will stand the severest cold of the winters in this latitude, and wheat left for years in the Arctic region has been sown in England afterward, where it germinated freely.—Springfield Union.

MANY years ago a friend of mine had a dozen very large trees that were bearing heavy crops of apples every other year, so he took a long pole and gave them a heavy beating just as the fruit was about the size of hickory nuts, knocking off every fruit on the south side of the trees. The result was, as I saw for several years, that these trees bore heavy crops on one side one year, and the next year a heavy crop on the other side, so that for many years he had plenty of apples for home use every year. His trees stood in a rich soil that was annually cultivated—no grass sod to cover the roots.—Weekly Rural.

SOOT AS A MANURE.—To strong growing greenhouse plants, such as pelargoniums, fuchsias, roses, carnations, chrysanthemums, azaleas, solanums, and many others, soot is a valuable and easily obtained stimulant. A handful of it tied in a bag and stirred in a three-gallon can of water has a marvelous effect on all the plants just named, and on many others besides. It induces vigorous growth, and adds freshness and substance to both leaf and flower. It is better to use it in small quantities and often, rather than charge the compost with more carbon than the plants can readily assimilate. For the more robust growers, especially if grown in small pots, mixture with fresh manure from the cow-shed is desirable, but this should be allowed to settle before using, otherwise the grassy particles will remain on the surface of the pots, and, while giving them an unsightly appearance, exclude the free aeration which all healthy roots require.—Montreal Gazette.

Useful and Destructive Birds.

The State Entomologist of Illinois has classified the birds as to their useful or destructive capacities. All the American sparrows are named among the useful birds. The English sparrow is not noticed. Here opinions differ as to its usefulness. The exact place in such a list as the Illinois entomologist gives, which the English sparrow ought to occupy, has not yet been fixed. In the meantime we give the list as we find it.

To be preserved and fostered—Blue birds, titmice (chicadees), warblers (small warbling birds found on trees and in gardens), kinglets (ruby-crowned and golden-crowned wrens), nut-hatches and creepers (black, white and brown), wrens, martins (swallows), vireos (Greenlets), tanagers, finches, song sparrow, chipping sparrow, field sparrow, clay-colored sparrow, black-throated bunting, indigo bird, cardinal grosbeak, ground robin (chewink), blackbirds (crow, bobolinks, meadow lark and others), all the fly-catchers (including king-birds and the pewee), cuckoos, nighthawks (goat suckers and whip-poor-wills), swifts (chimney-swallows), all the woodpeckers except the yellow-billed—sphyropicus varius—(known in Central and Northern Illinois as the sap-sucker), and, perhaps, also the large red-headed woodpecker—Melanerpes erythrocephalus—plovers, prairie snipe (prairie plover), quail.

To be destroyed—Cedar bird, Baltimore oriole (hanging birds), larger owls, hawks and the yellow-billed woodpecker (sap-sucker of Central and Northern Illinois). This species is distinguished from the other small woodpeckers by its pale yellowish breast, a large patch of black upon the upper part of the breast; the throat of the male is a bright red, and that of the female is white; the adults, both male and female, have the top of the head also red.

Doubtful—The following birds, whose habits are not sufficiently known to justify full recommendation, and whose habits are sometimes beneficial and sometimes injurious:

Thrushes—Including the common robin, mocking-bird, brown thrasher, wood thrush, tawny thrush and hermit thrush. Shrikes—Including the great Northern shrike and white-rumpled shrike (butcher bird), Savannah bunting, crow, blue-jay, red-headed woodpecker, saw-whet owl, screech-owl, horned lark, orchard oriole and pigeons.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

BEFORE washing black and white cotton or linen dresses, or any of these dark colors, first dip them in salt and water and hang them in a shady place to dry.

MIX lightly one pound of Graham flour with a pint of thick, sweet cream; add salt, roll thin and bake as other pastry, and you will have a fine Graham pastry.

NICE BREAKFAST DISH.—Cold mashed potatoes, made into little balls, and slightly flattened; dip them into an egg slightly, so as to mix the yelk and white; roll them in cracker crumbs. Fry them in hot lard or butter. Send to table hot.

IF horse-radish be prepared in the fall, as follows, it may be kept all winter: To each coffee-cupful of horse-radish allow one table-spoonful of salt, one table-spoonful of white sugar, and a pint and a half of good vinegar; bottle and seal.

RAT TRAPS.—Rats and mice will go into a trap more readily if a small piece of looking-glass be put in any part of the trap where they can see themselves reflected. They mistake the reflection for another rat, and where others go they follow.

FRUIT or wine stains can be removed from woolen or cotton goods by sponging them gently—do not rub the goods—in ammonia and alcohol; a teaspoonful of ammonia to a wine-glass of alcohol. Then if needed the material may be washed.

A PIECE of red peopper, the size of your finger-nail, put into meat and vegetables, when first beginning to cook, will aid greatly in killing the unpleasant odor arising therefrom. Remember this for boiling cabbage, green beans, onions, chickens, mutton, etc.

HOUSE PLANTS.—Tobacco smoke—under cover—will be found an effectual remedy for aphides; but the larvæ of many other insects, especially of the tipula and the tenth-redinidæ, which occasions the wrapping up and shriveling of the leaves, can be removed by washing with lime-water, or hand-picking.

TO MAKE buckwheat cakes, mix one gill of wheat flour with one quart of buckwheat flour, add one large teaspoonful of salt, then add gradually a scant quart of warm water mixed with one gill of yeast. Let it rise all night, and then in the morning add a quarter teaspoonful of carbonate of soda, and bake immediately.

WASTING FLOUR.—A correspondent writes to the Christian Union: "How can I help wasting much flour when making bread, cake or pastry? So much is washed off the bread board or the cake bowl, and yet I can't see how it can be helped." Mrs. Beecher answers: "There is no necessity for wasting any of it. Knead your bread in the bowl till it will no longer adhere to your hands; then dip your hands in flour and rub off all the dough that clings to them. Sprinkle very little flour on the board, taking care not to scatter it, but keep it only where it will be needed. If the bread is properly prepared, it will require but little flour to finish kneading it after you put it on the board. Put a little flour in the bowl and, with it, rub off all the dough that remains, and work it in with the bread. Scrape off all the flour and such dough as may stick to the molding board, which should be very little. Put what is thus scraped up in the bottom of the bread bowl, and when the dough is raised enough, to go into the pans this flour at the bottom of the bowl will be light enough to work into the dough and thus be saved. When molding the dough to put into the pans, if you scatter flour or dough on the boards, more than you work in, scrape it up and put it in your yeast pot, and do the same with all adhering to the board when making pastry. By practice you will soon be able to make both bread and pastry and leave but very little to scrape from the board. All that sticks to the bowl in making cake should be scraped off with a thin-bladed knife and dropped into the pan with the cake."

Warning to Paper Stoppers.

A certain man got mad at the editor and stopped his paper. The next week he sold all his corn at 4 cents below the market price; then his property was sold for taxes because he only heard of the convention three days after it had adjourned; he lost $10 betting on Mollie McCarthy two days after Ten Broeck had won the race; he was arrested and fined $8 for going hunting on Sunday; and he paid $300 for a lot of forged notes that had been advertised two weeks, and the public cautioned not to negotiate them. He then paid a big Irishman, with a leg like a derrick, to kick him all the way to the newspaper office, when he paid four years' subscription in advance, and made the editor sign and swear to an agreement to knock him down and rob him if he ever ordered his paper stopped again.—Truthful exchange.

SABBATH READING.

A Christmas Hymn.

[The New York Evening Post publishes the following beautiful poem, written in the Chapel of the Manger, in the Convent Church of Bethlehem, Palestine:]

In the fields where, long ago,
  Dropping tears, amid the leaves,
Ruth's young feet went to and fro,
  Binding up the scattered sheaves,
In the field that heard the voice
  Of Judea's shepherd King,
Still the gleaners may rejoice,
  Still the reapers shout and sing.

For each mount and vale and plain
  Felt the touch of holier feet.
Then the gleaners of the grain
  Heard, in voices full and sweet,
"Peace on earth, good will to men,"
  Ring from angel lips afar,
While, o'er every glade and glen,
  Broke the light of Bethlehem's star.

Star of hope to souls in night,
  Star of peace above our strife,
Guiding, where the gates of death
  Ope to fields of endless life.
[illegible]
  Which the eastern heavens gem:
Guided, by an angel's song,
  To the Babe of Bethlehem.

Not Judea's hills alone
  Have earth's weary gleaners trod,
Not to heirs of David's throne
  Is it given to "reign with God."
But where e'er on His green earth
  Heavenly faith and longing are,
Heavenly hope and life have birth,
  'Neath the smile of Bethlehem's star.

In each lowly heart or home,
  By each love-watched cradle-bed,
Where we rest, or where we roam,
  Still its changeless light is shed.
In its beams each quickened heart,
  Howe'er saddened or denied,
Keeps one little place apart
  For the Hebrew mother's Child.

And that inner temple fair
  May be holier ground than this,
Hallowed by the pilgrim's prayer,
  Warmed by many a pilgrim's kiss.
In its shadow still and dim,
  Where our holiest longings are,
Rings forever Bethlehem's hymn,
  Shines forever Bethlehem's star.

Christmas Cheer.

It doubtless seems to many a straitened mechanic and business man, to many an eneconomizing, hard-working mother and wife, that lavish expenditure of money in gifts and goodies for the little folk would insure a great deal of happiness. But it is "a merry heart that maketh a continual feast," and a merry heart beats quite as often beneath calico as silk, beneath homespun as broadcloth. When we count all the little comforts of life, all the little blessings, and "roll them like sweet morsels under our tongues," the taste they give lasts a good while. When we spend dollars as though they were eagles, and rejoice in the positive good they bring, not allowing ourselves to think how much the eagle might have brought, we get the comfort of our dollars, but when we begin to compare our little with the much of some fortunate neighbor, then envy and discontent creep in, and we become incapable of happiness on any terms. The example of a "subscriber," who failed a couple of years since, may encourage some of our readers to go and do likewise. He has quite a family of children and had always been accustomed to make them handsome presents on Christmas day, but there was nothing the Christmas after his failure to buy presents withal. He called the family together and made this little speech to them: "Now, children, we're going to have a jolly time, anyhow. There's lots of evergreens in the woods, and we'll have the house trimmed beautifully; we'll have a tree and tie on it the rosiest apples we can find; you can ornament it with strings of pop-corn, and hunt up dainty bits of bright-colored silks and ribbons to make it look gay. Each one of you can find among your treasures something to give to each other, and I shall have a gift for each one of you." So the house was decorated, the tree handsomely trimmed and loaded with presents without any purchase being made. When the distribution came everybody was remembered, and the father proceeded to give to the children the furniture and fixtures. "This sofa, Mollie, is yours; this easy chair, Jane, I present to you; the parlor stove is yours, James;" and so he went on until each member of the family received a handsome present, and they were just as happy over their "savory stew," nuts and apples, as they were the year before over grapes and fruit-cake.

To many an aching heart the holidays will be the saddest days of the year. While making "vain pretense of gladness," there will be ——an awful sense

Of one mute shadow watching all.

But relief from even this "sense" may be had in the effort to increase the joy of unburdened hearts and lift the burden from lives yet more sorely bruised than ours. For we can always find a deeper sorrow than our own in some other heart. The life whose advent we celebrate was the saddest of all human lives, though, at the time, the most joyful, culminating in the deepest darkness and the brightest light. Our very sorrows may be transformed into crowns of joy; nay, will be, if we use them aright. The truest tribute of respect to the dead is love for those who, though with us now, may soon join the departed. Whatever vicissitudes of sorrow or joy sweep over us from year to year, the great fact remains unchanged—Christ has come, suffered, ascended, and lives our Representative on the right hand of the Father. Rejoicing as we should in this, all other causes of rejoicing will be in comparison trivial; rejoicing as we should in this, our delight will be to walk in His footsteps, and minister, in His name, to the naked, the hungry, the prisoner, the homeless, remembering His words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Economizing Fuel.

One of the great objections to ordinary fireplaces is that too much of the heat goes up the chimney, and innumerable have been the attempts to obviate that loss. Register stoves have been invented, and various contrivances adapted to regulate the draught and reducing the size of the flue. One method proposed was to light the fire on the top, and, after the first few minutes, as the heat spread downward, all the smoke passing through the upper incandescent layer was consumed, and so much the more heat saved, but the moment the fire had to be made up again all the advantages were lost. One of the latest suggestions to prevent the waste of heat was to form the bottom of the grate of an iron plate instead of bars. An improvement on that plan is a patent coal economizer, which has a hollow pierced cylinder rising from the middle of the plate. The air entering the cylinder from below the grate is thus conveyed at once into the center of the fire, and the heat, instead of rushing up the chimney in undue quantity, is diffused into the room, and coal is economized. The perfection of combustion is achieved when, instead of feeding the cylinder with the vitiated air of the room, it is supplied by a pipe communicating with the external air. And further, we are informed that if camphor or any other disinfectant is hung on the cylinder, the scent is driven into every corner of the apartment. So that a room may be perfumed, disinfected or ventilated by this contrivance when properly managed.

The Labor Depression in Great Britain.

A recent cable dispatch from London says: In the House of Commons the Home Secretary, answering the inquiry "whether it was true, as reported, that we are now face to face with such a crisis of distress as this generation has never known," said though much distress unhappily prevailed among the laboring poor, the description of it in question was exaggerated. There was nothing to cause unnecessary alarm.

He read telegrams from the head of the Board of Supervision at Edinburgh and from the Mayors of Liverpool and Manchester, stating that the ordinary means of relief were at present sufficient to meet all necessities. He had not had time to inquire into the condition of the coal and iron districts.

At Birmingham a meeting convened by the Mayor was held yesterday to consider the best means to relieve the distress which is declared exceptionally severe and increasing daily. The Mayor was requested to organize means for distributing relief.

At Sheffield 2,000 children and 3,000 adults received aid last week. The Mayor's relief fund amounts to $30,000.

At Stockton the distress is increasing, hundreds of families of iron-workers are destitute and an influential committee is canvassing for subscriptions and contributions.

At Stoke-on-Trent, great distress prevails, which is enhanced by the severity of the cold. The Distress Committee is unable to keep pace with the demands.

At Burslem, a meeting was called by the Mayor yesterday to take measures to alleviate the distress. A great want is being felt in North Staffordshire.

At Edinburgh a deputation of unemployed men waited on the Magistrates and asked for employment. The Magistrates authorized the street inspectors to give them work.

At Glasgow the depression and distress are unexampled. The streets are swarming with idle and starving men women and children. The Lord Provost and Magistrates are organizing very thorough relief for the most urgent distress.

A Dundee dispatch says there is much misery in that part of Scotland. No adequate measures for relief have been organized in the northern part of the country, where the fishermen and agricultural laborers are destitute.

At Manchester, Eng., vast numbers of the middle-class poor, who will not appeal to charity, are suffering keenly.

A Liverpool dispatch says it is many years since the working classes endured such distress and privation.

At Bristol there are large numbers of unemployed and much suffering.

At Wigan there is considerable distress among the better class of mechanics and workmen.

Wolverhampton reports much distress throughout South Staffordshire, and food, coal and clothing are distributed.

Purifying Water.

Different waters, like different diseases, require different treatment to purify them; and all waters, no matter how impure they may be, can be made quite pure for drinking or other domestic purposes without distillation, providing the proper materials be used and sufficient time allowed the agents to act; but, in many samples of water I have found distillation to be the cheapest and quickest mode of purifying them. All filters in use that I am aware of only purify the water from solid impurities mechanically suspended in the water. The following is a description of a filter that I have often used, which purifies foul water from organic impurities held in solution as well as from suspended solids. Take any suitable vessel with a perforated false bottom and cover it with a layer of animal charcoal; on the top of that spread a layer of iron filings, borings and turning, the finer the better, mixed with charcoal dust; on the top of the filings place a layer of fine, clean, siliceous sand, and you will have a perfect filter. Allow the foul water to filter slowly through the above filter, and you will produce a remarkably-pure drinking water. Before placing the iron filings in the filter they must be well washed in a hot solution of soda or potash, to remove oil or other impurities; then rinse them with clean water; the filings should be mixed with an equal measure of fine charcoal. If the water is very foul, it must be allowed to filter very slowly. The deeper the bed of iron filings is, the quicker they will act.

The above is a simple, cheap and very efficient filter, superior to any other that I know of, and, as it has the advantage of being free to every one who chooses to make it, I have not taken out a patent for it, and I am not aware of any other person having done so; I think I am the only person who has ever used it.

The foulest ditch water, treated as above, is rendered pure and fit for drinking. I may mention that I have made it a practice during the last twenty-seven years to boil all my drinking-water. It is the safest plan for a man moving from place to place. You cannot always carry a filter and chemicals about you, but can always manage to get boiled water. People talk about it being vapid and tasteless, but I am used to it and like it.—English Mechanic.

A PITTSBURGH Justice has decreed that a flag-pole in a public highway, even with the glorious stars and stripes flying from it, is a nuisance, and must come down.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Letter From Our Washington Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21, 1878.

Our grave and reverend Senators, and plain, unpretentious members of the popular branch of Congress adjourned on Friday, after three weeks of as hard and steady work as they have put in for many a session, and have gone home to spend the holidays among their families and constituents. It is hoped they will return to their labors, two weeks hence, refreshed by their respite from the busy cares of legislation, and prepared to enter upon the business of the session with the same vigor and earnestness that has characterized their work so far.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

There was some difficulty in constituting the committee, authorized by the Blaine resolution, to investigate the charges of fraud and intimidation at the late elections. Blaine himself positively declined to serve, and many other Senators have other business on their hands—that of looking after their own election. After much labor, however, the committee was finally formed as follows: Republicans—Teller, of Colorado, Chairman; Cameron, of Wisconsin; Kirkwood, of Iowa; McMillan, of Minnesota; and Hoar, of Massachusetts. Democrats—Bailey, of Tennessee; Bayard, of Delaware; Garland, of Arkansas; and Wallace, of Pennsylvania.

THE ELECTORAL SYSTEM.

Senator Edmunds' bill correcting the process of electing the President of the United States has passed the Senate, and the friends of the measure in the House will make an effort to put it through that body before the end of the session. The bill makes no constitutional changes, as I understand it, but simply defines the manner and process of arriving at conclusions under the circumstances on which the constitution is silent. The bill provides that the Presidential election shall be on the first Tuesday in October, and that the electors shall meet on the second Monday in January. The interval of three months is thought to be sufficient for the judicial settlement within each State of all the questions which may arise as to the validity of the result. The determination fixed upon in each State shall be final and conclusive. When Congress comes to count the vote on the second Monday of February, the bill provides that it shall require the concurrence of both houses to reject the vote of a State which presents but a single return, or to accept the vote of a State which presents more than one return. This last-named provision was embraced in the late Senator Morton's bill, which came so near passing a few years ago. Under its operation, had it become a law, Tilden would have succeeded to the Presidency in 1876, instead of Hayes. It is said that the Morton bill owed its defeat to Senator Thurman.

THE PUBLISHERS' BILL.

The Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads in the House has agreed almost unanimously—Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, alone dissenting—to recommend the passage of what is known as the Publishers' bill, classifying mail matter. This bill retains the uniform rate of 2 cents per pound for newspapers, magazines, and serials. It includes in this rate sample copies, and allows inclosures of bills, receipts, and orders for publications. Transient printed matter and books are rated at 1 cent for each two ounces, and merchandise is fixed at 1 cent per ounce, both of these being the same as existing rates. Advertising sheets are not admitted to register as newspapers, and periodicals are. The law in regard to packages weighing over four pounds is changed so as to allow single volumes of greater weight than the limit to go in the mail. Heretofore printed articles and articles of glass, such as microscopes, have been shut out of the mails. Under the new bill they can be carried, if so secured as not to injure the mail bags. Letter-press copies, and manifold copies, and copies from the type-writer are allowed to go as transient printed matter.

FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

A number of bills relating to the finances have been introduced in the House during the week. Mr. Lathrop offers a bill to place the silver coinage of the United States upon the basis of its intrinsic value. It proposes to make the silver dollar of 412¼ grains, and minor coins relatively of like weight and fineness; provides for free coinage without limit, and makes all silver coin legal tender for any amount when not otherwise specified in the contract.

Mr. Fort proposes a penalty of $1,000 to be imposed upon any national-banking association for each offense in refusing to receive or pay out standard silver dollars the same as other lawful money. The same gentleman offers a bill requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be exchanged, when in the treasury and when not otherwise appropriated, United States notes for silver dollars when presented at the treasury or assistant treasury in New York in sums of $1,000 or any multiple thereof.

Mr. Brentano has a bill to amend the Coinage act of Feb. 28, 1878. It proposes to limit the coinage of standard silver dollars to $5 per capita according to census about to be taken, and makes them legal tender to the amount of $20 for all debts.

Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, by resolution, calls on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to balances on the loan account standing to the credit of the treasury in any national bank on the 1st of March, 1876, or on the 1st of any succeeding month until January, 1879, with the names of such banks and the amount held by each.

EX-SECRETARY ROBESON.

The House Naval Committee has completed its investigation of the charges against George M. Robeson, late Secretary of the Navy, and will make its report, or rather reports—for there will be two of them—after the holiday recess. The majority, after summing up and reviewing the testimony taken by the committee, resolve:

That the acts and conduct of the late Secretary of the Navy, George M. Robeson; of the late Chiefs of the Bureaus of Steam Engineering, Construction and Repair, and Provisions and Clothing, in the sale and disposition of public property, in their method of making contracts, and in involving the Government in indebtedness over and beyond the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the navy, deserve and should receive the severest censure and condemnation, and that, in addition thereto, said parties, as well as all others aiding and abetting therein, should be punished to the extent of the law.

THE TOBACCO TAX.

There is a formidable lobby of tobacco manufacturers in Washington, working for a reduction of the tax on the weed. They have been holding daily sessions the last week, with a view of considering the various measures now pending for the reduction of the tax. They have succeeded in harmonizing their differences. All unite in a demand for a reduction of the tax from 24 to 16 cents without rebate or drawback to dealers, the reduction, if passed, to go into effect on the 4th of March next. The tobacco men throughout the country are greatly interested in knowing what is to be done this session about the proposed reduction. The House has already agreed to a reduction to 16 cents. The present opinion in the Senate is against favoring this reduction made by the House, upon the ground that it will cut off needed revenues. The tobacco men, however, are very urgent and may succeed in getting something done after the holidays.

CURIOUS CLAIM.

One Seth Miner, of this city, comes before Congress with a petition asking that he be paid out of the national treasury the sum of $2,847, as compensation for the loss of seven slaves, emancipated in the District of Columbia. The commission appointed under the District Emancipation act awarded him that amount, but, it being afterward discovered that he was citizen of Virginia when that State seceded, and that he had voted for the ordinance of secession, thereby debarring himself from the benefits of the act of 1862, the payment was withheld. He now states in his petition that he voted for the secession ordinance in a moment of weakness, and that, as he has been loyal ever since, he thinks he should be paid the amount the commission awarded him. The papers were referred to the Committee on Claims.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 2nd, 1879

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

Organize for 1880.

The Indianapolis Sentinel says the date of the commencement of the campaign of 1880 is no longer a debatable question. The picket lines are already engaged, and the crack of the sharp shooters' rifles indicate unmistakably that the time for the general engagement is not remote. We hold it to be self evident that no campaign, not even that of 1876, was ever more important. It is impossible for croakers all combined to dwarf the issue that will make the campaign one of the most notable in American politics, and it is equally difficult to unduly magnify the importance. In view of these facts the democratic party will be criminally derelict if it omits anything calculated to solidify the party, and give unity to the forces it sets in operation. Dismissing for the present the question of a standard bearer for the campaign of 1880, believing that the wisdom of the party will select the right man, the thorough organization of the Democratic party must be had in every state in the Union, if success is to be assured. "Political ideas," says the Baltimore Gazette, "do not accomplish themselves. There must be a party to carry them into effect. The ideas are indeed the soul, but party organization is the bone and muscle that do the work. Political sentiment grows strong by numbers. Numbers are only efficient through unity and unity is only attainable by organization and discipline. It is right that this should be so. There is always a large mass of voters who are neutrals or independent, or epathetics, who are attached to no party, and who vote with one side or another, or who do not vote at all, Zealous and earnest men who hold party ideas strongly by organizing and working together, influence this mass. The distribution of political documents, the party press, speeches, barbecues, processions and personal appeals that rouse the neutrals to a sense of the importance of properly casting their votes, and not only legitimate but commendable. There must be somebody to do these things, and the more earnest and more able the class of men that do them the better they are done. This is very well understood in England. Great Britain is governed by recognized parties under strict discipline and under responsible leaders. If a leader shows himself to be incompetent or corrupt he is shelved. So long as he displays ability, energy and good judgment he is followed and obeyed. The party in power considers it a duty to wield the whole force of governmental patronage and power to maintain itself in office. The tenacity with which the republicans in this country have maintained themselves in federal office is due to the compactness of their organization and their party discipline."

The initial steps for the organization of the party should be taken in Washington during the present session of congress, and the course mapped out should be followed throughout the country. The Gazette, from which we have already quoted, in its discussion of the subject, adds: "That there is a numerical preponderance of democrats in the country is beyond question.—That they can win it they form into solid column is just as certain, and yet it is said that Grant counts confidently upon a 'democratic blunder' to assure his own success. The republican caricaturists are fond of portraying the democracy as a donkey, kicking as soon as he gets harnessed to the car of victory, and smashing the whole concern to pieces. If there is any intention of beating Grant in 1880, the organization must begin now and be placed in capable hands, for the Grant machine is working steadily day and night. It is for democrats to stand close by their representative men and leaders. When they find them corrupt or when they find them using the party to advance their own selfish interests, let them be promptly dismissed and sent to the rear. But that is a little matter to be attended to inside of the family. The assistance of the enemy should never be asked in a case of this character."

We agree with The Northern Indianian, that the right way to secure permanent party success is to elect only such men to office as are above suspicion. That popular journal has resolved as follows. "Never again will we shoulder the battle of an unworthy candidate for the suffrages of the people. We own that in the heat of the political conflict The Indianian has helped some mighty mean men into office—has stifled its own convictions for the general good of the party, whose principles we love, and battled for the unprincipled villain just as manfully and as valiantly as it did for the one whom all knew to be worthy. This it will never do again. It will be fearlessly and independently Republican in all that it has to say, and if, in future "mighty mean men" get places on the ticket The Indianian will be very apt to express its convictions. We are publishing a Republican paper—a journal wholly and devotedly attached to the principles of that party, but the right way to secure the success of that party is to elect only such men to office who are—like Ceasar's wife—above suspicion, and refuse to champion the cause of one whom it is known in advance will be a load for the party to carry."

What the Newspapers say About Hendricks.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says the following from the Zanesville Times is a "mean fling at a great man." "The Indiana papers know of no great man but Hendricks. Outside of Indiana Hendricks is ordinary."

S. J. T.'s hand may reach over into the politics of Ohio and do dirt, but it won't work in Indiana. Tom Hendricks is as big a man as our Uncle Samuel, you see.—Newcastle (Ind.) Democrat.

Hendricks is the man, you bet.—Hamilton Observer.

Tom Hendricks is an unfortunate man. In 1868, he was counted out of the Governor's office, to which he was rightfully elected, and four years later was successful in his race for the same office. Two years ago he was counted out of the office of Vice-President, and, if history repeats itself, he will in two years hence be counted into some office at the head of the nation.—Columbus (Ind.) Democrat.

Without disparaging any man we can say that Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, is to-day the strongest man in the estimation of the common people we have in this country. As the Democratic candidate for president in 1880 he will defeat the best Republican "patriot" in the land.—Miami Democrat.

Hendricks quietly pulls the clothes over his head and lets the scheming politicians fight. He wants to enter the race for the Presidency as near a fresh man as possible.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Thurman's friends say he can't run for Governor, because he must have time to watch Hendricks.—New York Herald.

The following from the Fort Wayne Sentinel will apply to this county, especially to a certain well-to-do farmer, who, during last campaign asked and received money from almost every county candidate in the field, of all parties, pretending to be a great friend of each, and claiming to control a number of votes, when in fact he had no influence whatever. The Sentinel says "some of our exchanges—among them the Lafayette Journal and New Albany Ledger Standard—have been discussing since the close of the campaign, the dead best nuisance in politics. The subject is a timely one. There has been of late years an abnormal development of this odious humbug. The blackmailing of candidates is now carried on systematically, and by a lot of leeches, dead-beats, who would starve to death were it not for the sums extorted by them from aspirants to office, central committees and politicians generally. These men do not work. They loaf about grog shops and doggeries, talk a good deal and claim to have a great deal of influence. They assert that they can control all the way up from five to fifty votes, when ninety nine cases out of one hundred they can hardly control their own vote. These fellows are treacherous; they frequently take money from both sides, and work for neither and they really injure the man to whose support they are committed. The practice of spending money upon such a lot of political vermin is wrong and should be broken up. Respectable men of all parties ought to frown upon this class of fellows, and let them either starve or earn a living by hard work. They are at the bottom of the abuses in our political canvasses, and if the candidates on both sides would agree to have nothing to do with them and stick to their agreement our campaigns would be much more decent, clean and respectable than they are at present, and there would be better men, and less corruption in public positions.

Taxes may be paid in full, or in two installments. The first installment including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1879; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1879. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. penalty will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Road Receipts will not be received after the third Monday in April, only on delinquent taxes. No Road Receipts will be received on the November installment.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No County Order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday of February, 1879,

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday of April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipt will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

—In an article upon the close of the year 1878, the Indianapolis Sentinel says, "there has been harvests of boundless abundance as the results of a fulfillment of the covenant, symbilzed by the bow in the cloud, that seed time and harvest shall never fail. Peace has gained its triumphs in every part of the globe, science has made new discoveries, art has gained new triumphs, Christianity has built new outposts in the benighted nations of the earth, education has kept pace with the demands of society, books have multiplied, and the printing press, the newspaper, the art preservative of all arts, have lost none of their power, but are still the pathfinders of civilization.

In our own loved land, rock-ribbed and ocean girt, we have had during the year the priceless blessing of peace, and brave men are still batiling for grander achievements, as the result of a union of hearts and a union of hands. We have food in boundless abundance, enough and to spare, and we have statesmen and philanthropists of exalted wisdom, endeavering to so adjust the various interests of the country that all shall be able to share in the boundless beneficence of providence. The sun continues to shine lovingly upon the world, the stars are as bright as when they first sang together, the flowers have bloomed and faded, the forests have decked themselves in holiday attire and disrobed themselves for winter. The North, with its frigid breath, has hushed the music of the streams and decked its world as if for a bridal."

—The way that divorce suits are ended now-a-days is a great botheration to parties who have been cooing for several months and waiting patiently for her or his turn to come to trial. We have a case in this city where two have settled the question of becoming one, and have waited long and patiently for their trial to appear. The trial came off in an adjoining county and they returned to this city full of happiness with the anticipation of starting together during this very marriagebie weather as man and wife. But when the Judge sent her certificate of divorce it contained a little paragraph something like this. "That you are not to take unto yourself a husband before another year shall have passed." Now comes the ruction. The intended husband is on his dignity and swears vengence against this unmerciful Judge. The woman is of the turn of "Mary's little lamb" and willing to follow her intended. So matters have been arranged and before this reaches the eyes of the reader the tire of matrimony will be welded and a "codfish," will stand by her through thick and thin and allow no local courts, nor any act of congress to mar their happiness from now until time immemorial.

—There is a family in the lower end of town that is not "too honest to beg." The mother of this household was compelled to resort to the latter last week, and the good people of our city filled her basket to over-flowing. She was not as handsome as some women that we have read of in fairy tales but she had an honest look, a care worn countenance and was dressed tidy, although not very comfortably. She gave as her reason for asking alms that her husband and family had been sick for some time and the care of the family, and her household duties combined, kept her from seeking labor outside. A society should be organized to look after the poor of our city, and a committee appointed who will take a little interest in the matter and look up such unfortunate families.

—The Adams County Union in reply to our article on legal advertising in a recent issue, says it "never' made any proposition to publish legal 'ads' at one-half legal rates charged by McGonagle.' What do we know about "legal rates charged by McGonagle," we spoke of the rates allowed by law for publishing notices required by law to be published, and reply that law makes custom, and is supposed to be just. If reform is needed in this particular, go to the law makers and demand it. We made no reference to county printing proper such as books, blanks &c which the law requires shall be let to the lowest bidder.

Vanilla.

Steele & Price annually consume, in the manufacture of Dr. Price's Extract of Vanilla, more of the finest quality of Mexican Vanilla than any other makers of extracts, and it is by the use of the finest quality that Dr. Price's Extract of Vanilla obtains its rare excellence.

—The demonstration in honor of William Cullen Bryant, held at the Academy of Music in New York on last Monday evening, was attended by President and Mrs. Hayes, Secretary Evarts, Gen. Sherman, Ex-Gov. Tilden and many other persons of note. The address was delivered by George W. Curtis.

—Ain't it about time that the Butler Record should distribute that presidential ticket at the head of its editorial column? The Chicago Times, Indianapolis Journal and other "small fry" will have some other ticket shortly and then there will be a war between the Record and these papers which might injure somebody's chances.

—Now, if our young folks, those who profess theatrical fame, would arrange to give us a series of entertainments they would undoubtedly receive a fair compensation for their labor. We have the talent and all the necessary apparatus to give a first-class performance, but where the 'stick" comes, is that the young men have not the energy and go-ahead about them to start the ball rolling.

The P. Ft. W. & C. R. R. Co., a few weeks ago made a contract with Keene and his partners, the wheat kings of the east, for the transportation of 6,500,000 bushels of wheat from Chicago to New York and Philadelphia. Thirty trains of 20 cars each, making 600 cars are now passing over the road daily with wheat. At this rate of transportation it will take 33 days to haul the entire amount east. It is the greatest undertaking ever attempted in the history of railroads.—Columbia City Post.

Miss Emma Porter, deputy treasurer of Miami county and daugther of John R. Porter, treasurer, who settled with the state treasurer Thursday, paying in over $14,000, is the first lady who ever made a similar settlement. The account was correct, being one of the cleanest sheets offered by any treasurer in the state. Miss Porter has exclusive control of the office, and she is managing it with great credit.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Removal.

Miss Lydia Hogue has removed her millinery and dressmaking establishment to the north room in the new Ensley block on the east side of the public square, where she has just opened a full assortment of new goods in her line, such as fancy dry goods notions ladies hats, bonnets &c., all in the latest styles, which she is offering at greatly reduced prices.

In a separate apartment connected with her establishment is the stock of dry goods and notions formerly belonging to Mr. Lanning, which Miss Hogue is authorized to close out at ACTUAL COST. This is a rare chance for bargains. Call at the new store and examine goods and prices.

THE END.

A candle in its socket lying,
Flickering, fading, brightening, dying;
The autumn leaf fast rustling by,
A strain of music's latest sigh,
The summer wind's last, failing breath
A mournful tone that tells of death;
A fire whose embers scarce are burning
A spirit to its God returning;
A sun extinguished from its place,
A system vanishing in space—
Thus all things end save God!

Thus all things end! ah! said we so?
Can aught have end that lives below?
Is nothingness the end of strife?
And void the crowning point of life?
Annihilation? is there aught
Save madness in the monstrous thought?
We boldly say a thing is ending—
We mean some change is o'er it pending:
For matter changed, and changed must b
Forever, like some changing sea;
Thus all things change save God!

The year is ending, quickly flying,
Yet lingering still among us, dying:
With faltering footsteps, failing fast,
A few more days and then the last,
His books are closed; each broken vow
Recorded there against us now,
In fearful sameness there must stay;
Each thought, scene, now passed away;
Aye, past and ended though they be,
The end of all things we shall see;
But that end is not yet.

Where goes the candle when it dies?
The leaf, the music, summer's sighs?
A finished thought, a world, a death,
Where is the home of parted breath?
Where goes a year, an age, nay, thine?
Where is the end, the great sublime?
All, all but center round their Being,
The Great, Omnipotent, All-seeing!
Unending, and unchanged forever;
In vain the end from Him we sever—
All ends are hid in God!

AN OLD LOVE IN A NEW YEAR.

"Beastly climate!" ejaculated Mr. Alexander Loftus, as he buttoned his last glove, one foot on the sleigh-runner.

In the sleigh sat Ernest Loftus, his nephew, handsome, alert, point-device in costume from the new—not too new—hat to the flower in his button-hole, as became a young man on a round of New Year's calls. He laughed as he caught at the word, and the odd, twisted look of dissatisfaction cast by his uncle at the winter sky, blue and sparkling enough just then to please any but a returned China merchant. Mr. Loftus was not English, but long residence in the British atmosphere of Hong Kong had taught him to swear at the climate and use the national adjective as one to the manner born.

"Beastly!" cried Ernest. "Why, Uncle Alick, what would you have? Cold? To be sure; what else should it be on New Year's day? I call it tip-top weather for the season. Why, last year the mercury stood at ten above all day, with a wind like a razor. Jim Hemmingway and I started with a list of 120 calls, and by the time we got to the thirty-second we were so clean beat out that we gave up, and stayed on in the Eustises' rooms till after dark. Sixteen other fellows did the same thing. It was like a party. Our driver was stiff when we came out. We had to dose him with brandy, and rub him, and make him jump about, or he would have fallen asleep on our hands. You might have called that day beastly if you liked, but this—"

"Ugh!" was all Uncle Alick's reply. He tucked the robes comfortably round his legs; then, "Where first, Ernest, my boy?"

"Let's see. Here's the list," producing a formidable document. "It's made out by streets. Green, Gray, Abernethy, Winslow—Sixty-seventh street, driver, No. 12. These are all your acquaintances, uncle. I've saved my separate calls for the afternoon and evening."

So to Green's and Gray's, and on through the list they went, meeting everywhere the same unmeaning, would-be-cordial reception, the same set society smiles, the same salad, champagne and trivialities in the way of conversation. Even the servant in the white gloves seemed the same as he opened door after door. For the rooms, they struck Mr. Loftus as produced by machinery from a common model, costly, inexpressive, unhomelike. He was too recently returned to have become used to the universality of handsome commonplace things, and, not having much small talk at command (conversation does not flourish in the tea-gardens of British China), he diverted himself by studying the objects about him. Where did all those huge bronzes come from? and those monstrous pier-glasses? Why must all the carpets suggest the same general pattern? And was it necessary to have five sets of shades and curtains to each window? Surely sunshine in an American winter could not be so entirely a disadvantage as to require these pains to shut it out. He made these observations through an eye-glass perched astride his nose in what Miss Maude Jennison afterward called "a fascinating way, so foreign and queer, you know." There was a tendency among the young ladies of Ernest's circle to admire his uncle. Uncles from India are proverbially rich and interesting, on the stage and off it, and an uncle from China, with ascertained good looks and fortune, should hardly be less so.

"Now for the Brixhams," said Ernest, as they bowed themselves out of Mrs. Jennison's drawing-room. "You are looked for there, Uncle Alick. Miss Brixham was very impressive, and made me swear to bring you." He laughed as he spoke, detecting a tinge of red stealing over his uncle's manly cheek-bone. But why not? Youths may laugh, but if a man of 43 may not offer the tribute of a blush when a pretty girl pays him a compliment, middle age is even a more distressful state than has been reported.

The Brixhams' house was one of the largest and finest in the city. Mr. Loftus, as it chanced, had not entered it before, and he was struck by its space and air of superb luxury. Miss Brixham was "artistic," to use a word almost too hackneyed for repetition, and the rooms were crowded with pictures and bric-a-brac of her selection. Porcelain idols grinned from the mantel-pieces; Venetian mirrors repeated your face in detail from their glittering facets; jars and pots of every nationality filled the corners; ivory carvings, cloisonnes, Sevres, Limoges, illuminated missals, precious bits of this and that, crowded the tables; and everywhere, on the walls, the shelves, the slabs, were plates, plates, plates. There was all the rich confusion and something of the discomfort of a museum in the apartment, and Mr. Loftus—who had not "learned China" in the modern sense of the word, and hated bric-a-brac—after stumbling over an Egyptian water-cooler and a musical foot-stool, and bumping his head on a Palissy plaque, was glad to sink into a sofa corner, at a safe distance from all curiosities, and listen to his hostess, who looked unusually handsome that day, and who, as always, found plenty to say to the quiet Mr. Loftus.

Gertrude Brixham, in spite of some extravagances and exaggerations, was a superior girl. She had a genuine leaning toward the best things. Circumstances and education held her away from them, but the impulse and the struggle, which were fruitless of real result, had the educating power which impulse and struggle must always carry with them. She was wider-read than the girls about her, read more, thought more freshly. It was this which made her attractive to Alick Loftus, who had reached the age when more than good waltzing and a pretty face is desirable even in the partner of an evening. He had asked himself once or twice why he shouldn't fall in love with Miss Brixham. This afternoon the question rose again in his mind, and with more emphasis. He was able to marry, and desired a home. Why would not this handsome, capable girl make him happy? It was not quite the thing he had pictured when he was younger, but times were altered. The peaceful, old-fashioned home in his mind was probably obsolete, gone out of fashion with pillions and spinning-wheels. Certainly he had seen nothing like it since his return to America. Miss Brixham might be the next best, perhaps even a better, thing. Who knew?

He had time for these reflections during a few moments of solitude, Gertrude having been called away by a fresh influx of callers.

"You are looking at my jar," said Mrs. Brixham, following the direction of his unseeing eyes. "Is it not a beauty? Real dragon's-blood, and very hard to get now-a-days, even in China, I am told. You, with your opportunities, must have seen quantities, however."

"Well, no, not quantities," said Mr. Loftus, diplomatically. Mrs. Brixham moved away, and he fell to dreaming again.

Was it the word "dragon" which set him thinking of that almost forgotten time before he went to China? It was at Dragon, the droll little seaside village in Connecticut, that he spent the last summer. He wondered if the place was still named so, or was modernized into something different; if thin-shelled, flavorous clams and small, high-bred oysters with a taste all their own were still its staples; if big, pink-mottled, bell-wether apples still grew on the orchard trees, and whether Grandmother Meyrick made pies of them. Grandmother Meyrick! What was he thinking of? This was twenty years ago; her pie-making must long since be over. Then he thought of somebody younger than grandmother—of pretty Hope Meyrick, who had cut the last pie for him on that last afternoon, had mended the hole in his glove, and said good-by with a tear sandwiched between the two smiles and a blush like a rose. Pretty Hope! What had become of her? On that day it had seemed to the boy Alick that coming home to her was the best hope with which he went. Did he whisper a word or two of his hope? He could not quite remember. Three or four letters had passed between them, he knew; he had the neat, cramped, little notes somewhere among his things still; then, somehow, Hope and Dragon and all things American began to grow dim and strange, and till to-day nothing had come up to remind him of them. A plague on the dragon china! Mr. Loftus was unusually absent, Miss Brixham thought, as he wished her good-by.

"A penny for your thoughts," said Ernest, after repeating the same question twice over without an answer.

"Your offer is handsome, but my thoughts are worth more," said his uncle, rising from abstraction. "Where next, old fellow?"

"The fact is," said Ernest, glancing at his list, "the next is one of my calls, which I must make now or never, to save time and distance. It's Dickson, our junior partner, you know. He lost his wife in the spring, and his sister has come to keep house for him, just round the corner in Fifty-fifth street, and he asked me to call. It is a bore for you, sir, but you can sit in the carriage if you like. I'll not be five minutes."

Mr. Loftus did not like. The day was cold, but that did not account, nor could he, for the sudden impulse he experienced to enter the small house before which they now drew up. It was a modest dwelling enough—in size and build exactly like its neighbors—but, with the opening of the door, a sense of something different and comfortable struck his senses. Was it the snugness of the little entry itself, whose walls were tinted of a clear, warm red; the trails of ground-pine which swung from the picture-frames and gas-branch; the big white owl which, from above a pair of antlers, turned solemn glass eyes down upon them, or the unusual presence of a glass of roses, which sent fragrance after them up the stairs? Mr. Loftus could not tell.

Up-stairs they went, and into a small drawing-room. The same odd air of country freshness was there which had greeted them below. Nothing unusual, nothing costly; good tints in chintz and paper; a floor-covering of plain gray felt, with a couple of gay rugs; photographs, autumn leaves, growing plants in sunny windows, whose curtains were drawn back; and beside a bright fire two little children, with a litter of dolls and dolls' clothes, and a lady, neither young nor old, who welcomed them with quiet friendliness, pushed away a big work-basket, brought forward another chair, and made them comfortable without fuss or disquietude.

Ernest introduced himself; then, "My uncle. Your brother promised to be here to introduce me to you," he said; "but, like the rest of the world, he has been tempted out, I see. Have you had many calls to-day, Miss Dickson?"

"Two—counting yourselves," replied his hostess with a pleasant smile. "Let me show my welcome with a cup of coffee." She filled two cups from a cafatiere which stood before the grate on a genuine hob, and advanced a tiny sugar-bowl and cream jug.

"What delicious coffee!" said Mr. Loftus.

Miss Dickson half started at the sound of the voice, and looked straight at him for a second. Unconsciously he returned the gaze; then, coloring, and half embarrassed, he leaned over the table to examine a plate of green mosses in which small ferns and vines and minute scarlet berries were imbedded like a bit of mosaic.

"Straight from the woods," he observed. "One rarely sees anything so country-like in the middle of a city in winter."

"They are all of the winter-growing sorts," said Miss Dickson. "I dug them up at Orchard bay only a little more than a month ago, so they have not had time to lose their freshness."

"Orchard Bay? That is one the new sea-side places in Connecticut, isn't it?" said Ernest. "The Pooles were there last summer, I think. They liked it."

"Yes, people like it, I believe. There is an excellent hotel now, and good fishing and sailing. To me it is spoiled, for I knew it in the old days when there was no hotel, and no summer people, and no fine new name, and hardly anyone had heard of it except the few families who lived there. The place was delightful then."

"Is Orchard Bay a new name?" asked Ernest. "What was the old one?"

"Dragon."

"What a queer name? Was it your home, Miss Dickson?"

"I beg your pardon," with a little smile. "You are giving me a new name, too. Harry should have explained that I am not his sister, only his sister-in-law. My name is not Dickson. It is——"

"Hope!" cried Mr. Loftus, with a sudden certainty of recognition.

"Yes. Hope Meyrick. And I almost think that you are Alick Loftus."

The old friends shook hands warmly.

"To fancy that I should not have known you directly!" said Mr. Loftus.

"It is twenty years, you know. I did half guess you from the sound of your voice, but your nephew forgot to mention the name; and that it could be really you seemed so improbable that I hesitated to think so."

"Your grandmother?" hesitated Mr. Loftus.

Hope shook her head.

"Grandmother died five years after you sailed," she said. "And Julia, my little sister Julia—do you remember?—these are her children. We are all scattered now. My brother James is settled in Chicago, Tom in California; Susan—you never knew her; she was our eldest—lives in Pernambuco. I keep the old homestead still; but this winter poor Harry Dickson needed me, so I came to him."

"Uncle Alick," said Ernest, glancing at his watch, "I don't like to hurry you; but we have forty-four calls on our list still, and——"

"My dear boy, don't apologize. I've no idea of being hurried. Go and finish your calls by yourself. I shall stay here a while longer—that is, if Hope—Miss Meyrick—will allow me to do so."

"Pray, stay as long as you can," said Hope, cordially; and Uncle Alick stayed—stayed till dark, stayed to dinner, stayed through a long evening, and, homeward-bound at last, glanced at the still-lighted windows of the Brixham mansion as he went by, and muttered through his beard something that sounded like "An escape, by George! What an escape!"

That was last New Year's day. Alick Loftus makes no calls this year. He stays in his own house, to enjoy, as he says, the sensation of having a home to stay in. It is an ample, handsome house in a fashionable street; but all over, it, from attic to basement, reigns the same atmosphere of graceful use and comfort which made the dainty little rooms in Fifty-fifth street so attractive to their guest a twelvemonth since. No wonder; for the same hands preside, the same taste directs, and every day is made pleasanter and all life is brightened by the new-old love, which waited so many years for its reward, and whose embodied perfection Uncle Alick calls by the pretty name of—Hope.—Harper's Bazar.

Edison's Inventions.

It may be premised that the popular idea that Edison's invention is embraced in one or two patents is exceedingly erroneous. Before it is absolutely complete, it will probably be covered by thirty, or perhaps forty, patents. Our patent laws do not permit the embracing, in one set of specifications, all the details of a complex plan—each distinct feature must be patented by itself. This was the case with Edison's stock telegraph instrument, which, although not nearly so complex as the electric light, is protected by forty patents. It was also the case with his automatic system of telegraphy, the patents covering which number forty-six. His quadruplex telegraph, an apparatus a trifle in comparison with the electric light, so far as minute details are concerned, required for all its parts eleven patents. The various parts of the system of his electric lighting are probably as numerous and require as many patents for complete protection as did the system of lighting by gas, with its purifiers, gasometers, retorts and the hundred other appliances all going to make up the entire plan. Among the appliances of the electric light which will have to be secured, before the light as an entirety can be explained, are the improved dynamo machines, the regulators, condensers, switches and coolers, beside the different portions of the light proper and the various forms of conductors and lamps to meet the diversity in the wants of the consumers. When all these are completed—and not a day passes without a marked advance toward their completion—the electric light of the wizard of Menlo Park will be ready for inspection, criticism and use, but not before.—New York Herald.

FAST TIME.

Comparison of the Speed Attained by English and American Trains.

[From the New York World.]

An extract from the London Week, headed "The Fastest Train in the World," is challenged by a reader of the World, who wants to know whether there are not American trains that run at as great a rate of speed as the Great Western "Flying Dutchman" and other English trains which make fifty and fifty-three miles an hour.

At the Erie railway office the Superintendent said: "We have no trains that run at anything like those rates; our fastest schedule time is thirty-eight miles an hour. We ran at that rate between Oswego and Waverly, a distance of eighteen miles, and at several other points on the route, but that is our fastest rate."

Superintendent Toucey, of the New York Central road, said: "We don't pretend to run as fast as the English roads you mention, our highest schedule rate being forty miles an hour. Of course we get a greater rate than that in some places on the road, but only for short distances. Our trains are heavier than the English."

Mr. Sheriffs, the chief clerk in the office of the Superintendent of the Pennsylvania railroad, said: "I think we may claim to fully equal the speed of the Flying Dutchman on our road. Train No. 19 makes the distance from Jersey City to Philadelphia, ninety miles, in 110 minutes—over forty-nine miles per hour. We have to cross three important draw-bridges and pass through five cities at reduced speed to comply with their ordinances. Our train consists of a thirty-nine-ton engine and five coaches. The Flying Dutchman, I have been informed, consists of a thirty-nine-ton engine and four coaches, each coach being only about half the weight of one of ours. Their track is as level as a billiard-table and is inclosed for its whole length. We go between New Brunswick and Trenton, twenty-six miles, in twenty-seven minutes, nearly fifty-eight miles an hour, but for short distances on the route we go even faster than that; for instance, between Millstone Junction and Deans, a distance of 5.66 miles, we run in six minutes, and there are other short distances where we run at about the same rate. This is the regular schedule time, but between Menlo Park and Rahway we made on one occasion three miles in fifty-eight, fifty-five and fifty seconds. I do not, however, consider this as good work as that made by our regular trains, consisting of thirteen coaches, two of them railway postoffice cars filled with heavy mail matter, seven of them Pullman sleepers weighing twenty-six tons each, and the rest express coaches filled with passengers. We send them through from Jersey City to Philadelphia in two hours and fifty minutes. The English engine has a driving-wheel eight feet in diameter, while ours is but five feet ten inches, so that I think we may fairly claim to equal this Flying Dutchman speed, which is here stated as the "fastest in the world."

Anecdote of Mr. Lincoln.

Here is a story of Mr. Lincoln, which, we believe, has never been in print, and which illustrates his keen sympathy and attention to personal details, even when most oppressed by matters of national importance.

It was about a year before the fall of Richmond, when both North and South seemed tottering to ruin, that a young lady, who had known Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln for years, visited Washington. She was an exceptionally sensible, warm-hearted, refined woman, gifted with a marvelous voice and a graceful figure, but she was very homely.

She called at the White House, and, when she had gone with his wife into a private room, Mr. Lincoln expressed his surprise to a friend that "some good man had not been lucky enough to marry her." Adding:

"L—— herself would be much happier if she were a wife and mother."

A few moments later Maj. C——, a volunteer officer, thoroughly respected by the President, and a bachelor, came into the study. Mr. Lincoln looked at him thoughtfully.

"What are you going to do when the war is over, ——?" he asked, suddenly.

"Seek my fortune, I suppose," was the startled reply.

"There it is, in that room." A frank, girlish laugh was heard at the moment. "No, you can't go to see it now; business first. But there it is."

That evening there was a reception at the White House. The President beckoned to Maj. C——.

"Listen!" he said.

A lady, whom they could not see because of the crowd, was singing, in a voice of great beauty and sweetness, some gay song. The Major would have moved forward, but Mr. Lincoln detained him, his eyes twinkling with shrewd fun.

"Wait a bit," he said. "Don't look at her face yet."

Presently she sang a ballad with such pathos that the Major's eyes grew dim.

"Now go. She's as good and true as her song."

The good word of Mr. Lincoln probably influenced both parties. In a few months they were married, and the union has proved a most happy one.

"I did one wise thing in '64," Mr. Lincoln said, rubbing his chin, as was his wont when pleased; "I made that match."—Youth's Companion.

A Promising Boy.

A farmer's wife, in speaking of the smartness, aptness and intelligence of her son, a lad 6 years old, to a lady acquaintance, said: "He can read fluently in any part of the Bible, repeat the whole catechism, and weed onions as well as his father." "Yes, mother," added the young hopeful, "and yesterday I licked Ned Rawson, threw the cat into the well, and stole Hickey's gimlet."

Bashful.

He was rather a bashful young man, and was over head and ears in love. He could defer the momentous question no longer, so he stammered, "Martha, I—I—do you—you must have—are you aware that the good book says—er, says that it is not g-g-good that man should be alone?" "Then hadn't you better run home to your mother?" Martha coolly suggested. And he ran.

A Christmas Sleigh-Ride.

Mr. Frank R. Stockton was out late one Christmas eve when he fell in with an old gentleman who invited him into his sleigh. What then happened he tells in Scribner's Monthly:

The old gentleman pulled a bag from behind the seat, and, taking it on his lap, proceeded to show me some of the contents.

"They seem to be old-fashioned toys," I remarked.

"Yes," he said with a sigh, "these new-fangled affairs are of no service to me. You couldn't get a paddle-wheel steamer, with a real engine, into a common stocking. You'd ruin the vessel or the stocking. And there's scarcely a girl in the land who wears a stocking large enough to hold a doll's trunk, furnished with silk dresses, bonnets, and all the necessary underclothes. No, I have to confine myself to such things as bear a proper proportion to the feet and legs of children. There is one thing," said he, turning upon me his still-jolly old countenance, "that has had more influence than anything else in causing the general indifference with which I am now regarded."

"And what's that?" I asked.

"Furnace-heat," he said. "What sensible person, old or young, could expect a fellow with a bag on his back to come down a flue and through an iron register? It would be absurd to try to make even a child believe that anything of the sort is possible."

And then he put away his bag and took the lines again, with a look of resignation.

"It's all wrong," said I, "all wrong! The old way was the best."

"No doubt of it," said he, "but what can you expect? Everything old is changing, changing, changing."

"How about old furniture?" I asked. "That seems popular enough."

"That's changing, too," he answered. "Coming down out of the garret into the parlor. As to people in general, I scarcely know what to make of them. There will soon be no such thing as Christmas. Hereabouts it's losing ground every year, and New Year's day is taking its place. The jolly old Christmas festivities are almost forgotten, and the young men are satisfied to trot around on New Year's day and nibble cake and drink wine at a hundred different places, while the women sit and smile at a hundred different men—some friends and some strangers—till the day's done. What's all that to the grand old times we used to have? But, as I said before, what can you expect? There are men now who go so far as to assert that matter contains within itself the promise and potency of every form of life! Would you expect the children of such parents to hang up their stockings?"

"No," I said. "I don't think I would."

"Of course not," said he, with considerable asperity for so jovial an old fellow; "it would be entirely out of keeping. Go 'long, there! Get up, Vixen! Why, I tell you, sir, there are not half-a-dozen houses in that town behind us that I could get into. If you do manage to squeeze down a chimney, you're pretty sure to land in a kitchen fire, or in a cellar furnace! I hate furnaces! They're the invention of the devil, sir, and pure air and pure Christianity are dying out with open fire-places. Go 'long, you Blixen! I expect the next thing will be that the children will leave off their stockings altogether."

I saw that he was getting excited, and I did not wish to say anything that would further irritate him, so I simply remarked that he seemed to be driving faster.

"Yes," said he, whipping his reindeer into a smart gallop. "I'm going to a fine old farm-house that stands yonder in the valley. There the people know how to live. There are great open fire-places with grand old wood-fires in them—shining brass andirons, big back-logs and a merry crackling blaze. Hi there, Vixen! There the children have been playing wild rollicking games all this evening, and there they have hung their stockings by the big fire-place in the kitchen! Go 'long there, hi! hi!"

The old man was now in a glow of delight. He cracked his whip and shouted to his reindeer. The gallant creatures seemed to catch his enthusiasm, and they dashed over the snow at the top of their speed.

"Isn't this—rather—rapid?" said I as I clung fast to the side of the sleigh.

"Oh, yes!" he shouted, "this is the right sort of driving. This is the way people go when they want to get there. Hi! hi! Away with you, you rascals! There's the house, right before us!"

"Are you going to drive—on top?" said I, almost breathless from the rapidity of the ride.

"Certainly!" he cried. "But you needn't be afraid. I just take that shed first, then up to the roof of the kitchen, and then, clip! and away to the top of the house!"

At this he rose, and stood up in the sleigh, cracking his whip and shouting to his steeds at the top of his voice.

The reindeer dashed forward like mad—they reached the shed, they bounded up, the runners struck the eaves with a bang, and out I shot into a snow-bank.

Good Advice.

Says the Elmira Gazette: "No; don't learn a trade, young man. You might soil your hands, wilt your shirt-collar and spoil your complexion, sweating. Go hang your chin over a counter; learn to talk twaddle to the ladies; part your hair in the middle; make an ass of yourself generally, and work for wages that wouldn't support a Chinese laundryman on rice-fed rats and leave a big enough balance to pay his washer-woman—just because it is a little more genteel in the eyes of people whose pride prevents them from pounding rock or hewing wood, and whose poverty pinches worse than one of those patent cross-legged clothes-pins, if the truth were only told."

Something for the New Year.

The world-renowned success of Hostetter's Bitters, and their continued popularity for a quarter of a century as a stomachic, is scarcely more wonderful than the welcome that greets the annual appearance of Hostetter's Almanac. This valuable medical treatise is published by Hostetter & Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa., under their own immediate supervision, employing 60 hands in that department. Ten cylinder printing presses, 8 folding machines, 5 job presses, &c., are running about eleven months in the year on this work, and the issue of same for 1879 will not be less than ten millions, printed in the English, German, French, Welsh, Norwegian, Swedish, Holland, Bohemian and Spanish languages. Refer to a copy of it for valuable and interesting reading concerning health, and numerous testimonials as to the efficacy of Hostetter's Bitters, amusement, varied information, astronomical calculations and chronological items, &c., which can be depended on for correctness. The Almanac for 1879 can be obtained free of cost from druggists and general country dealers in all parts of the country.

LaMountain's Death.

Considerable has been said of late concerning the time, place and manner of the death of Prof. LaMountain, the aeronaut. Notwithstanding it has been only about five years since his death occurred, and notwithstanding the fact that his death was simply horrible to think of, and was given great pblicity at the time, scarcely any person could remember it. This illustrates how quickly important events even pass from the minds of the people.

On the 4th of July, 1873, Prof. LaMountain made an ascension from Ionia, Mich. The arrangements of the ropes before the balloon started were thought to be wrong, but the professor thought everything was all right. There was a tremendous crowd present. Immediately after leaving the ground the mouth of the canvas began to flap around with great violence. When half a mile from the earth, the balloon slipped between the ropes and was instantly inverted. The car and its occupant dropped like a shot. With the most terrific velocity, the unfortunate man descended, clinging to the basket. That he was conscious was evident from his struggles. He strove to raise the basket above him, evidently hoping to use it as a parachute. He succeeded in his object, but when about one hundred feet high he loosed his hold, folded his hands and arms before his face, and, feet first, struck the ground with a dull, heavy thud. Then ensued a panic among the multitude almost indescribable. Women fainted; men wept, and, to add to the confusion, the canvas came flying over the crowd like a huge bird. Some one cried to get out of the way, as it would fall with crushing force. At this a general rush was made for safety in which many were injured and some for life.

LaMountain was crushed into a literal pulp. Not a sign or motion of life was visible when his body was reached. Medical examination disclosed the fact that hardly a whole bone was left. Many were ground and splintered to powder. His jaws fell upon his arms and were pulverized. Where he struck there was an indentation made in the hard gravel ground of several inches deep. The corpse was laid out in the public square and was viewed by thousands.—Exchange.

Chewing-Gum.

Among the quiet little manufactures of the country is that of chewing-gum. Only one factory exists in this city, and the few others are in New England, New York State, Ohio, Illinois and Tennessee. The gum is sold by druggists, grocers and confectioners in cities, and any country grocery that hasn't it is considered incomplete. Gum from spruce trees was exclusively used until recently, when it found a rival in gum mastic, a white and attractive article made from paraffine, which is sweetened. The consumption of this chewing-gum in the United States is about thirty tons yearly; that of spruce gum somewhat less, and that of a gum made in Tennessee from balsam tolu, and sold in the Southern States, about twenty tons. Lately a material has been used styled "rubber gum." It is from the sap of the sapote tree of South and Central America. The sap, like that of the india-rubber tree, has a milky look The gum was first imported into the United States with a view of melting it with india-rubber, in order to produce a cheaper article than the latter. It was found to be impliable, and therefore useless for that purpose. It had long been chewed by South and Central American Indians, and found useful in allaying thirst. Experiments were therefore made here in purifying it for chewing, and with final success. It is tasteless, and has the merit of lasting longer than other gums, which more quickly dissolve and crumble in the mouth. So great is its ductility that a piece half an inch, long, after being heated in the mouth, can be stretched into a thread a hundred feet long. Its consumption is about fifty tons a year. Chewing-gum does not, like tobacco, require that the saliva shall be expectorated; it does not, like smoking, excite the nerves, nor, like a superabundance of food or drink, hurtfully overload the stomach.—New York Sun.

Diphtheria.

The papers received by the last mail from Europe mentioned the death from diphtheria of the Princess Marie, the daughter of the Princess Alice, and one of the twenty-six grandchildren of Queen Victoria. At the same time four of the remaining five children of the Princess and her husband, Prince Louis of Hesse, were seriously ill of the same disease. According to the latest telegrams, it has just broken out with great violence in the town of Geneva, New York, where, in the last week, thirty-two children, nearly all between the ages of 10 and 16, had died of it. This is another illustration of the theory, now thoroughly recognized in medicine, that new diseases, or new forms of an old disease, are constantly cropping out to tax the skill of physicians and stimulate all their ardor for the advancement of science. It is stated upon good authority that but little more than twenty years ago diphtheria, as a distinctive malady, was scarcely recognized among general practitioners. It then appears to have been almost entirely confined to a single district in France, and was called "the Boulogne sore throat." It soon appeared, nearly in its present form, in Norfolk, in England, then in Wales, and afterward in London, where it was, for a time, very destructive. In the few intervening years it has spread everywhere, attacking chiefly children, but not sparing middle age; and, to this day, there is a conflict of authority between European physicians upon the question whether it is a disease per se, or another and an aggravated variety of croup.—Globe-Democrat.

Too Much Appetite.

"And did you ever see the likes of it?" she called out, as she ran around the corner after a policeman.

"What's the trouble now?" he asked.

"Why, first the house caught fire; then our boy William broke his leg; then our boy Thomas got in jail, and then my husband began to fail in health."

"Anything more—is he dead?"

"Not dead, sir, but he might as well be. The doctor was around yesterday and gave him something to brighten his appetite, and he is this minute smashing the cook-stove because he's as hungry as a bear and we haven't even a cold potato in the house! I'd like to have the doctor arrested, sir!"

Six Charlie Rosses in the Field.

Although four years and a half have passed since the kidnapping of Charlie Ross, the father avers he has never given up the search. At the present time he says he is engaged in looking up six different clews. One of them is in Australia, and he is daily expecting a letter detailing the history of the discovery of the boy. There are two more in England, and a fourth in the mountain fastnesses of Wales. That the interest of the public in the case is not abated is manifested in the numerous letters which Mr. Ross continues to receive. On an average he gets a letter every day from some person who is certain he has seen a child living under suspicious circumstances or resembling the portraits.

In the course of his journeys Mr. Ross says he has found that a majority of these children are the offspring of people who have separated through domestic troubles, and have been placed in some out-of-the-way place by either mother or father out of revenge. Others are illegitimate children that have been sent away to hide the disgrace of their mother. The boy found in Bradford county last week, supposed to have been Charlie, was taken from his mother in Vermont.

Mr. Ross has almost arrived at the conclusion that his boy is not secreted in the country. He thinks, if he is alive, it is most likely that he is in New York, in some crowded tenement house, where the people are used to seeing children run around without parents. He said that he knew of one case where an Italian had a child lying on the fifth floor of a tenement that none of the other inmates had ever seen. He has not given up all hope, and says that every case presented to him, having the least sign of probability, will be carefully investigated.—Philadelphia Record.

New York City's Enormous Taxes.

One of the most lively places in the city last week was the tax office, where a long procession was waiting each his turn at the desk. On the first day of the month the usual penalty of 1 per cent. was added. The tax levy this year is $30,079,077.12, being a reduction of more than $2,000,000 since 1875, which was the highest rate. Forty years ago (1838) the entire valuation was $264,152,941. This year it is $1,098,387,775, being an increase of more than $800,000,000. This shows that every addition of 1,000 to our population also adds nearly $1,000,000 to the wealth of the city. You can see this ratio uniformly held during the last sixty years by reference to the published records. The worst feature in our municipal difficulties is the immense debt, the interest on which is more than $25,000 per day. Our asylums, reformatories and charitable institutions cost $3,000 per day, while the daily expense of the judiciary is nearly $4,000. Almost the same sum is required for prisons and almshouses. Education costs the city $10,000 per day and the imaginary cleaning of our filthy streets forms a daily item of $2,000. Even the tax department costs nearly $350 per day. Rather a large sum one might think for this item, but it is not surprising here. The police department costs $10,000 a day, in the way of taxation, while the amount of property stolen is almost equal, but of this our model police seem to have no knowledge. Their $10,000 a day is paid to have them "mind their own business." If you want them to mind yours they must be paid at an extra rate.—New York letter.

The Population of the German Empire.

The present population of Germany proper, or of all the territory comprehended in what is now known as the German empire, is estimated in round numbers at 75,000,000. Of these, according to a late census, 37,800,000, including 500,000 Jews, are Germans; 2,450,000 are Poles, 140,000 are Wends, 50,000 Czechs, 150,000 Lithuanians and Courlanders, 150,000 Danes and 230,000 French and Walloons. The Poles live exclusively in the East and Northeast of Prussia; the Czechs in Silesia, about Oppeln and Breslau; the Wends in Silesia, Brandenburg and Prussian Lusatia; the Lithuanians and Courlanders in East Prussia; the Danes in Schleswig; the Walloons in Rhenish Prussia, around Aix la Chapelle; the French partly there, and partly in the newly-acquired provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. There are in the empire twenty-one universities, of which the best known are at Berlin, Halle, Bonn, Erlangen, Leipsic, Gottingen, Heidelberg, Jena and Konigsberg. Fourteen are Protestant—that is, they teach Protestantism in the department of theology—the other departments of the universities are law, medicine and philosophy—four are Roman Catholic, and three—Bonn, Breslau and Tubingen—are mixed. There are sixteen polytechnic institutions, likewise; some 500 gymnasia or high schools, a large number of special schools, and over 50,000 elementary schools. The attendance of children at school for at least four or five years being compulsory in nearly all the German states, the proportion of persons who cannot read and write is exceedingly small.

NO FAILURES ARE RECORDED of the famous outward specific, HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE. It is invariably successful in healing sores, curing eruptions, removing proud flesh, and overcoming suppuration and inflammation. These sanative results it accomplishes without leaving any scar or discoloration of the skin. As a local application for chronic Rheumatism, sore throat and tightness of the chest, it is also highly spoken of. Sold by all Druggists.

"BRILLIANT and impulsive people," said a lecturer on physiognomy, "have black eyes; or, if they don't have 'em, they're apt to get 'em, if they're too impulsive."

"What Are You Going to Do About It?"

Because the penalties of physiological laws are not executed speedily, some fancy they are void. But when the system breaks down, and almost hopeless complications arise, which the family physician, by reason of his limited experience, fails to relieve, the pertinency of the above inquiry is apparent. Many remedies have been specially prepared for these cases, and many physicians are bidding for their patronage. As before making a purchase of land, a "search" is required, and the title carefully examined, so invalids should carefully investigate the claims of any physician offering to treat chronic diseases. Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines are well known, and have effected many cures where eminent physicians have failed, yet to accommodate surgical and complicated cases, and those desirous of being restored speedily, Dr. Pierce has erected an elegant sanitarium, at a cost of nearly half a million dollars. No institution in the world offers advantages superior to those found in this establishment. Half a score of physicians are in attendance, several of whom have been prominently connected with leading American and European Hospitals. Every improved facility for hastening a cure that a liberal expenditure of money could secure can here be found. Before fully deciding where to go, address Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel, for circular.

CAN you any longer doubt when we bring you such positive testimony as this that Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is a cure for Heart Disease:

Mr. Ingalls:—In 1862 I was troubled with a derangement of my heart; was so I could do no work; took various remedies, with but little relief; procured a bottle of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, and one bottle did what other remedies failed to do—removed the trouble; and since 1862 have had no return of the trouble. You are at liberty to use this if you wish.
MRS. W. O. WELLS.

Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, &c.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

A WONDERFUL discovery. Freckles, Pimples, Moth, Sallowness, Tan, Black Heads, Blotches, Rough Skin, etc., positively cured by Mrs. Shaw's Moth and Freckle Lotion. By druggists, $1. Particulars free. Address Mrs. Dr. L. K. Shaw, 140 E. 28th St., N. Y. Mrs. Shaw's Liver Pill—best in the world.

FOR upward of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

NEGLECTED COUGHS AND COLDS.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "Common Cold" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES," if neglected, often works upon the lungs.

VALUABLE information—Johnson's Anodyne Liniment will positively prevent diphtheria, that most to be dreaded of all dreadful diseases. Don't delay a moment; prevention is better than cure. No family should be without the Anodyne in the house.

TO PARTIALLY atone for our many sins during the year now closing, we wish to expose a fraud. We refer to the large packs of horse and cattle powders now sold. Sheridan's are absolutely pure and immensely valuable. This statement is true.

MASON & HAMLIN Cabinet Organs are furnished, for cash, from $54 each, upward; every one being of the same highest excellence.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and Others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Seasickness, taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see oath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it but continues to do so, many stating if it was Ten Dollars a Bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of Certificates can be seen at the Depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the Druggists at 40 cts. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York.

THE NEW YORK SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the Truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper of the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, or for the poor man against the rich man, but it seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect, or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogues every time. It is for the honest Democrat as against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Republican as against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated it speaks out for the right. That is THE SUN'S idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds, and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879 than in 1878, 1877, or any year gone by. THE SUN is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly with the affairs of to-day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest, and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases, and to expound, according to its well-known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an important part of THE SUN'S work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN as a political, a literary and a general newspaper more entertaining and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid. The SUNDAY SUN, in addition to the current news, presents a most entertaining and instructive body of literary and miscellaneous matter, in bulk twice as great and in value not inferior to that of the best monthly magazines of the day, at one tenth of their cost.

The WEEKLY SUN is especially adapted for those who do not take a New York daily paper. The news of the week is fully presented, its market reports are furnished to the latest moment, and its agricultural department, edited with great care and ability, is unsurpassed. The WEEKLY SUN is probably read to-day by more farmers than any other paper published. A choice story, with other carefully prepared miscellany, appears in each issue. The Weekly protects its readers by barring its advertising columns against frauds and humbugs, and furnishes more good matter for less money than can be obtained from any other source.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free. Address
I. W. ENGLAND,
Publisher of THE SUN, New York City.

CATARRH
Is a terrible disease. Its fearful effects are corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. Thousands suffer with this disease without knowing its nature or the great danger in neglecting it. Many thousands are dying with consumption who a few years or months before had only catarrh.
CONSUMPTION The terror of humanity that yearly carries thousands to an untimely grave, not sparing the young, the talented, nor the beautiful.
ASTHMA which makes life so miserable that its victims are almost ready to accept the advice of Job's wife, "Curse God and die."

CARBOLATE of TAR
INHALANTS IS PLEASANT, THOROUGH, AND SUCCESSFUL. SATISFACTION always GUARANTEED.
Balsams and cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar that the mere breathing vaporizes them into a dense smoke. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased part. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. As the oils and balsams condense on the multitudinous air vesicles of the lungs their capacity is wonderfully enlarged and the hollow chest in a few weeks becomes rounded and full. To cases of consumption beyond the possibility of cure the Inhalants give great relief, and in many instances cure cases considered hopeless by all who know them.
CATARRH, so very difficult to treat, and so seldom cured by other methods, readily yields to this treatment, by breathing the vapor and forcing it into the diseased cavities of the head and out of the nose. It is now fully demonstrated that inhalation is the only method by which this terrible and almost universal disease can be permanently cured.
COMMENDATIONS "Your methods of treating Catarrh and Consumption are certainly very effectual. In hemorrhages of the lungs I have never found a remedy that equals your Carbolate of Tar Inhalants. So-called 'hopeless cases' need not despair."—CHAS. HAMILTON CASE, M. D., Louisville, Ky. "My lungs were very sore and cough distressing. Both are now greatly relieved, and I am so well pleased with your Carbolate of Tar Inhalant that I would not part with it at any price."—J. J. BENNINGTON, 2306 Elm Street, Philadelphia. "For throat or lung diseases, Dr. Case's Carbolate of Tar Inhalant is decidedly efficacious. I have observed the most happy results follow its use when all other means had failed to give relief."—I. H. MOORE, M. D., Phila., Pa.

—"Financial Views."—Looking through a broker's window at the cash inside.

—An Iowa man has named his daughters Time and Tide, so they will wait for no man.

—It is said that the mail in Colorado arrives on time when the carriers are chased by Indians.

—A parrot is said to live to be 200 years old A barber does not live so long, but he talks more.

—For a sharp paper and one full of good points, nothing beats a paper of pins, unless it is one of needles.

—Young mother: "What do children say when they get candy?" Infant recipient of confections: "More!"

—"Debt" remarks Josh Billings, "is a trap which a man sets andbaits himself, and then deliberately gets into it.

—Some people maintain that a high hat doesn't become all men but it seems to us that a "stove-pipe" ought to soot everybody.

—"I say, waiter, I've just cracked this egg. Look at it." Waiter: "Don't look very nice at that end sir, I must say. Try the other."

—Little boy at the opening of a proposed spelling match—"Let's start fair, grandmother. You take 'Nebuchadnezzar,' and I'll take 'cat.'

—An old proverb says that "the anvil lasts longer than the hammer." This is probably the only consolation the undermost man in a fight has.

—A Nevada politician was elected on the merits of a single speech. All he said was, "Fellow-countrymen, follow me to yonder refreshment saloon!"

—Cincinnati claims to be one of the most intellectual cities in the Union. The business done in pork there at once explains her familiarity with the "pen."

—A doctor's natural ability ceases when out hunting. On such occasions, whether among birds or animals, he can't kill any more than an ordinary man.

—"You want a flogging—that's what you want," said a parent to an unruly son. "I know it, dad: but I'll try to get along without it," returned independent Hopeful.

—"Can I ask a few questions concerning the celebrated Damascus steel?" is the way a correspondent begins his letter. "Certainly; we don't care a Damascus anything you want to."

—"Is that the second bell?" inquired a gentleman of a colored porter. "No, sah," answered the porter, "dat am de secend ringin' ov de fust bell. We hab but one bell in dis establishum."

—About three million pins are made every day in this country, but let a young fellow jab one into his arm while measuring a girl's waist some moonlight night in the interests of science, and he never thinks of the other two million and odd.

—A Scotch nobleman one day visited a lawyer at his office, in which at the time there was a blazing fire, which led him to exclain, "Mr. X. your office is as hot as an oven" "So it should be, my lord," replied the lawyer—"it is here I make my bread."

—"Teddy, me boy,' said an Irishman to his nephew, 'jist guess how many cheese there is in this here bag, an faith I'll give ye the whole five." Five, answered Teddy. "Arrah, by my sowl, bad luck to the man that tould ye!" exclaimed the uncle.

One day a little shepherd boy was seated near the road-side on the way from Vespignan to Florence, drawing upon a polished stone. his only pencil another polished stone which he held in his tinny hands. A richly dressed stranger, who had decended from a conveyance that was following, chanced to pass, and looking over the boys shoulder, saw that he had sketched with wonderful truth and correctness a sheep and its twin lambs. Surprised and pleased, he examined the face of the young artist. Certainly it was not its beauty that attracted him. The child looked up, but with such a marvelous, vivid light in his dark eyes that the stranger exclaimed: "My child, you must come with me; I will be your master and your father. It is some good angel that has led me here." The stranger was Cimabue, the most celebrated painter of that day; and his pupil and protege became the famous painter, sculptor, and architect, Giotto, the friend and admirer of Dante and Petrarch.—Ex.

"My son, you should rise with the sun," said the old gentleman, knocking at the door. "Governor," mumbled a youthful voice from under the bed clothes, "I fear you never studied the Copernican theory—the sun does not rise or otherwise move." "Well, it don't need books to tell me that is true of my son!" replied the blunt paternal, turning away. And the young collegian concluded that possibly "the old man" was naturally just about as smart as his boy.

FEMININITIES

—The bearing and training of a child is woman's wisdom,

—Friendship between woman is only a suspension of hostilities.

—Men who avoid female society have dull conceptions and gross tastes.

—At the present time the fashionable drink of the English female aristocracy is gin.

—A man's loving heart can sow the most desert female face with flowers of beauty.

—"Take away women," asks a writer, "and what would follow?" That's easy. The men.

—The Czar of Russia has the baggage of ladies visiting his empire examined by female inspectors.

—When a lady and a gentleman are well acquainted, politeness does not require the lady to speak first.

—Why is a drunkard like a vain young lady? Because he is never satisfied with a moderate use of the glass.

—Parlor matches don't go off any better, though they make more fuss than those made over the front gate.

—One of the printed rules in a female seminary is, that none of the pupils shall eat slate pencils, chalk, soapstone or coal.

—Woman's body is like the pearl oyster; whether it be brilliant or rough, the pure white pearl within alone gives it value.

—A young girl generally loses her freshness by mingling with fashionable society, as a bright stream does by mingling with the sea.

—When the blossoms and leaves of a woman's beauty fall, we may discover her defects, as we behold ravens' nests in the trees in winter.

—A correspondent says the worst tyrant in the world is the woman who thinks she is superior to her husband, and lets everybody know it.

—Benjamin West said it was a kiss from his mother made him a painter. How our fashionable young ladies must have been kissed by their mammas!

—Love may be blind, as they say but we notice that in all the records of the ages it has never kissed the girl's mother by mistake when it reached the girl.

—The golden everlasting chain described by Homer as reaching from heaven to earth, and embracing the whole moral world, was no fable. The chain is love.

—A lady in the northern part of Herkimer county, N. Y., was so frightened at the appearance of a snake in her path, that her hair, which was a glossy black, turned to white.

—One of the wise men who know everything declares that in the course of two or three generations American women will be taller than the men. They look down upon the men nowadays.

—"I curse the hour we were married! exclaimed an enraged husband to his better half. To which she mildly replied. "Dont my dear, for that was the only happy hour we have ever seen.

—Teacher—Now what is the meaning of the word chasm? Pupil—It is an opening. Teacher—Favor me with an example. Pupil—The milliners have a chasm at the begining of the season.

—He lives in the country, and he wanted to get married, but his remark was applicable even unto the youth of the city: "I can almost support myself now, and it must be a mighty poor sort of a woman that can't do the rest." Is there a father and a mother who wishes to take another boarder?

—A widower had five grown daughters who wouldn't let him take a second wife. He gave up the wife but bought a savage dog, and now won't allow a man to cross his door-sill. If he can't marry, the girls shan't, he says. But the girls must give in by-and-by. They can't stand that sort of thing forever.

GEMS OF BEAUTY.

—How rarely do we accurately weigh what we have to sacrifice against what we have to gain.

—No cord or cable can draw so strong or bind so fast as love can do with only a single thread.

—Politeness is like an air cushion. If there be nothing in it, it eases our joints wonderfully.

—Dewdrops at night are diamonds at morning, so the tears we weep here may be pearls in heaven.

—The discovery of what is true and the practice of what is good, are the most important objects of life.

—Think twice before you believe every evil story you hear, and think twenty times before you repeat it.

—He that keeps his promise to his own advantage only, is scarcely more bound than if he had promised nothing.

—The narrow-minded ask, "is this one of our tribe, or is he a stranger?" But to those who are of a noble disposition, the world is but one family.

—There is an emanation from the heart in genuine hospitality which cannot be described, but is immediately felt, and puts the stranger at once at his ease.

—There is no worse man in society than he who by slander and defamation of good men's names, seeks to elevate himself at the expense of truth and justice.

—A true religious instinct never deprives man of one single joy: mournful face and a somber aspect are the conventional affections of the weak minded.

—Generosity during life is a very different thing from generosity in the hour of death. One proceeds from genuine liberality and benevolence, the other from pride or fear.

—Unselfish and noble acts are the most radiant epochs in the biography of souls. When wrought in the earliest youth they lie in the memory of age like coral islands, green and sunny amidst the melancholy waste of ocean.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

Ranch and Range—Texas Cattle and Bronchos—Branning and Breaking—The "Round Up."

SILVER CLIFF, COL., Dec. 28, '78.

DEAR COURIER:—Westward from this city, stretching far away to the foot of the distant mountains whose peaks rise sombre-like in the perspective, lies one of the most beautiful valleys known in the state. Its picturesque border of mountain ranges hemming it in on all sides; its undulating surface gently sloping back to the base of the mountains; its streams of pure crystal water, fed from streams that pour their torrents down the mountain sides; its extensive ranches and herds of cattle, go to make up a scene as lovely and interesting as heart could desire. Though snow lies deep upon its bosom, its quiet repose is in grand contrast to the rugged peaks and spurs that line it on all sides. And in the summer time when nature robes it in a carpet of green and numerous wild flowers give forth their beauty and fragrance to the scene, and balmy breezes float in laden with perfume, it is said to be so intensely charming as to captivate the most unromantic. Mounting a broncho the other morning I started down this beautiful valley, and, though the air was crisp with frost and the snow cracked under the feet of the mettlesome mustang, I found the ride an enjoyable one. Halting at the ranch of my friend Mr. Beckwith, the cattle king of the valley, I was introduced into the mysteries of cattle raising and broncho training.

Mr. Beckwith came here from Philadelphia in 1859 with a capital of $40,000, and was the first person who had the nerve to utilize this valley as a stock range. Purchasing a lot of Texas cattle he drove them into the valley and found that they sustained themselves in good condition on the pasture of the valley during the winter. Though snow fell at times to a considerable depth in the valley proper, the uplands and foothills with a south exposure to the sun remained bare, and afforded all the pasturage needed. The grass grows in short heavy tufts, which is very sweet and nutritive, requiring a much less quantity to sustain life than the grasses of Indiana. Though snow has lain for several weeks here, the cattle are in good condition, and are taken from the range to the slaughter house, making the best of beef. Mr. Beckwith has now about 15,000 head of Texan and halfbreeds, worth from $15 to $20 each. They are allowed a range of twenty miles from the corral, which is located near his residence. In early summer the "round up" takes place, which occurs generally about the first of June. All persons having cattle on the range within a certain area, gather together and encircling the boundary, drive the cattle together, and herd them near the different corrals. Now the work of claiming begins, and a dangerous work it sometimes proves. The cattle are in a wild, untamed state, and often stampede and break away from the herders They cannot be approached but on horseback, and often give the bronchos a close race to escape their fiery impetuosity. The gates of the corral are opened and by dexterous driving the cattle are inclosed therein. Owners stand by and by their brands recognize their property, and when no brand is found he is claimed by the owner of the corral by the general law of custom. The next thing is to brand them. A man enters the enclosure on horseback, and, with lasso in hand, which he knows how to use, trips the animal by catching him around the fore legs. It falls and a seething, hot iron is placed upon the shoulder or hip, imprinting the brand desired. After the full grown animals are attended to the "margericks" come in for their share of attention. A maverick is a yearling calf, which, having left its mother, wanders with the herd. It is common property, and he who secures it first with a brand becomes its owner. Sometimes, they have two round-ups each year, one occurring in the fall. While it requires several days hard riding to herd these cattle ranging over miles and miles of territory, it is, nevertheless, a season of sport, something like a fox hunt in DeKalb county, only more so. I witnessed one of these affairs last week on a small scale. I saw a broncho gored to death and the rider barely escaping with his life. Sometimes these wild devils will stampede in the corral, and making a rush, will raise a stoutly built fence on their immense horns and dart away across the prairie. Often a bullock plunging into a gopher hole will fall in the front and over and over he goes, carried on by the impetus of the rushing herd, and maybe left in the rear a bruised and bleeding carcass. There is a wild excitement about these affairs that is perfectly facinating, especially to the spectator unused to such scenes and comfortably located in a place of safety. I have an idea they approximate a Spanish bull fight as near as anything else on earth. But if there is anything more full of danger, fun and excitement it is the breaking of the broncho. Here is your fiery, untamed steed that has never felt a halter or tasted an oat. Unused to the ways of man, full of fire and vinegar, and capable of desperate resistance. He can stand great exertion, and possesses wonderful powers of endurance. It is difficult to bring him under complete subjection, and if let run for awhile, is as wild as ever. He is of Mexican blood, small, lithe, compactly built, and very active. Owing to the light air horses from the states cannot stand the services, and the broncho is greatly used. When summer comes they are brought in off the ranges, corralled and the fun begins. They are chased around the pen by a horseman with a lasso, and as they lift their front feet to spring forward, a dexterous throw of the lariat catches them around the knees, and down they come. He is held there until a bridal and saddle is placed upon him, and a broncho rider at hand mounts him before he is fairly up and out the gate they go, plunging, raring, and twisting in every conceivway. When no other way will do he will lie down and roll over, and it requires an experienced rider to keep on his back. They will wait a whole day for a chance to throw their riders, but often make the best saddle beasts. When they get to bucking they are almost valueless, as they never forget a trick. I was told by a hunter that on one occasion he had killed an antelope and throwing the carcass on his horse, mounted and started for camp when the horse commenced bucking with him, he lashed the antelope strongly to the saddle, and starting the horse left him to his fate. The horse commenced to buck, and the next day he found him dead, in his efforts to free himself from the carcass.

I see by the Waterloo Press that I am to be on the Governor's staff in this State. Well, that's not so bad, but that officer has not intimated such an intention to me. It is better however than Weamer's item that the "old liners" always thought me a Republican at heart. You may say that sometimes these "old liners" are "old liars," though I suspect it was Weamer's fertile imagination that originated such a statement. I have realized no change of heart in politics, and am still a Democrat. No petty office can induce me to leave the grand old party, and defeat does not rouse me to the extent that I would accept a menial position six months after I had been in a Democratic Convention. I talk Democracy here straight out and all know where I stand, though employed by a man who is running a Republican newspaper. When I become tired of Democracy, I want some other refuge besides the corruption that has followed the Republican party for years past, some party which does not propose to take up a man for a third term who has accepted bribes and pardoned whisky thieves. I have never wavered in my faith of Democracy, such Democracy as is found in Fairfield township, pure, uncompromising and always voting the straight ticket. TOM.

A Lower Rate of Interest.

Indiana Farmer.

So general is the demand for a lower rate of interest that it is highly probable that an act in this direction will be among the first that will be passed by our Legislature. It is conceded on all hands that 10 per cent. is more than can be earned by the use of money in most kinds of legitimate business at this time. It is unreasonable and unjust that money should make more for its owner without his efforts, than the business which it helps to carry on makes for the business man, with all his time and energies in addition. It is a common expression that any commodity is worth what it will bring, but this is not true of money, which, though it costs the borrower 10 per cent. seldom pays him that amount. The farm that is burdened with a mortgage for three-fourths its value at this rate of interest, is far more likely to fall into the hands of the mortgagee than to remain the property of its original proprietor. And yet thousands of farmers who have found themselves in debt from various causes have pledged their farms for all they could get, at this ruinous rate of interest. In some sections of our State, and in numerous localities in Illinois, hundreds of fine farms have been taken in by the loan agencies, because the mortgagors were unable to pay the interest upon the loans they had made. A lower rate of interest might have been met in most cases, and these farms would then have been retained by those who labored to make and improve them. So long as the law allows money loaners to charge a high rate of interest they will demand and get it. Some object to the passage of a law restricting the rate to 6 per cent., lest it tend to drive money away from the State, and thus retard the spirit of progress and the development of our recources. It is a matter of fact, however, that money is plenty and easy to be had for legitimate enterprises, and with proper security, at 6 per cent., and even less, in Eastern States. With a lower rate of interest better regulations would need to be made for requiring and securing prompt payment than those now prevailing, and capitalists would prefer loaning at low rates when prompt pay is certain than to take the risks they now incur for a higher rate. The interests of capital and business are mutual, and when the rate of interest is greater than the profits of business, business must cease, and with it the demand for capital. On the other hand, when the rate of interest is below that of the profits of business, the demand for money is brisk and the probability of receiving interest and principal promptly are highest. Such a condition of affairs would be the result of a low rate of interest. It is important therefore, to all classes that the rate should be reduced at as early a date as practicable.

DON'T TAKE IT.

Indiana Farmer.

There are hundreds of money loaning agencies all over the country. They are offering money at eight to ten per cent, secured by mortgages on farms, an amount equal to one-third to one-half the value of the farm. Now, it is a well-known fact that the average rate of interest from legitimate industry of whatever kind is only four to six per cent. With this fact so well known, it is amazing that some farmers continue to take this money at ten per cent. There is nothing more certain than that they are quietly and certainly losing four per cent. of their property purchased with such money. Do they not see that it is only a question of time when they will in this way transfer their property to the loaning companies? Do they not know that these loaning companies keep their wealth and capital in money only because they can thus make four per cent. more out of it than they could if they should invest it in farms, factories, mines, ect.? Are these facts not plain and definite enough to warn people to let ten per cent. money alone? If a farmer is losing four per cent. on a given crop that he has been growing, does he not change his tactics and resort to some other productions? Why not act just as sensible about ten per cent. money? If all would refuse to touch such money, the holders of it would soon be compelled to take what other pursuits earn. They can't eat it to sustain life, nor wear it to keep out the cold. It would be useless laid away in vaults.

The hue and cry a few years ago in the West to raise the rate from six to ten per cent., in order, as it was said, "to induce capital to come to our State," was a very great mistake. It did come indeed, for in the East no such rate would be paid, for the reasons stated above, but it has been a calamity to this generation of people. It has wrecked and bankrupted thousands whom, in their ruin, have pulled down thousands more. The improvements made with the money are here still, indeed, but they were wrought in such violence as to embarrass, if not ruin, a whole generation of people. We need the development and improvement, indeed, but they would have come in a legitimate way, without violence and ruin, though perhaps not so soon. The wrong done by the Legislature was the declaration that money could earn ten per cent. Because it was so declared by law, the people believed it, acted on it, and thousands have met their ruin by it.

That wrong act should be repealed and the wrong impression corrected. The Legislature owes this to the best interests of the State and the people. Whatever improvements we may need, and whatever developments of our recources may be desirable, let us have them in a legitimate way, and without false ideas or undue stimulents.

Here is a beautiful thought floating about without credit: When the summer of youth is slowly wasting away on the nightfall of age, and the shadow of the path becomes deeper and life wears to its close, it is pleasant to look through the vista of time upon the sorrows and felicities of our early years. If we have had a home to shelter, and hearts to rejoice with us, and friends have gathered around our fireside, the rough places of wayfaring will have been worn and smoothed away in the twilight of life, and many dark spots we have passed through will grow brighter and more beautiful. Happy, indeed, are those whose intercourse with the world hasn't changed the tone of their holier feelings, or broken those musical chords of the heart whose vibrations are so melodious, so tender, and so touching in the evening of their lives.

A true man will not take kindly to the overbearing praise of a well-meaning but ignorant patron. This sort of eulogy affords little encouragement. although there may be times when it is prudent to accept it for lack of better. But, if the condescending approval of the ignorant patron be unwelcome, that of the parasite is, or ought to be, very much more so. That man must have a gross craving for bad food who can accept the fulsome flatteries of the sycophant and persuade himself that he is taking wholesome nourishment. To abstain from indignant protest at the first offer of such stuff argues either weakness of character or dullness of perception; but to swallow it and then evince readiness to accept more is to confess to utter depravity of taste.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

We may have high-born notions of our inborn excellence, and very low opinions of the world's powers of discrimination in failing to recognize that which to us is undoubted genius, but we must remember that to be great in our own estimation is to take a fool at his own estimate, and the world is to be pardoned for not partaking of our folly. The world knows its own requirements, and readily acknowledges all true service rendered; and the reason why it honors whom it does is because no worthier men exist.

* * *

"Your visits remind me of the growth of a successful newspaper,' said Uncle Jabez, leaning his chin on his hand and glancing at William Henry, who was sweet on Angelica. "Why so?" inquired William Henry. "Well, they commenced on a weekly, grew to be tri-weekly, and have become daily with a Sunday suplement. "Yes,' said William Henry bracing up, "and after we are married we will issue an extra—."

Ylang-Ylang.

The Ylang-Ylang flower is produced by a large tree, and its odor scents the air for miles around. Dr. Price prepares his Ylang-Ylang Extract from the otto of these flowers, and it is a charming perfume, having a fragrance unlike any other handkerchief extract.

* * *

It is during the inclement weather that the farmer can enjoy the warm fireside and declare his independence. He has his fuel gathered, his daily bread in store, and if his mind is not at ease, it should be, that is if he has made arrangements to have the COURIER visit him once a week during the year.

THE INDIANA STATE SENTINEL!

FOR 1879

HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO

One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and, what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

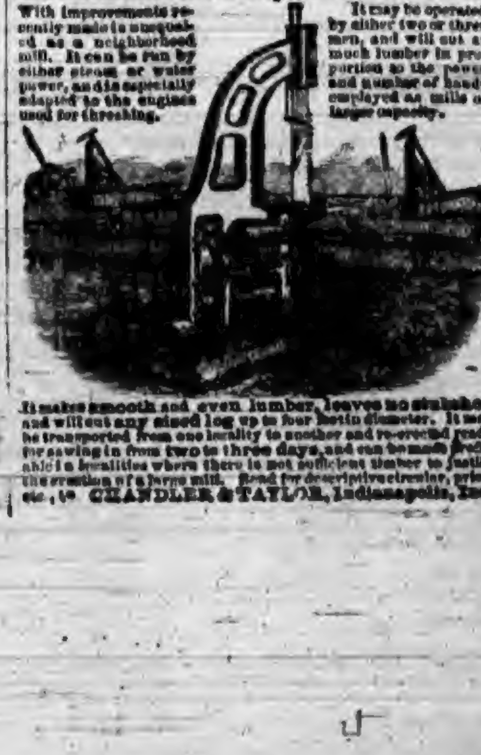
Portable Mulay Saw Mill,



With improvements recently made is unequaled as a neighborhood mill. It can be run by either steam or water power, and is especially adapted to the engines used for threshing.

It may be operated by either two or three men, and will cut as much lumber in proportion to the power and number of hands employed as mills of larger capacity.

It makes smooth and even lumber, leaves no stubshot and will cut any sized log up to four feet in diameter. It may be transported from one locality to another and re-erected ready for sawing in from two to three days, and can be made profitable in localities where there is not sufficient timber to justify the erection of a large mill. WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

A Washington dispatch of Dec. 27 says: "The Teller-Blaine Committee met yesterday, formally acknowledged that they are powerless on account of want of funds, and adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman. There can be little doubt that, so far as any practical investigation goes, the neglect to provide an appropriation will result in the defeat of the entire inquiry. Senator Blaine, in the course of his argument in support of the investigation, urged that if the inquiry was to have any value the committee must proceed South immediately and do the greater portion of its work during the recess. It has become necessary to pursue a different course, and it is generally conceded that the result will be seriously to cripple, if not entirely to defeat, purposes of investigation. The main reason for this is, of course, a reliance upon the $20,000 appropriation supposed to be available, but, aside from that, and apart from strictly Democratic opposition, the checks upon the investigation have been twofold: First, the jealousy between rival Presidential candidates in the Senate. Second, the traditional hostility of that conservative body to a new member, and an unwillingness on the part of the oldest Senators to permit a new man to take the lead in anything. Added to this is the desire on the part of some Republicans not to reopen the Southern question."

A Washington telegram of the 30th ult. says "the opinion of the First Comptroller of the Treasury as to the use of $20,000 for the Blaine committee has finally been overruled, acting Attorney General Phillips deciding that under a fair construction of the law the Senate can use the appropriation for any investigation whatever. Blaine's Teller investigation will immediately proceed, and a sub-committee will be either sent to South Carolina and Louisiana, or prominent witnesses will be summoned here."

MINORITY REPRESENTATION.

It is stated from Washington that "a bill is in preparation having for its object minority representation in Congress. It will probably be introduced in the House soon after the assembling of Congress. It proposes to have the Legislature of each State, after the apportionment of the next census, so redistrict the State that the minority as well as the majority will be entitled to representation. By this plan, if carried out at the next election, supposing that there is no political change among the people, the Democrats will have a small majority, but all parts of the country alike will be represented by Republicans as well as Democrats. The plan is so to divide each State into districts that the districts may as far as possible be entitled to elect either three or five members each, thus permitting the majority of voters to elect two out of three or three out of five. In case the district is entitled to three Representatives, each elector can vote for two candidates and no more. In case the district is entitled to five Representatives, each elector can vote for three candidates and no more. Where a State is entitled to only two Representatives, as in the case of Rhode Island and Florida, it is to be divided into two districts, each electing one member, as at present, as in this case majority and minority representation would be impossible. In all cases where there is an odd Representative after the State has been divided as nearly as possible into districts to be represented by three or five members, a separate district is to be set apart for this Representative, who is to be elected as at present. The effect of this bill will be to secure to the colored people a representation in Congress. It is argued that if it were passed it would remove the objections raised by Senator Blaine to the present lack of representation of the colored population of the South."

THE EAST.

H. J. Redemeyer, who brutally murdered Franz Vose in St. Louis, Mo., last June, has been sentenced to death....Cleveland has just celebrated with great eclat the completion of a bridge across the Cuyahoga river, which connects the east and west divisions of the city.

The Emerson Piano Company's factory in Boston has been burned. Loss, $100,000; insured. Eighty-five men are thrown out of employment.....A fire in the Cocheco Print works, Dover, N. H., damaged the building and contents $75,000; insured.....The schooner Ellen, from St. John for New Haven, was wrecked on the coast of Maine. The Captain and three seamen were drowned..... Three men were killed by an explosion of nitroglycerine at Upper Preakness, N. J. Their bodies were torn into fragments and blown in every direction....Robert A. Pedrich, the Custom-House clerk of Benkhard & Hutton, New York city, is accused of appropriating $108,000 intrusted to him for the payment of customs duties. He is under arrest.

The Bryant memorial exercises at the Academy of Music, New York, on the 30th ult., were of a very imposing and impressive character. George William Curtis was the orator of the occasion, and President Hayes, Secretary Evarts, Gen. Sherman, Gov. Tilden, Peter Cooper, Gen. Hancock and a large number of other distinguished persons were among the spectators.

John H. Caldwell, of South Bayfield, Mass., while kneeling in family prayer, was instantly killed by his insane wife, who cleaved his head in twain with an ax.

THE WEST.

Several criminal prosecutions have been begun by depositors against C. F. Adae & Co., the collapsed Cincinnati bankers.

The Berger Concert Troupe, supplemented by the inimitable Sol Smith Russell, are at Haverly's Chicago Theater this week, and a really enjoyable entertainment the combination affords. Of Russell's character sketches the public will never tire, and the audiences seem never to get enough of them, while the concert troupe is of a high order of merit.

Chicago elevators contain 5,556,662 bushels of wheat, 1,945,988 bushels of corn, 427,938 bushels of oats, 236,084 bushels of rye, and 1,166,762 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 9,334,029 bushels against 9,060,977 bushels at this period last year....Thomas Crossley, a San Francisco shoemaker, shot and fatally wounded his wife, and then cut his own throat with a shoe-knife, causing instant death.

THE SOUTH.

Advices from Breathitt county, Ky., report that the new County Judge, Randall, has had all the ringleaders of the Little faction arrested, which has produced consternation and dismay among those concerned in the late difficulties, and that Breathitt is now one of the most peaceful counties in the State. None of the Strong party had been caught, but it was the intention to arrest the leaders of that party as fast as they could be found.

The Congressional Yellow Fever Commission met at New Orleans on the 30th ult., and proceeded with their investigation. Drs. Holliday and Holcomb, two leading physicians of that city, were examined. Both agreed that the fever originates in New Orleans every year from a germ which was originally imported there, and has become a part of the climate; that the epidemic was undoubtedly incurred by neglect in removing garbage, and by filling up streets with the offal and garbage of the city.

GENERAL.

Diphtheria is reported in an epidemic form at various points throughout the country....The combination that has so long controlled the Pennsylvania coal trade, and held prices up, has collapsed.

A battle is reported to have occurred at Guadalajara, Mexico, between the Government troops and a body of revolutionists, in which the latter were defeated and nearly all of them captured. Subsequently eighteen of them were hanged....William H. Vanderbilt has accomplished his long-cherished purpose of establishing an ocean-freight line in connection with his railway lines, and is putting himself in a position to control the Atlantic ocean-freight traffic. He starts with fourteen first-class iron screw freight steamships of 2,000 tons burden each.

The announcement from New York that William H. Vanderbilt has made arrangements for lines of transatlantic steamers between New York and Liverpool, and New York and Havre, and Hamburg, and Bremen, comes at the same time with the news from Europe that the great English house of Baring Bros. & Co. has made similar arrangements for a line of fourteen steamers between Boston and Liverpool and London.

The perils of Arctic exploration find a fresh illustration in the fate of the Swedish Polar expedition, which is reported blocked fast in the ice above the northern entrance of the narrows of Behring's strait, on the Asiatic side. If the report is true, it is extremely probable that the members of the expedition will never again be seen alive.

Recent deaths: Charles T. Sherman, formerly United States District Judge at Cleveland, and a brother to the General of the Army; Hon. Robert W. Mackey, ex-State Treasurer of Pennsylvania, and a man of strong influence in the councils of the Republican party of that State.

WASHINGTON.

It is announced from Washington that the President has offered the vacant Berlin mission to E. B. Washburne, of Illinois, and that if he declines the honor it will be conferred upon John B. Henderson, ex-Senator from Missouri....The President, accompanied by a party of friends, visited New York, last week, and attended the Bryant memorial exercises.

It is announced from Washington that the sub-committee which visited the Indian Territory to consider the advisability of opening that Territory to settlement and to railroads will decide when the report is made in February to favor the opening of the Indian Territory to settlement, and to make it a Territory of the United States....The Secretary of the Treasury has issued the seventy-sixth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, consols of 1867. The call is for $10,000,000—$6,000,000 of coupon and $4,000,000 of registered bonds—the principal and interest to be paid on and after the 1st of April, 1879.

POLITICAL.

A Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says "it is stated with much confidence in some circles that Secretary Sherman desires to be the Republican candidate of Ohio, and that soon after resumption shall have been recognized as an established fact he desires to surrender the Treasury portfolio and enter actively upon the campaign. The objective point which Sherman, under these circumstances, could have in view would be, first the Governorship, second the Senatorship, and third the Presidency."

It is reported from Washington that Tilden has personally intimated to Congressman Potter that he desires to appear before the Potter committee and tell what he knows about the cipher dispatches....Senator Voorhees has gone to Indianapolis to look after his re-election.

Clarkson N. Potter and Jacob D. Cox, a sub-committee of the Potter Investigating Committee, arrived at New Orleans on the 30th ult., for the purpose of prosecuting the inquiry that was cut short by Yellow Jack last summer. No other members could be prevailed upon to go. It was agreed that Potter's vote should be counted as two in order to avoid a tie on party questions.

The Potter sub-committee began work at New Orleans on the 31st ult. by examining Oscar Arrayo, Secretary of State, who produced the records of his office relating to the election of 1876. P. G. Deslonde, Secretary of State under Kellogg, testified to affixing his signature to the first set of Republican electoral certificates, but had no recollection of signing any second set. Judge Billings and two other witnesses were examined, but nothing of an important character was elicited. A bundle of documents left in a store by Mrs. Agnes Jenks, and addressed to her, was produced before the committee. Among the documents was one purporting to be the alleged original "Sherman letter." Chairman Potter made a statement to the press to the effect that these documents had been dropped by Mrs. Jenks for the purpose of imposing upon the committee. He declared that the so-called copy of the Sherman letter was a forgery.

FOREIGN.

The steamship Emily B. Souder, from New York for Santo Domingo, is reported lost at sea. But few of her passengers and crew escaped....A town in Hayti is reported swept away by a river changing its course. Many lives were lost....A great fire visited Hong Kong, China, on Christmas day..... The winter palace of the Khedive of Egypt, at Cairo, has been partially destroyed by fire.... A dispatch from Lahore, in India, reports that Yakoob Khan, son of the Ameer of Afghanistan, has come into Jelalabad. This is regarded as equivalent to submission to the British....Ex-President Grant, accompanied by Ministers Welsh and Noyes, is visiting the Green Isle.

Regarding the war in Afghanistan the London Standard's correspondent with the Kuram column telegraphs that Gen. Roberts convoked the principal inhabitants of the Kuram valley at Peiwar and Ali Kheyl, and informed them that the Ameer's rule had passed away forever, and henceforth they must look to the Empress of India. It is also stated that the Ameer has gone to St. Petersburg to make an appeal to Europe....A Vienna dispatch says that eighty persons were killed or wounded in the recent encounter between the militia and students in Russia.... Twenty lives were lost by the foundering of the steamer Emily P. Souder in the West Indies. ....The Marquis of Tweeddale is dead....Great distress prevails in Switzerland. There are 6,000 unemployed persons in Geneva....The cholera has disappeared from Morocco.

Negotiations between the Russian and Turkish Governments relative to the proposed definitive treaty are said to be rapidly taking shape. Russia, although she will ultimately insist upon indemnity, will not press her demands in the present financial condition of the Turkish empire, but will rest content with the promise of the Porte to settle its war obligations at some future time. The signing of the treaty will be the signal for the complete withdrawal of the Russian troops from the Turkish territory now occupied by them.

A cable dispatch from London announces the death of Henry Vincent, the well-known platform speaker.

A conspiracy against the life of Prince Milan, of Servia, has been discovered, and several arrests have been made....A sudden thaw has caused numerous destructive floods in England and Scotland.

Exploring Iowa Mounds.

Mr. Giles Pearce, of Muscatine, who is an enthusiast in exploring the ancient mounds in Muscatine county, has found some additional relics on a slough bluff. The last mound opened by him was seventy-five feet in diameter and eight feet high, and contained three skeletons. The first was apparently a late burial, and was found one foot from the top; two and a half feet below this the second skeleton was found, surrounded by pieces of broken granite; two feet deeper, beneath a hard stratum of yellowish clay and charcoal, rested the third skeleton, about which were scattered relics in the shape of numerous small arrows, a small red stone pipe, a plummet of iron and a stone hammer. These were resting on a hard floor of burnt clay. Under this was soft sand. Between the last mound opened and the city of Muscatine there are said to be 650 mounds. Mr. Pearce has made plats of his explorations in Illinois and Iowa, and will forward the same to the Smithsonian Institute.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

THE CHINESE PROBLEM.

An Interesting Issue—Views of Senator Blaine.

A Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs that journal as follows: The Chinese question has of late excited a great deal more interest among public men at the capital than it has ever before been possible to arouse. At a dinner party in this city, a few evenings since, where Senator Blaine was a guest, the conversation turned upon the Chinese question. Southern men of extreme Democratic type were present. Northern men of extreme Radical type were present. Senator Blaine, almost alone at the outset, took strong and decided ground against Chinese immigration. On being reminded that this was against the broad and liberal creed of republicanism, he replied that the creed of self-preservation was the broadest and most liberal creed in the world in its effect on the actions of men, and that, in his judgment, if free immigration of the Mongolian race was permitted, they would take possession of the Pacific coast, to the exclusion of the white race. "A people," continued Mr. Blaine, "who eat beef and wheat bread, and who drink beer, cannot labor alongside of those who live on rice, and if the experiment is attempted on a large scale the American laborer will have to drop his knife and fork and take up the chop-sticks." On being asked if he did not by this argument concede the superiority of the Chinese laborers, Mr. Blaine said no; no more than it was conceding the superiority of the slave labor to say (as was always found to be the case) that free white labor could not live and flourish alongside of it. The causes which would drive white labor from the Pacific coast by the introduction of the Chinese were not essentially different from those causes that drove white labor from the South by the spread and increase of the servile race there. It was urged by a well-known New England man that the policy of exclusion could not be maintained in this nineteenth century, but Mr. Blaine insisted that all our great troubles thus far in the United States had their origin in distinctions and prejudices of race, and that now, just as we are getting over one that threatened the destruction of civil liberty on this continent, it would not seem wise to invite another and possibly more serious trouble of the same kind from an even more dangerous source. Mr. Blaine was then asked by a prominent Western man how he would deal with the Chinese already in the country. "Kindly and fairly and honestly, of course," replied Mr. Blaine. "They came here," continued he, "under treaty rights, and are entitled to legal protection and humane, Christian treatment. The questions of fair dealing with the few Chinese already here and the throwing our ports wide open to an unlimited immigration of Mongols are entirely distinct issues, and no man of sense will confound them." The conversation was prolonged and animated, and was suggested by the presence of the Chinese embassy in Washington. At the conclusion of the talk it was said that three-fourths of the guests at the table were in sympathy with Senator Blaine's ideas.

Should Full Mourning Be Worn.

A Philadelphia clergyman, Rev. Mr. MacLeod, contends that there is neither health, sense nor religion in full mourning. He tells his congregation that a bit of black ribbon worn in some way will tell the story of bereavement just as well as a complete mourning suit. A bit of crape on the bell-pull gives the hint to those who pass by, and it is not considered necessary to cover the whole front with black drapery. Why, then, will not a bit of ribbon on cloak or coat answer the purpose, and a weight of useless expense and a costume that is always gloomy and, in warm weather, very uncomfortable, be taken from the shoulders of bereaved mourners? Christians, he is convinced, ought not to take a gloomy view of death. There are glorious hopes linked with the sorrows, and the hopes of those who are gone before should be symbolized rather than the sorrows of those who are left behind. He would have cheerful garments worn by mourners in token of the triumph of the glorified ones, and a bit of ribbon or crape as a simple memorial of their own sense of bereavement. The rest of the full mourning he would send to the heathen, who, in their sorrow at the grave, have no hope.

The History of a Family.

A Paris correspondent, in writing of persons who became distinguished or noteworthy during the French Revolution of 1789, says the youngest daughter of the lawyer who defended Charlotte Corday, in 1793, died recently in a garret at Darmstadt, in abject poverty. After Charlotte Corday had assassinated Marat, none of the Paris lawyers had courage enough to defend her. M. Lux, a lawyer of Mayence, volunteered to defend her, and did with great ability. His courageous act, however, cost him his life. He was guillotined shortly after the execution of his fair client. He left two daughters, the eldest of whom drowned herself in the Rhine, on account of unreciprocated affection, in 1807. The youngest married a merchant of Havre, who soon after became bankrupt, and who also committed suicide. The widow lived over thirty-five years in a garret, supporting herself by literary toil and drudgery.

Four gentlemen of New York city have offered $500 as a premium for the best four designs for a house for workingmen, in which may be secured a proper distribution of light and pure air, with an arrangement of rooms that will yield a rental sufficient to pay a fair interest on the investment.

SHOT IN HIS CELL.

A Story of Sam Buckmaster and the Old Alton Penitentiary.

[From the Springfield (Ill.) Republican.]

The death of Col. Samuel A. Buckmaster recalls a thrilling tragedy which occurred at the Alton penitentiary, during his administration as Warden, more than twenty years ago.

In the year 1854 there was a convict at Alton named Hall, who was serving a life sentence for murder. He was a desperate man of wiry frame, and his imprisonment made him insane with rage and hate. He was such a man as Rande, but Rande was not born then. This man was set to work in the blacksmith shop, and was watched with extra care, but he managed, in some of those ways only known to the cunning of criminals, to make a short knife of a worn-out file, and he used the skill of a genius in hiding it about his person. His cell, like all the others, was strongly built of blocks of stone, the door being of oak many inches thick, and bound with iron bars. The prisoner's bed shut down against the door, which opened inwards, so that the door was fastened from within when the prisoner was abed. Through the door, which opened into a corridor, was a hole perhaps eight inches square, which was strongly barred, and the only other opening into the cell was in the outer wall of the prison, where a narrow slit, also barred, admitted light and air. This little window was very near the ceiling, and, by reason of its narrowness and the thickness of the wall, a person on the outside, even mounted on a ladder, could not get sight of the prisoner. All this was well understood by Hall, whose insane cunning had devised a desperate scheme to escape from the prison and humiliate the Warden. At 10 o'clock one morning, while at work, he signaled the guard, whose name was Crabb, that he was sick, and, in accordance to the rule, Crabb started with him to his cell. While in the corridor, as the guard was opening an iron door, Hall struck him down with a bar of iron, which he had secured in the blacksmith shop, and dragged him into the cell. He then bound him with strips from the bed blanket and closed the door, shutting down the bed against it. The guard was stunned by the blow, and did not recover his senses for an hour, but, as he did not return to the shop, search was made, and the Warden was quickly informed of the event. Hall, armed with his knife, was keeping watch over the wounded guard, and was secure in his cell. He commanded the situation. He declared that he would kill the guard unless he was granted a free pardon, but, after some reflection, demanded, in addition, that he should be furnished with a loaded revolver, and be permitted to walk with the guard out of the prison to a carriage at the gate, and that Col. Buckmaster should drive the carriage in such direction as he would then indicate, and as far as he might choose, and permit him to escape. He further announced that if any attempt was made to take him he would fall on Crabb and murder him.

His terms were absurd, of course, and the Warden at no time thought of complying with them, but the situation was horrible, and there seemed to be no means of getting at the desperado that did not render the death of Crabb certain. The people of Alton were soon aware of these facts, and the town was in an uproar. The guard was a very well known and respectable citizen, and he had a family. The prison gates were crowded with anxious men and women, and everybody's ingenuity was tasked to devise a way of saving Crabb's life. The news was sent over the State and country, and attracted its allowance of attention. Communication was kept up with the convict and the guard through the door, before which Buckmaster stood for the greater part of three days with a pistol in his hand, watching diligently for a chance to kill the convict. But Hall managed to keep himself covered by the body of the guard, and his vigilance never relaxed. He said he had been trying to get the Warden instead of the guard, but had been compelled to accept the smaller game; whereupon Buckmaster offered to take Crabb's place if he might be released, and he agreed to go into the cell stark naked; but Hall wisely declined to change his prisoner. It was useless to attempt to poison the convict, for the guard ate the same food, and the little window through the wall did not afford a view of either. When this desperate situation was understood Gov. Bissell sent a pardon to Col. Buckmaster, to be used at his direction, but the Warden resolved not to use it except in the last extremity. No labor or pains were spared to catch the convict off his guard, but he seemed to feel neither fatigue nor fear. When every other expedient had failed the Warden resolved to force the door, and accordingly, when the cell door was opened to admit the supper of the men, he introduced a crowbar and thus kept the door open, and, with the aid of another guard, rushed in and dragged Crabb out. At the first moment of violence the convict fell on Crabb with his knife, but failed to kill him, though he wounded him dreadfully. When the guard was removed, Hall closed his door and refused to surrender. He sat down on the floor out of pistol range, and was beyond the reach of Warden Buckmaster, who called upon him to surrender in vain, and, as his body and limbs were entirely concealed by the door, he still held out. But the Warden watched until he saw one foot exposed, and instantly pierced it with a ball. The wound destroyed the self-command of the convict and he exposed his head, and a ball pierced it instantly. He was taken out, and died in a day or two. The guard, Mr. Crabb, recovered entirely from his wounds, and held his place in the prison after it was removed to Joliet.

Bad as Being King.

Several of the Directors of the Mechanics' and Laborers' Savings Bank, of Jersey City, which recently suspended, have received anonymous letters embellished with skulls and cross-bones, and reading as follows:

"You are hereby warned to make good the money you have stolen, or I will coolly drive a bullet through you. You are worse than a thief that will meet a man in the street and take his money. I could protect myself of the highwayman, but not of you. You are a sneak-thief, that will suffer severely if you do not come down with the money. Six days will be given you to think. Beware!"

Woman Ahead.

The brethren of Hardin Lodge, No. 322, on last Saturday night, were treated to a surprise on a point not set down in the books, and which, as an interpretation of Masonic law, entirely sets aside all precedents laid down by Oliver, Mackey, Moore, Cross, Mitchell or other learned writers on Masonic ruling and usages. It seems that there was a candidate in waiting to take the second degree, and, as the lodge had considerable business to transact and the night was stormy, the gentleman concluded to return home until such time as it should please the lodge to take up his case. When everything was ready, a brother was sent to find him, who returned and reported that the brother had gone home. Whereupon a committee was appointed to wait on the brother and inform him that the lodge was now ready to proceed to business. The committee started out through the snow and storm and finally arrived at the house of the gentleman and rapped at the door, which was opened by his wife, who was already dressed for the night. The committee stated their business, when they were politely but energetically informed by the lady "that at present she had a stronger grip on Mr. X. than the grip of an entered apprentice; that the lodge might do as it pleased, but, the Lord willing, Mr. X. was now about to retire with Mrs. X." The committee, struck dumb with astonishment, formed in solid procession and returned to the lodge. Had a bomb-shell fallen through the roof it could not have created more confusion than the report of the committee on the reply of the plucky woman. The hair of the Worshipful Master stood upright "like quills upon the fretful porcupine," and his hat rose three inches above his head. The Senior Warden retired from his position, and the Junior Warden, in his excitement, called the craft from labor to refreshment; the Treasurer slapped his hand on his pocket-book; the Secretary upset his inkstand; the deacons moved uneasily about, and the Tyler was heard to drop his sword in the ante-room. But the joke was too good, and, presently, rising to the occasion, the brethren burst into a roar of laughter which fairly shook the building; after which order was restored, and the lodge was closed in due form until such time as Mrs. X. will allow Mr. X. to take the second degree.—*Richmond (Mo.) Labor Enlistment.

An address has been prepared by the Enlistment Labor Association of this city, showing how the employment of 100,000 men for five years may be provided by way of the enlistment plan. Members of Congress are provided with copies, the purpose being to have legislation on the subject this session. The plan is to authorize the President to issue a proclamation calling for the enlistment of 100,000 men, this number to be divided into detachments of 5,000 or 10,000 each, and distributed throughout the Western Territories, on lands of the public domain, each detachment to be furnished with agricultural and other implements of industry wherewith to cultivate the soil and develop the mineral resources of the country, the annual yield of products from every source to go to the benefit of the Government as a part of the recompense of the outlay involved in putting the plan into practical operation. The men are to receive the same pay in clothing and rations as soldiers of the regular army, and to be under the same discipline as volunteer soldiers, and to receive at the expiration of their term of service 160 acres of land as additional bounty, while the enterprise is to be under competent officers appointed from civil life. This plan will require the expenditure of $75,000,000. It is claimed that this amount will cover the entire expense necessary, as the plan would be nominally self-supporting after the first year. It is claimed by the association that this scheme is equal in importance to the regular army, the cost of which, combined with that of maintaining the Indians, and the claims for Indian depredations amounts for five years to $249,381,000. It is urged that if the plan is adopted it will greatly reduce the expense incurred from paying the large claims arising from depredations by Indians. This scheme will be urged upon Congress early in the session.—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

Brother and Sister Hanged.

Raymond and Ellen Osgood, brother and sister, were recently hanged in Liberty county, Ga., for the murder of Sam Gauldin. On the night of Oct. 12 Gauldin went to the house of Simon Osgood to inquire about a debt which he owed Osgood, and which Osgood had given to a constable to collect. There was a dispute, and Simon Osgood, with three of his sons and a grown daughter, beat Gauldin with sticks, fence rails and a hoe. He died the next day. Two of the sons, Henry and Raymond, are grown men; the other, James, is a youth of 13 years; the girl, Ellen, is about 19. Henry escaped, but all the others were arrested and tried. The old man, Simon, was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary; Raymond and Ellen were convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged, and James, convicted of involuntary manslaughter, was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.

Tight Boots.

His bootmaker brought him a number five and a quarter boot to go on a number six and a half foot, and the process of trying it on convinced him of the tortures he would have to undergo in what Shakspeare has called "the taming of the shoe." "Too small," he says; "they hurt." "Hurt?" replies the artist, bitterly—"hurt? They can't hurt. I made 'em myself from measurements I took myself, and they must be a roomy fit." "But they do hurt." "How in Erebus do you know anything about it? Are you a shoemaker? What experience have you had, anyhow?"

How Oysters Are Fattened.

Very few persons who feast on the large and toothsome oysters which are served up at the raw boxes of many of the oyster houses in this city have the remotest idea from what source the luscious bivalves are obtained, or in what manner they are fattened.

The oysters obtained from Tangier sound, Lynnhaven, and what are known as the Seaside oysters are a rather small oyster, inclosed in an immense shell—their native element being salt water. These oysters, when dredged and brought to the Baltimore market, are sold to the packers and others at the rate of about 60 cents a bushel.

Recently a plan has been discovered by which these oysters can be not only fattened in a very short time, but their value enhanced at least 150 per cent. Two of the larger oyster-packing firms are now engaged in this business, and the manner of procedure is described as follows, by one who has watched the operation:

When the oysters are unloaded from the pungies they are transferred to scows, over which a deck is built, and on which deck the oysters are placed. Each of these scows will carry a deck load of 600 bushels of oysters. The scows are then towed to a point in the Patapsco river near the Ferry Bar bridge, where the water is quite shallow.

The vacant space in the scow, between the deck and the bottom, is filled with water by means of a valve, and the scow is sunk. There she is left during two flood-tides, when the water is pumped from her by means of a small machine provided for the purpose, and the scows are then towed up to the city again.

The change from the salt to the fresh water and the immersion of the oyster during these flood-tides, it is said, fattens them, until what was at first but a comparatively insignificant oyster becomes a plump and luscious bivalve, filling its entire immense shell.

After this operation the oysters, which, as stated, cost originally about 60 cents a bushel, are placed on the market, and readily command from $1.50 to $1.60 a bushel.—Baltimore News.

A Neat Swindle.

An ingenious fraud has been committed upon a wealthy merchant residing near Paris. He received a letter informing him that the writer had ascertained that a box containing treasure was buried in his garden, and offering to indicate the exact spot if he would agree to divide the spoil. The merchant was at first inclined to treat the letter as a hoax, but upon receiving a second and more pressing one he sent an answer agreeing to the proposal. The next day he was waited upon by a gentleman of agreeable manners, and it was arranged that the search should be made at night, in order to prevent the neighbors from talking. The box—a very weighty one—was duly unearthed, and, when taken into the house and opened, was found to contain 8,000 francs in silver pieces of 5 francs each. The merchant, much pleased at the result of the search, at once handed over the half which he had promised to his informer, who remarked that it was rather a heavy lump to carry to the railway station, distant about a mile, and that, perhaps, the merchant could oblige him with notes or gold instead. This the merchant was very happy to do; but he regretted it bitterly the next morning, as he saw that the 5 franc pieces were spurious.

A Baby Actress.

Kate Claxton is in trouble again. In one part of her play she has a 3-months'-old child in her arms. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has ordered the child removed, and hinted that it was harshly used and drugged to keep it quiet. Claxton denies the drugging and rough usage, and says: "His parents are poor, and the child's salary ($10 a week) is no doubt a great help to them. The child is very healthy, and a great pet with all of us." —New York World.

FARM NOTES.

An apple-tree in ex-Gov. Palmer's yard at Springfield, Ill., has borne two crops of apples this year.

Quite a number of horses have been poisoned in Kansas by being fed raw castor beans.

The Agricultural Bureau of North Carolina does not cost the citizens of that State anything. The Bureau of Georgia has a surplus fund of over $19,000.

Do you feed your cows nothing but hay and straw in winter, and keep them on a short pasture in summer? Then you neglect to put $1 into the expense scale that might put $3 or $5 into the other scale.

The joint in a sheep of the best breed and in fair condition, which contains the least proportion of fat, is the leg, and next to that is the shoulder, while the loin, neck and breast have the largest proportion.

As a rule it will not pay to winter poor stock of any kind if the food they consume costs anything, besides all animals are in better condition at the beginning of winter than at any other season of the year. During the winter most kinds of stock lose flesh unless they are bountifully fed and warmly housed, and it does not pay to take this trouble and incur this expense for anything but the best. The weeding process is, therefore, in order.

Winter is the time for reading and study also. No reason why a farmer shouldn't take time for intellectual culture as well as anybody else. It freshens his mind for more active duties. No fear of being a "book farmer." If he don't read up, he'll soon find himself falling behind the times. Nor will it do to forget or neglect the social duties altogether. None of us can avoid them without positive detriment to ourselves. Cultivate neighborly feelings, therefore, and do something for the comfort and happiness of others as well as yourself.—Exchange.

Raw-hide horse-shoes are not fashionable on prairie land. In fact, the natural hoof does better, and really well, except on rocky roads. The raw-hide shoe is really more valuable, if valuable at all, on dry hard roads than on wet or muddy roads. So on frozen roads, where there is no ice, they may wear tolerably well. Nevertheless we do not suppose they will soon supplant iron, where shoes are necessary at all. In the "prairie region" farmers are fast finding out that shoeing is not so essential as has been generally supposed, except where the team is to be driven on ice or stone roads, and the latter are not at all common in "prairie land."—Prairie Farmer.

The alfalfa, now so famous, is only the lucerne of England, acclimated in Chili, and from thence transferred to California. In England it had the advantages of a very humid climate; in Chili, the disadvantages of a very dry one. But, when it had been made to thrive there, it was just the grass for the dry climate of California. It would not flourish everywhere. It is very sensitive to frost in the early stages of its growth. Yet in England, and in Pennsylvania, where it is produced, we hear little about its being killed by frost. In Chili its character was changed. It did not make the battle against frost, but against drought. It bears the same character in California.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Apples in Sand.—A writer in the London Garden says that he finds fruit to keep best in perfectly dry sand. He keeps fruit this way all the year round. He has had French crabs two years old. The Catelac pear has remained sound for twelve months. The fruit must be sound when stored, and the sand must be quite dry. The chief advantages of packing in sand are the exclusion of air currents, the preservation from changes of temperature, and the absorption of moisture, which favors decay. Much will depend on the apartment in which the experiment is tried, a dry or cool one being best. This is not a new discovery. The Pennsylvania Dutch farmers have long practiced this way of keeping apples.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Rats.—Keep the house as clear as possible of these pests. If they will not enter the traps set for them, drop a little oil of sodium in them; that will attract them without fail.

To Remove Grease Spots.—To remove grease spots from carpet and restore colors, take a handful of crushed soap bark—quillaya—to a pail of water. Scrub the spots and sponge the carpet all over.

Servants.—Talk to them not merely to give orders, but to enter kindly into their interests; warn them gently of their failures, and praise them always when they do well. Encourage with moderate but hearty praise.

To Cleanse Gilt Frames.—Take sufficient flour of sulphur to give a golden tinge to one and one-half pints of water; boil in this water four or five onions, strain, and when cold wash with soft brush any part that requires restoring; when dry it will come out as good as new.

Stale Bread.—It should be broken up, dried slowly in the oven, then grated or pounded in a mortar to coarse powder and kept in wide-mouthed bottles, well corked. It will keep a long time in a dry place, and is useful for every dinner in the week, in one way or another, for breading chops, cutlets, and the like.

Coloring Carpet Rags Green.—Color the rags blue first by getting Prussian blue and oxalic acid—five ounces of Prussian blue to three of oxalic acid—that proportion. Have the druggist mix them. Then get four ounces of bichromate, and sugar of lead for yellow to dip the blue rags in to make them green. The latter part of the recipe is good to color yellow rags alone.

Lemon Sirup.—Squeeze two lemons into a dish, not tin, add a pint of water and boil a few moments. A pound of white sugar should be added to a pint of the juice; boil again ten minutes, bottle, and your lemonade is made. Two tablespoonfuls of the mixture added to a tumbler of water makes a very healthful and palatable drink.

Fit for a King.—Put a pint and a half of milk to boil in a thoroughly clean sauce-pan; sweeten and flavor it with some orange-flower water, or any other essence. Beat up the whites of eggs until they are quite firm and crisp, like snow. Put a table-spoonful at a time into the boiling milk, turning them after a few seconds. Arrange in a pyramid on a deep dish. Let the milk get cool, and then make a custard with the yelks, and pour round. The whites should be beaten in a cold place.

Ventilation of Cupboards.—The ventilation of cupboards is one of those minor matters that are frequently overlooked in the erection of houses, while the want of a thorough draught is apt to make itself unpleasantly apparent to the smell. The remedy of the defect is, however, very simple; if possible, have perforations made through the back wall of the closet, and a few in the door; when the wall of the closet cannot be perforated, bore holes freely in the door on the top and bottom. To prevent dampness, with the accompanying unpleasantness and injurious effects of mildew in cupboards, a tray of quicklime should be kept, and changed from time to time as the lime becomes slacked. This remedy will also be found useful in safes or document rooms, the damp air of which is often destructive to valuable deeds and other contents.

The Struggle in Central Asia.

The Anglo-Afghan war and the troubles apprehended with China possess more than a local significance. They are the preliminary steps leading up to a great conflict that must some day agitate Central Asia—the strife of giants for possession. No one now living may see the struggle, but it is manifestly destined to come, sooner or later. The attack upon the Ameer and the mutterings of the Chinese are only signs that Russia, through the natural action of growth, is reaching points that threaten encroachment upon India and China. It is an invariable rule that nations grow and expand in the direction of least resistance. This vast empire of Russia, with its wonderful facility for absorbing and governing Eastern nations and impressing them with the fear of its strength, cannot extend any further to the west. Against growth in that direction there is the impenetrable barrier of Germany and Austria. She cannot expand in a southerly direction without a fierce resistance, and dangerous complications with the great powers; and, even with every obstacle removed, the territory itself is too small to answer the demands of its growth. Having obtained a foothold in Asia Minor as part indemnity for the expenses of the late war, she may, and probably will, increase in that direction; but it is evident that the main line of her expansion must run due east through the vast plains of Chinese Tartary, embracing hundreds of millions of square miles of fertile territory. The advance guard of her armies and politicians have already reached the Western limits, and are pressing down upon Persia, Afghanistan, and the western Chinese boundary; while on the Pacific coast her traders, coming down from the North, are already trespassing upon the rich provinces of Chinese Tartary. This growth cannot be stopped except by the extinction of Russia. It will move on with the steady progress and resistless power of the rising tide. Barriers may be built to stop it, but it will either overflow and sweep them away, or, if they prove too strong for that, it will trend in other directions where the resistance is weaker. If the new barriers England is now seeking to erect on her northwestern frontier prove impassable, the tide will turn due east and sweep on where the resistance is less, namely, over China.—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. and Mrs. Pincus have been arrested in New York for exhibiting their baby, 22 months old, fifteen inches long, and weighing but a pound. The baby, which is of the female persuasion, is perfectly formed and seems to be in excellent health. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, however, hold that its health is being injured by tobacco smoke and bad ventilation.

THE YOUNG IDEA.

One of Bob Ingersoll's Theories Put to the Test.

[From Peck's Sun.]

Not long since the following utterance of Bob Ingersoll went the rounds of the papers:

> Col. Ingersoll says he keeps a pocketbook in an open drawer, and his children go and help themselves to money whenever they want it. "They eat when they want to; they may sleep all day if they choose, and sit up all night if they desire. I don't try to coerce them. I never punish; never scold. They buy their own clothes, and are masters of themselves."

A gentleman living on Marshall street, who has a boy that is full as kitteny as his father, read the article and pondered deeply. He knew that Col. Ingersoll was a success at raising children in the way they should go, and he thought he would try it. The boy had caused him considerable annoyance, and he made up his mind that he had not treated the boy right, so he called the boy in from the street, where he was putting soft soap on a lamp-post in order to see the lamp-lighter climb it, and said to him:

"My son, I have decided to adopt a different course with you. Heretofore I have been careful about giving you money, and have wanted to know where every cent went to, and my supervision has no doubt been annoying to you. Now, I am going to leave my pocketbook in the bureau drawer, with plenty of money in it, and you are at liberty to use all you want without asking me. I want you to buy anything you desire, buy your own clothes, and to feel as though the money was yours, and that you had not got to account for it. Just make yourself at home now, and try and have a good time."

The boy looked at the old gentleman, put his hand on his head as though he had "got' em sure," and went out to see the lamp-lighter climb that soft soap. The next day the stern parent went out into the country, shooting, and returned on the midnight train three days later. He opened the door with a latch-key, and a strange yellow dog grabbed him by the elbow of his pants and shook him, he said "like the agur."

The dog barked and chewed until the son came down in his night-shirt and called him off. He told his father he had bought that dog of a fireman for $11, and it was probably the best dog bargain that had been made this season. He said the fireman told him he could find a man that wanted that kind of a dog.

The parent took off his pants, what the dog had not removed, and in the hall he stumbled over a birch-bark canoe the boy bought of an Indian for $9, and an army musket with an iron ramrod fell down from the corner. The boy had paid $6 for that. He had also bought himself an overcoat with a seal-skin collar and cuffs, and a complete outfit of calico shirts and silk stockings.

In his room the parents found the marble top of a soda-fountain, a wheel-barrow, and shelf filled with all kinds of canned meat, preserves, and crackers, and a barrel of apples. A wall tent and six pairs of blankets were rolled up ready for camping out, and a buckskin shirt and a pair of corduroy pants lay on the bed ready for pulling on. Six fish-poles and a basketful of fish-lines were ready for business, and an oyster-can full of grub-worms for bait were squirming on the washstand. The old gentleman looked the lay-out over, looked at his pocketbook in the bureau drawer, as empty as a contribution box, and said:

"Young man, the times have been too flush. We will now return to a specie basis. When you want money, come to me and I will give you a nickel, and you will tell me what you intend to buy with it, or I'll warm you. You hear me."

And now that man stands around from the effects of the encounter with the yellow dog, and asks every man where a letter will reach Bob Ingersoll. He says he will kill Ingersoll, if it is the last noble act he ever accomplishes.

Erecting His Tombstone, Then Falling Dead.

A curious case of preparation for burial took place in this city last week. John Malligan, residing at No. 334 Fifth street, who has for years enjoyed the best of health, took it into his head that before death he might become so poor as to be unable to have a tombstone erected to his memory. He accordingly set about the undertaking and purchased a head-stone valued at $200, and had the names of his deceased wife and himself cut upon it, in his own case leaving spaces enough for his own age and the date of his death to be filled in afterward.

A few days after the erection of the tombstone, Mr. Malligan died. The evening of his death he felt remarkably well, and, calling his three daughters together, told them what he had done. Addressing the eldest girl, Mary Ann, he said, "Now that I have paid every mark of respect to the dead and myself I am willing to die. My tombstone is already erected, and all you have to do is to have the date of my death cut upon it." Mr. Malligan then took a cigar, and, after lighting it, chatted freely with his children, but suddenly he turned pale, and, without a moment's warning, he dropped dead.

The deceased was a prominent Mason, an Odd Fellow of long standing, as well as being a member of a number of benevolent societies. The strangest part of the story is that just before his death, in fact, the last words he was heard to utter, were addressing his daughter: "Mary Ann, take my advice, and have your tombstone erected in time, for, if you do not do it yourself, no one will." —New York Mercury.

The Number of the Indians.

There seems to be a great difference in the estimates as to the number of Indians in this country. Gen. Sherman, in his testimony before the commission considering the question of the transfer of Indian Bureau to the War Department, put the total number at 222,000, while Col. Meacham sets the figures at 265,000. In the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1876 the number is set down at 291,822. In the census report of 1870 the number is estimated at 313,712, while the census of 1850 fixes the number at 400,764. Schoolcraft, in 1850, set the number at 388,229, and in 1857 at 379,264. Various other estimates have been made, ranging from 471,036 by Morse, in his report on Indian affairs in 1820, to 129,366, estimated by the Secretary of War in 1825. An average of all the estimates at hand since 1820 makes the number 303,824, which is probably quite nearly correct. It is probable that efforts will be made in the next census to ascertain as nearly as possible the exact number.

The Uses of Pain.

The question is often asked, "What is the use of pain? It is scarcely conceivable that the infliction has no object." There are obviously two aspects of this question: In one, science has an immediate interest; with the other it has a secondary, but not unimportant concern. The first is essentially physical. What useful service does pain subserve in the animal economy? The answer is thrust upon us by daily observation and experience. There are two sentinels posted, so to say, about the organism to protect it alike from the assault of enemies without, and exacting friends within. The first of these guardians is the sense of fatigue. When this speaks there is need of rest for repair. If the monitor be unheeded, exhaustion may supervene; or before that point of injury is reached the second guardian will, perhaps, interpose for the vital protection—namely, pain. The sense of pain, however, is more diretly significant of injury to structure, active or threatened, than an excessive strain of function, although in the case of the vital organs pain occurs whenever the pressure is great. Speaking generally, it may be set down as an taxom that, whatever collateral uses pain may subserve, its chief and most obvious service to humanity is as a deterrent and warning sensation to ward off danger. It is worthy of note, though sufficiently familiar to medical observers, that the absence of this subjective symptom in cases of severe injury is too often indicative of an injury beyond repair. The extinction of pain is not the highest, although it may be a generous impulse. If there were no guardian sensibility of this nature it would be impossible to live long in the world without self-inflicting the most formidable injuries. That pain, in the second place, has an educational value as regards the mind and temper no one can doubt. Some forms of pain would seem to be chiefly intended for this purpose; but even in this view pain has a practical interest, because the higher development of the mind, and of which the brain is the formative organ, is a process of physico-mental interest, governed by natural laws, of which science is perfectly competent to take cognizance. The subject as a whole is one with which the physician and physiologist have much concern.

The Presidential Field.

The editor of the Post, the Democratic organ at Washington, carefully summarizes his walks and talks with politicians at Washington and says: "The contest for the Republican Presidential nomination two years hence seems to have already practically narrowed itself down to Grant, Blaine and Washburne. The two former stand as the principal active competitors, and the latter as the most distinguished representative of the grand army of compromise candidates. Grant's strength lies in the South, Blaine's in the Northeast, and Washburne's in a less positive sort of a way everywhere." Then, after analyzing the strength of each, he says: "Grant, however, is almost invincible from the fact that the tremendous influence of the money power is all on his side. This influence really brought about the nomination of Hayes in 1876. The power that is to prevent it from accomplishing the same in 1880, with the name of Grant substituted for that of Hayes, has yet to assert itself. Such are the probabilities and possibilities bearing upon the case. The nomination of Grant in 1880 seems, therefore, from present indications, to be inevitable. He will accept, of course."

Our Old Friend, the Apple.

The genuine apple-eater comforts himself with an apple, in their season, as others with a pipe or cigar. When he has nothing else to do, or is bored, he eats an apple. While he is waiting for the train he eats an apple, sometimes several of them. When he takes a walk he arms himself with apples. His traveling-bag is full of apples. He offers an apple to his companion and takes one himself. They are his chief solace when on the road. He sows their seed all along the route. He tosses the core from the car window and from the top of the stage-coach. He would, in time, make the land one vast orchard. He dispenses with the knife. He prefers that his teeth shall have the first taste. Then he knows the best flavor is immediately beneath the skin, and that in a pared apple this is lost. If you will stew the apple, he says, instead of baking it, by all means leave the skin on. It improves the color and vastly heightens the flavor of the dish.—American Rural Home.

Biblical Facts.

A prisoner, condemned to solitary confinement, obtained a copy of the Bible and, by three years' careful study, obtained the following facts: The Bible contains 3,576,589 letters, 773,692 words, 31,174 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books. The word "and" occurs 46,277 times. The word "reverend" occurs but once, which is in the 8th verse of 111th Psalm. The middle verse is the 8th verse of the 118th Psalm. The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the alphabet except J. The finest chapter to read is the 26th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The 19th chapter of II. Kings, and the 37th chapter of Isaiah are alike. The longest verse is the 9th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther. The shortest verse is the 35th verse of the 11th chapter of St. John. The 8th, 16th, 21st and 31st verses of the 107th Psalm are alike. Each verse of the 136th Psalm ends alike. There are no words or names with more than six syllables.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Neutralizing Poison with Sweet Oil.—A poison of any conceivable description and degree of potency, which has been intentionally or accidentally swallowed, may be rendered almost instantly harmless by simply swallowing two gills of sweet oil. An individual with a very strong constitution should take nearly twice that quantity. This oil will most positively neutralize every form of vegetable, animal, or mineral poison with which physicians and chemists are acquainted.

Borax for Colds.—A writer in the Medical Record cites a number of cases in which borax is proved a most effectual remedy in certain forms of colds. He states that in sudden hoarseness, or loss of voice in public speakers or singers from colds, relief for an hour or so, as by magic, may be often obtained by slowly dissolving, partially swallowing, a lump of borax the size of a garden pea, or about three or four grains, held in the mouth for ten minutes before speaking or singing. This produces a profuse secretion of saliva, or "watering" of the mouth and throat—probably restoring the voice or tone to the dried vocal cords, just as wetting brings back the missing notes to a flute when it is too dry.

Cure for Corns.—The latest remedy for the cure of corns comes to us from a friend living in Kingsville, Ohio, who vouches for the cure with grave assurance, having known of its efficacy in many stubborn cases. He says: "Take a well-ripened lemon, roll and squeeze until the juices are well liquified, then open the lemon and squeeze the juice into a glass vial. Add to the juice three or six pearl buttons, according to size, such as is used on linen or cambric underwear. In a few days it will be found the lemon juice has eaten up or dissolved the buttons, so they can be mashed between the thumb and finger. Shake the mixture well, then apply it to the corn; a few applications will conquer the most stubborn settler and give permanent relief." This is a remedy easily prepared and contains no poisonous substance; so all who desire can use it without fear of evil consequences.

Bunions.—Among the bunion remedies put forward in the newspapers are the following: (1) Bind a fine linen band tightly around the foot and over the bunion, sew it on if necessary, and wear it day and night; bathe the feet frequently in strong borax water, using a teaspoonful of pulverized borax to a basin of water. (2) Use pulverized saltpetre and sweet oil; obtain at the druggist's 5 or 6 cents' worth of saltpetre; put into a bottle with sufficient olive oil to nearly dissolve it; shake up well, and rub the inflamed joints night and morning, and more frequently if painful. (3) Tallow dropped from a lighted candle on the affected part will eradicate the heat and finally remove the bunion. A strip of the candle should also be wound around the corn. Bandage at night. (4) Try binding on the pulp of a lemon every night.—Various Sources.

Sick Headache.—This complaint is the result of eating too much and exerting too little. Nine times out of ten the cause is in the fact that the stomach was not able to digest the food last introduced into it, either from its having been unsuitable or excessive in quantity. A diet of bread and butter, with ripe fruits or berries, with moderate, continuous exercise in the open air, sufficient to keep up a gentle perspiration, would cure almost every case in a short time. Two teaspoonfuls of powdered charcoal in half a glass of water, and drunk, generally gives instant relief. We are inclined to think that the above remedies may do in some, but not in all cases. A sovereign remedy for this disease is not easily found. A correspondent from Connecticut contributes the following on this subject: "Sick headache is periodical and is the signal of distress which the stomach puts up to inform us that there is an over-alkaline condition of its fluids; that it needs a natural acid to restore the battery to its normal working condition. When the first symptoms of a headache appear, take a teaspoonful of lemon juice clear, fifteen minutes before each meal, and the same dose at bed-time; follow this up until all symptoms are passed, taking no other remedies, and you will soon be able to go free from your unwelcome nuisance. Many will object to this because the remedy is too simple, but I have seen many cures in this way."

The Preacher's Story.

There were three passengers on a Dyersburg stage, and they were entertaining each other with yarns of travel—that is, two of them were doing the talking. The third, a clergyman, was rather quiet, and had little to say. The talkers had been pouring out marvelous stories of gigantic fish, enormous snakes, huge mosquitoes, etc., each trying to outdo the other in lying—all of which was evidently for the delectation of the innocent and gullible-looking parson. One had just finished a big frog tale, and the twain were winking at each other and watching its effect upon the preacher, when that individual aroused himself, and observed:

"Pardon me, gentlemen; do you see that cotton-gin on the right there?"

Yes, they saw a cotton-gin.

"You notice that is run by an old horse-power?"

Yes, they noticed it.

"Well that gin was once the property of old Jason Sanders, a great hunter and trapper in his day. One autumn, right in the midst of the ginning season, an epidemic broke out amongst the stock in this section. Sanders lost everything he had that could pull his power, and he was forced to stop his gin with most of his cotton in the seed. Neither horses, mules nor steers could he buy; and—well, sirs, he took to the woods and caught four immense, live red foxes—oh! they were giants—nothing like them ever seen before in this country—and the very next day, gentlemen, he—"

"Oh, yes, he made them foxes run his gin. Well, that is a whopper!"

"Tell that to the marines, old man!"

"I was going to say, gentlemen, that the very next day he took those foxes to town and got a big notice in the papers. I never heard of his running his gin with them."

And then the two travelers looked at each other wistfully, and one of them proposed that they get out and walk up the hill.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ALL SORTS.

The doctor took the oath, and then, sounding the Sultan's lungs, found them healthy, as also his general system, except a tendency to nervousness, for which horseback exercise was prescribed.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 9th, 1879

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

—The Auburn COURIER, although not having the pleasure of "editing" the county printing of DeKalb, takes the manly and honorable stand of refusing to cut rates in order to pick up an odd job or two of legal advertising.—It believes that "to the victors belong the spoils" at legal rates.—Columbia City Post.

The Banner would rejoice to be surrounded by an equally honorable competition. While Noble county was under republican rule, The Banner never felt tempted to diminish the earnings of republican organs by a system of "ratting" that is justly held in contempt by all honorable publishers. But as soon as the situation had undergone a change, officers elected by the democratic party were besought and besieged to peddle out their patronage to the lowest bidder. We have thus for years been compelled to submit to rates far below those fixed by law—not that this method benefited a dishonorable competitor, but that it gratified a spirit of envy and malignity which it is difficult to characterize in terms befitting its meanness and perfidy.—Ligonier Banner.

Indiana's Deaf and Dumb.

The 35th annual report of the Indiana Institution for educating the Deaf and Dumb, for the year ending Oct. 31, 1878, is before us. Thinking that a few extracts would be of interest to our many readers in DeKalb county, we have taken the trouble to select the following as the most important features of the report. The Board of Trustees and Superintendent urge the importance of greater capacity for the accommodation of the large number of applicants who are now seeking admission to that institution, and with a view of presenting the matter to the Legislature (about to convene) in a "clear and definite" light have procured plans for the necessary additions to the present buildings so as to make accommodations for one hundred additional pupils of each sex. The report is accompanied by a lithograph of the proposed additions, which, according to the estimate of the architect will cost $56, 367, 67. The current expense account for the past year aggregates $62, 997, 99 classified as follows;

For subsistence	$17,305 01
For control	1,000 00
For superintendence	4,722 32
For school department	$16,306 19
For services	3,965 50
For gaslight	835 10
For water rent	536 12
For steam heating	3,498 96
For repairs	6,621 78
For furniture and refurnishing	1,886 14
For miscellaneous items	2,338 64
For clothing	3,282 23
Total	$62,997 99

Number of pupils in attendance at date of report, males, 188, females, 140, total, 328. Since the opening of the institution, in 1844, 1207 pupils have been admitted, representing nine hundred and six (906) families, of which one family contained six deaf-mutes, two families contained five deaf-mutes, six families contained four deaf-mutes, thirty-six families contained three deaf-mutes; ninety-eight families contained two deaf-mutes, six hundred and sixty-three families contained one deaf-mute.

Their deaf-mute relationship was as follows:

Six pupils had a deaf-mute father and mother; five pupils had a deaf-mute father; four pupils had a deaf-mute father and mother and one sister; two pupils had deaf-mute father mother and two brothers; two pupils had four deaf-mute brothers; two pupils had three deaf-mute brothers; twenty pupils had two deaf-mute brothers; ninety-eight pupils had one deaf-mute brother; four pupils had two deaf-mute sisters and one brother; four pupils had two deaf-mute brothers and one sister; nine pupils had three deaf-mute sisters; twenty-one pupils had two deaf-mute sisters; eighty pupils had one deaf-mute sister; one pupil had deaf-mute father, mother, two brothers, four uncles and one aunt.

The origin of deafness, as given by the friends of the pupils, is shown in the following table:

Number born deaf	486
Caused by scarlet fever	122
By cerebro spinal meningitis	218
By brain fever	49
By bilious fever	2
By catarrhal fever	8
By typhoid fever	31
By erysipelas	3
By inflammation	75
By convulsions	16
By intermittent fever	6
By measles	24
By scrofula	9
By neuralgia	1
By dropsy	10
By teething	3
By wounds or injuries	18
By croup	3
By whooping-cough	10
By mumps	7
By diphtheria	3
By pneumonia	17
By small-pox	1
By salivation	1
By sickness	59
Cause unknown	43
Total	1,207

The whole number of pupils admitted from DeKalb county since 1844, is 9; the number discharged, 3; the number under instruction last year, 6; as follows: Jennie S. Hessinger, Auburn; Thos. M. Hull, Butler; Henry A. Swander, Corunna; James M. Swihart and Myron E. Watson, Auburn. Three persons applied for admission from this county last year, one of whom was admitted and two postponed.

Next week we will publish the rules and regulations for the admission of pupils.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS
THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD
READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

Sold Everywhere, 25 Cents.

45 Years Before the Public.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

TAX LIST FOR 1878.

Also, $1 for one dog, $3 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog, for the collection of which I may be found at the County Treasurer's office, in the town of Auburn, on and after December 15th, 1878.

Taxes may be paid in full, or in two installments. The first installment including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1879; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1879. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. penalty will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Road Receipts will not be received after the third Monday in April, only on delinquent taxes.

No Road Receipts will be received on the November installment.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No County Order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday of February, 1879.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday of April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipt will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

DANIEL GONSER, Treasurer of DeKalb County.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it. Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

EXECUTOR'S SALE.

A Magnificent Stock of Dry Goods to be Sold Regardless of Cost.---Not oftener than once in a life-time does such a chance occur.

By the terms of the will of the late John Gray Foster his interest in the business of the widely known firm of Foster Brothers, Fort Wayne, was permitted to remain for the term of two years, but at a recent conference of the executors and remaining partners, it was mutually agreed to close the estate interest on or about March 1st, 1879, and with that end in view the firm will inaugurate

A Great Special Sale, Regardless of Cost. Commencing Monday Jan. 13.

At least $25,000 worth of the immense and elegantly assorted stock must be turned into cash before the day of settlement arrives. To accomplish this at a dull season of the year, Foster Brothers realize that they

MUST TAKE A BIG LOSS FROM THE START.

But the firm which never quailed when, at the close of the war, and during the panic of 1873, it was sometimes necessary to loose a thousand dollars in a single day will not show the white feather now.

This Fearful Cut in Prices Will be Made in Every Department of Our Immense Store.

DRESS GOODS, SHAWLS, CLOAKS, FURS, FLANNELS, BLANKETS, JEANS AND CASSIMERES, CLOAKINGS, PRINTS, GINGHAMS, MUSLINS, TABLE LINENS, MERINO UNDERWEAR, EMBROIDERIES AND ALL FANCY GOODS, CARPETS, OIL CLOTHS, AND WINDOW SHADES WILL ALL GO DOWN TOGETHER.

These Prices Will Show What a Fearful Loss we are Ready to Take

The recent price has been 8c, and before the war they brought 12½c.

When an entire stock of goods is being slaughtered it is impossible to give many quotations. Goods we shall have one day will be sold the next. Those who come first will, of course, get the best bargains, and will have the best assortment to select from. People who wait until some kinds of goods are all sold will be unreasonable if they blame us for the results of their lack of promptness in taking advantage of this extraordinary opportunity for the purchase of dry goods and carpets at prices below the cost of manufacture.

Remember this Sale does not Commence until Monday, January 13th, 1879.

All Goods will be Marked in Plain Figures, and will be Sold only for Cash.

COLUMBIA CITY—Last week a fire broke out in the building occupied by Anthes' saloon and Greulich's provision store—a frame building, and had it not been for the apparatus of a $11,000 fire department, and the heroic efforts at the well drilled members of the department, who by hard work saved the property in which the fire originated as well as the remainder of the block, the loss would have been much larger than the entire cost of the apparatus.

In the same place the large residence of Mr. B. F. Belson caught fire and was also saved by an energetic fire department. Columbia City certainly has no cause to regret her investment in a first-class steam fire engine, besides she has an A. 1. Hook and Ladder company. We congratulate the boys on their success.

DECATUR, IND.—On Friday morning of last week, the Miesse Hotel, Bell's Livery barn, and a private barn belonging to a Mr. Burns, were totally destroyed by fire. The greater portion of the hotel furniture was saved, but the entire contents of the livery stable except horses were lost. Total loss about $5,600. In the afternoon of the same day, the old log jail was fired by a prisoner and is now in ashes. Decatur has no fire department.

OBITUARY.

EDITOR COURIER—Dear Sir: Please give space in your valuable paper to the announcement of the sudden and unexpected death of Mr James McOscar of Smithfield township, who departed this life at the residence of his parents last Saturday morning, January 4th, in the 22nd year of his age. He was engaged in teaching the 4th term of school, in while is known as the county line school house, Fairfield township, and parted his pupils last Friday evening at the close of his week's labor. On returning home he complained of not feeling very well and retired early. His brothers were aroused the next morning at three o'clock by his heavy and suppressed breathing, and found him in an unconcious state. Medical aid was summoned and the trouble was pronounced congestion of the lungs All assistance failed to resuscitate, and the sad messenger of death fulfilled his mission at 8:20 A. M. Mr. James McOscar was a young man of bright intellect, studious and persevering in all his undertakings, amiable and beloved by those who knew him best. He leaves many friends who sympathise with the family in their sad bereavement.

Dan has been connected with that paper since 1855, and has succeeded in establishing one of the best county papers in the State; his editorials are always read with interest by the editorial faternity as well his subscribers. The Democrat under his management has gained a reputation for independence and candor; it has been free from personalities and firm in the advocacy of the political principles of the party of its choice. In the with drawal of our friend Dan, the fraternity has lost one of its brightest lights. May prosperity ever attend him.

—The late Bayard Taylor, in a letter just printed in the Wilmington, (Del.) Commercial, thus refers to his name:

"I was named by my parents simply 'Bayard,' after James A. Bayard, the grandfater of our senator. As a boy of sixteen or seventeen I sometimes attached 'J,' (never James) to my name foolishly thinking it would look better. When my first volume of poems came out, Rufus Griswold, my first literary friend, put 'James Bayard Taylor' on the title page, and the small private addition was printed before I could correct it. The matter was an annoyance to me then, and has been ever since. I felt bound to retain the 'J,' however, until I was twenty-one, and became legally responsible for my signature. Then I dropped it instantly, and have never since used anything else than my original and only true name."

—An effort is being made to have the Sedan and Orland mail route discontinued, and have a new route established to run from Kendallville to Angola.

Ice, Ice, Ice.

Our enterprising butcher S. U. Tarney has packed a large quantity of ice for summer use. All those wanting ice will do well to give him a call. Ice furnished at the door every morning during the summer.

—Mr. Albert Fristoe, of Adams county, gave the COURIER office a friendly call while in the city last week. He reports Democracy flourishing in old Adams as usual. Mr. F. was the guest of one of Auburn's "fair ones."

Rewarded.

Steele & Price, the manufacturers of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, are rewarded by the reputation of manufacturing good articles. It is a shameful confessionto make that many people are willing to use adulterated articles because of a small reduction in price.

—Mrs. Wright enjoyed—we should say might have enjoyed a fast ride up Jackson street yesterday afternoon; she was left at the south end of town however, and the horse and cutter passed away into the dim distance at a gait that the best "timers" could not have caught.

Lemon.

It is from the rind of the Messina lemon that Dr. Price prepares his special flavoring extract of lemon. While other lemon extracts in a little time have the taste and odor of turpentine. Dr. Price's for any length of time retains its intense lemony taste.

GARRETT, IND., Jan. 6, 1879.

EDITOR COURIER:—Please permit me through the columns of your paper to return thanks to Miss Jennie Lahmon, Miss Mary Recktenwald, Miss Mahala Lahmon, Mr. Lewis Weygandt and Mr. Samuel Noel, of my school for the beautiful scarf they presented me as a New Year's present. I treasure it as a token that my efforts to make my school pleasant and instructive have not been in vain, and oblige.

W. H. HOAGLAND, Teacher.

—No doubt the most happy event during the life of Mr. Daniel McDonald editor and proprietor of the Plymouth Democrat, was that of the "grand reception" at his residence on New Year's eve., being the twenty-first aniversary of his marriage. Over three hundred guests were in attendance. A beautiful silver tea service, consisting of a coffee-urn, tea-urn, hot water urn, cream pitcher, sugar bowl, slop bowl and spoon holder, was presented to Mrs. McDonald. After which Hon. C. H. Reeve, with his usual eloquence made "Dan" the happy possessor of a gold watch.

St. Joe Items

—Dr Goodale complains of having his ears nipped by "jack frost."

—C. H. W., the railroad agent, is back at his post again after a two week vacation.

—J. D. Leighty attended the installation of officers at Hicksville on Friday night last.

—Some one got two cheap cans of oyster on new year's evening. Better pay for your oysters, they taste better.

—The bridge over the railroad near this place, which has been considered a nuisance so long, is likely soon to be a thing of the past.

—The cold snap of Thursday and Friday nipped the ears and fingers of some of St. Joe's early risers. Mort, don't get out so early.

—Summeriott & Barbo go to Mark Center this week to work on the new railroad, they having a contract of 1½ miles (wooden railroad.)

—While Solomon Shilling was out riding on new year's day, he was thrown from his sleigh, breaking one rib and receiving other internal injures.

—Mrs. James Rickets died suddenly on Tuesday morning, Dec. 31st, with lung fever. Mrs. R, leaves a husband andtwo little children to mourn her loss.

—In order to get rid of the company of a certain person, Reed offered $5.00 to anyone that would devise some means to get rid of such person. James still has his $5.00, and the company disposed of. Thanks to Uncle Ed., the fur buyer.

—J. W. Dills raised, as he thinks, the boss field of corn last season. The following is the measurment of ground and corn. Ten acres and forty-four rods produced forty loads of seventeen bushels to the load, 680 bushels of shelled corn.

—An old gentleman came to town in a cutter on one of the coldest days last week and drove to Ford's livery barn, where he had to be helped into the office and otherwise cared for to prevent death from freezing.

Spencerville Items.

—Oh, Tommy! what can the matter be?

—Mr. W. H. Kinsey is engaged in getting up a class of juvenile singers.

—The extreme cold weather causes a small attendance at the protracted meeting.

—The entertainment given by the band was a success, the receipts amounting to upwards of $30,00.

—"Jack frost" has been busily engaged nipping the toes, fingers and ears of those being too free with the old gentleman.

—A number of our young ladies gave an oysters supper at Mr. Culbertson's. They secured the company of the young men who they gallently entertained.

—The following are the officers elect of Spencerville lodge I. O. O. F. O. W. Rummell, N. G., E. W. Errick, V. G., G. A. Bishop, Sec'y., J. A. Provines, Treas.

Newville Items.

—Business still seems dull as it has been for sometime past.

—Good sleighing and the weather extremely cold, the mercury down to 22 below zero.

—Saw logs are coming in slowly this winter, notwithstanding the roads are in as good condition as ever they were.

—Dr. J. M. Coombs, of Hicksville, Ohio, has traded his dwelling house and lot in Newville for Mr. Arrant's farm, in Stafford township, one and a half miles from town. Mr. Arrant is sick and not able or likely ever to be able to manage the farm, as he is about 80 years old.

—We learn that our republican friends are not very well satisfied with the Wards of the nation, as they were; Negro suffrage is not so popular with that party as it was two years ago. Try and keep it down since you were so anxious to swallow it. Try and make another amendment, perhaps you can do better.

—We had a wedding the other day, but it went off so slyly that it was not known until it was over. Mr Thomas to Miss Nelson, of Wilmington township.

A TALE OF LONG AGO.

BY HELEN ANGELL GOODWIN.

Night in the Baron's castle,
Night on the windy moor,
The best of nights for the very rich
And the worst for the very poor;
For the Yule-log blazed in the ancient hold,
And the beggar shrank from the biting cold.

The Baron's only daughter,
The little Lady Grace,
Was better dressed than any guest
And fairer in the face;
But never a thought of pride had she,
As they gayly danced round the Christmas-tree.

When lo! an ill-clad stranger
Stood in the firelight's glow;
His head was bare, his golden hair
All wet with melting snow.
"Whence comest thou?" the children cried,
But only a dim, sweet smile replied.

"It is the little Christ-child."
Low spoke the Lady Grace.
"I dreamed last night that a halo bright
Shone round that very face.
And he said: 'Be sure you have eyes to see,
For I shall stand by your Christmas-tree.'"

"So, when they spread the table,
A chair I bade them set
At my right hand for a guest more grand
Than all assembled yet.
And my mother said, when the servant smiled:
'Tis the second sight. Obey the child.'"

Then all the noisy children
Were silent for a space;
But no one heard him speak a word,
Though the smile grew on his face,
Till they saw a halo pure and faint,
Round the stranger's head, like a pictured saint.

In strides the stately Baron,
To view the children's cheer.
"Who has the place by the Lady Grace?
How came a beggar here?"
Said the Lady Grace: "God pardon thee!
The little Christ-child dines with me."

The Baron staggers backward
And smites upon his breast.
Before him stands, with clasped hands,
One more unbidden guest.
"Hast thou come back here from the dead,
Grace, my sister Grace?" he said.

"They told you falsely, brother.
Seven years ago to-day,
With a father's blame and a blighted name,
I left this castle gray;
But at Christmas-time of every year
I have stood outside, I have seen you here.

"My son comes always with me,
Or else I could not come,
He will ever be like a babe to me,
For he is deaf and dumb.
He slipped from sight when my head was bowed,
And I saw him next in the youthful crowd.

"Among the happy children
I left my smiling boy,
For light and heat and enough to eat
Are all he can enjoy;
But I'll take him now; I will go away,
And will come no more on the Christmas day."

"Nay, then," replied the Baron,
"Thou shalt not go again.
Thy seven years of toil and tears
Amid the scorn of men
Are enough, in sooth, for a lifetime long;
And we've all done wrong—we have all done wrong."

Then followed hearty greeting,
Where people wept and smiled;
And the Lady Grace, with a warm embrace,
Welcomed the silent child.
But she wept that night on her mother's breast
That the Christ-child had not been her guest.

"Nay, grieve thee not, my daughter,
The Christ of Good has come;
But he chooses to speak through a woman weak
And a child that is deaf and dumb,
And 'as ye have done,' in the book saith He,
'To the least of mine, ye have done to me.'"

WIDOWS BEWITCHED.

The Effect of an Advertisement.

Grand and gorgeous is the first morning of spring. It is not the tapping of woodpecker in the hollow beech, nor yet the nutchat humming at his breakfast, that soft rap-a-tap-tap one hears. It is only Mr. Ernest Black knocking out his pipe against the garden-seat.

Happy man! to have such a charming nook wherein to smoke the early pipe. His comfortable mansion of Shrublands, a cozy, modern building, warm and roomy, with glass houses clustered about it, and its convenient offices at the rear, lies on the slope above. In front of him stretches a pleasant lawn, and he looks over upon a sweet river valley, bounded by purple hills, reaches of water showing in silver streaks here and there. A warm, pleasant little dingle encompasses the grounds, sheltering the house from the north and east, and sloping down toward the south, and here the first breath of new-born spring is felt, and the first green leaf of the year is seen on that slender white birch, whose brown catkins are dying for love of the earliest blossoms of the season.

Ernest thought that it was very good to be here, as he smoked his pipe on his garden-seat. But everything comes to an end, and, by the time he had finished his pipe and knocked out the ashes, a cloud had come over the sun, the air was chilled, and the beauty of the morn tarnished. It was time, he found, to start for his train. He went into the house to say "good-by" to his wife, for he heard the carriage-wheels grinding on the gravel as it came round from the stables to the door.

He seemed to be a happy fellow, too, in his wife, who was a fair, pleasant-faced woman, of charming figure, and full spirit.

"I didn't know you were going away," she said, a slight shade of vexation coming over her face.

"Didn't I tell you?" said Ernest. "I intended to. I shall be home to dinner. I am only going to town to see the old masters. They close this week."

"Ah! if you had told me in time I would have gone with you."

To say the truth, Ernest did not much care for company when he was going to look at pictures.

"Pity, eh?" he said, carelessly putting his hand under her chin and giving her a kiss. "Well, another day, perhaps, Tottie"—her name was Theresa, but her pet name was Tottie—"and then perhaps I can go shopping with you."

"But I particularly wanted to see those pictures."

"Why didn't you think of it before?"

"You should have told me you were going."

"Yes, it was stupid of me; however, there's no help for it; I have only just time to catch the train. Good-by."

And away he went.

Theresa sat down once more to her book of household expenses, but the totals ran into each other, and the same row of figures wouldn't come to the same amount twice running. It wasn't like Ernest, she thought, not to ask her to go with him. He had never gone off anywhere before without asking her to accompany him if it were practicable. His manner, too, was so cold. What could be the reason of it?

She took up the newspaper to distract her mind. She rarely looked at the daily papers, but this morning she felt uneasy, and couldn't settle to anything. Suddenly she sprung to her feet, with a cry of distress.

She had taken up the outside sheet of the paper, and thereon she had read an advertisement:

"Constance to Ernest. To-day, at Victoria, 12 noon."

That was the reason, then, that Ernest had gone off to town so suddenly. Yes, she knew it; she had been wronged and deceived. Could it be possible that such treachery, such betrayal of all the ties of friendship and affection could be permitted to exist?

Theresa was, perhaps, of a somewhat jealous disposition. Certainly Ernest had given her no cause for jealousy hitherto, as far as she knew, but she had always imagined it possible that at some time or other he would; and now it seemed to her as though her forebodings had been justified.

Constance Brown had been her earnest friend, her schoolfellow, her one dear companion, for whom her affection could never be dimmed. And this friendship had continued unabated for a whole two years after her marriage to Ernest, during which it had been her chief delight to entertain Constance at her new home. Now Ernest wasn't at the beginning, at any rate, at all fond of Constance, and used to think her visits rather a bore. Anything was better, however, than having his wife in the dolefuls, and on such occasions he would suggest:

"Ask Constance to come and spend a few days."

As time went on, however, little disagreements interposed between the two friends. Constance was of an adaptive nature, and fonder of masculine than feminine society. She professed great interest in Ernest's pursuits, which were rather of a miscellaneous character. Altogether she grew in grace and favor with the husband, and declined in equal measure in the wife's esteem. She was too keen-witted herself not to perceive this, but the ineradicable love of coquetry and mischief that lurks in every female bosom forbade her to change her tactics.

The end of it was a desperate quarrel between Constance and Theresa, and Constance's hasty departure from Shrublands in a great rage. On her part, Theresa vowed that she would never have that deceitful girl in her house again.

"All right," Ernest had said; "if you don't care about it I don't."

But Theresa's jealousy, once aroused, was not to be quieted by any such pretenses as these. It was all very well of Ernest to say so, but his saying so didn't deceive her. Having once thrown her influence over Ernest, Constance, she knew, would not be satisfied to resign her power so easily. She didn't doubt but that Constance would, in some way or other, contrive to see him, and this morning's paper had given her a clew to the means she adopted.

Very well. Theresa, too, would be at Victoria at 12 noon.

The carriage had just returned from taking Ernest to the station; it should also convey her to the next train for London. She would have sufficient time to reach the trysting place by noon.

Victoria station, however, is rather a wide, open place, not adapted for concealment. How should she so disguise herself that she might witness the meeting unobserved? Then she remembered that her Aunt Blake, who had been a widow for a couple of years, had left behind her a widow's cap, bonnet and veil, having taken the opportunity of a visit to her niece to resume the ordinary costume of womankind.

Bonnets are not formidable things now-a-days, and Theresa put her aunt's weeds, with a black crape shawl, into a traveling-bag. She put on a black dress with a white shawl over it, and her usual traveling bonnet, that she might not give rise to surmises at her sudden assumption of mourning, and then started off.

The clock showed five minutes to 12 when she arrived at Victoria. She hurried off to the ladies' waiting-room, donned her bonnet, cap, shawl and veil, and came out upon the platform a demure widow.

Sure enough, Ernest was there, walking up and down. She gave a kind of guilty start as he passed her, and he looked rather hard at the young widow with the nice, trim figure.

"So," she thought, "that is the way you look at young women when I am not by?"

The next turn that she took she started as she saw approaching her from the opposite side of the platform the very double of herself. Black dress, black crape shawl, widow's cap, bonnet and everything! She thought, at the first moment, that there was a mirror opposite her, and that she saw her own reflected image. But it was not so. The lady threw up her veil and revealed the features of Constance Brown. It was only for a moment, and then she drew her veil closely over her face, and, making a slight gesture, as it seemed, of caution, she made her way to the booking-office, went up to a porter, and asked, in a clear, loud voice, when the train started for Brighton.

Theresa glided into the office by the opposite door. The pretended widow was waiting her turn at the ticket-hatch. With the quickness of thought Theresa ran up to the barrier. A genial-looking old man was taking his ticket.

"Might I ask you, sir, to get me a ticket for Brighton?"

"Most certainly, madam," said the old gentleman.

She grasped her ticket and hurried on to the departure platform, giving, as she went, the same signal with her hand that she had seen her double make just before.

Yes, he had recognized the signal and followed her.

The train was just due to start, and she hastily jumped into a first-class carriage. A gentleman jumped in after her.

"Faithless fellow!" she thought.

"Constance," said a tremulous voice at her side—"dearest Constance."

"You wretch!" cried Theresa, suddenly unveiling.

But the effect was not what she anticipated. It was not her husband at all; it was Capt. Potter, late of the Plungers.

It is now necessary to revert to the proceedings of Mr. Black to account for his presence on the scene.

Ernest had intended to take the newspaper up to town with him, having been interested in an article he had not had time to finish. But having, with his customary carelessness, left it behind him, he bought another at the station, and then the advertisement caught his eye—"Constance to Ernest." Yes, he knew what it meant.

Ernest Black and Ernest Potter had been school-fellows and cronies in early days, but their friendship had long since decayed. Potter was a reckless spendthrift, who had been obliged to leave the Plungers and sell his commission, swamped with innumerable debts. He had been an old friend of the Browns, too, and Constance had formerly been infatuated with him; but her father, who was a very violent, self-willed old fellow, swore that she should never marry such a scamp.

Constance had a nice little fortune of her own, and she had just come of age, so that, if she persisted in throwing herself and her fortune away, there was no help for it. Still Ernest thought it was his duty to stop it, if he could. He flattered himself that he had some influence over Constance; and, if he couldn't put an end to the affair altogether, he might prevail upon her to have all her money carefully tied up.

The advertisement meant an elopement, Ernest thought—a clandestine marriage, and the sacrifice of all the girl's future to a worthless scamp. He would be there, too, and save her if he could.

At all events he found himself on the platform of Victoria station at noon. Ah! there was Capt. Potter, as he expected, stalking up and down, evidently expecting somebody. Ernest didn't take any notice of him; and Potter seemed anxious, on his part, to avoid any recognition. But there was no Constance. He kept, however, a sharp look-out on the Captain, and, all of a sudden, he noticed that his eyes lit up, and, turning quickly around, Ernest saw a lady in deep mourning pass into the booking-office.

Potter now took up a position close to the wicket that opened to the departure platform where the man stood who punched holes in the tickets. Presently a lady in black brushed rapidly past. Ernest followed her a few paces to assure himself it was not Constance Brown. No; the lady was of quite a different carriage and figure from Constance—more like his own wife, he said, with a jealous pang that he laughed at himself next moment for feeling. Whoever it was, she jumped into the carriage, and the Captain after her. The guard whistled off the train, and Ernest turned away, thinking that he had been rather a fool for his pains.

Then he saw another young widow gazing eagerly about her, and running here and there, evidently looking for some one she couldn't find. At last, apparently overcame with emotion or fatigue, she flung herself upon a bench and hastily threw up her veil, revealing the pretty, agitated face of Constance Brown.

Ernest sprung toward her.

"Constance," he whispered, "you here, and in this disguise! what does it mean?"

Constance burst into tears, and sobbed out that she didn't know.

"I know," he said, severely; "you have an assignation with that infamous Potter."

"Infamous, indeed," said Constance; "and he has gone off with somebody else."

At this moment, a man in livery approached and touched his hat to Ernest. It was his own coachman, an old and faithful servant, who had been coachman to Ernest's father.

"Beg your pardon, Mr. Ernest, for coming up here without leave, but have you seen the mistress, sir?"

"No. What do you mean?"

"Well, sir, she drove to the station after you left, sir, and she seemed so wild-like and unaccountable, that I made bold to follow her for fear she might come to harm, and I followed her here, sir, where she changed her dress for widow's weeds, and got into the Brighton train, sir, with Capt. Potter."

Ernest turned pale and almost fainted. He recovered himself by a great effort.

"I know," he cried. "I sent her to Brighton, and have just seen her off. How dare you follow your mistress, sir?"

The man turned away in blank dismay.

"Ernest," said Constance, "we have both been deceived."

"Stuff!" said Ernest, "it was a trick we played you, that's all; we found out your plot, and we counter-plotted to save you.

But still there was terrible doubt at his heart. What could it all mean?

"Come into the waiting-room, Constance," he cried, "and let us talk. Ah, what misery!" he muttered to himself.

They turned into the waiting-room, and Ernest threw himself upon a seat, leaned his arm upon the table, and groaned.

"What do you intend to do, Ernest," said Constance, clutching him by the arm. "It is all very well to tell your servant such stories. I admire you for it, Ernest, but I know better. It is deliberately planned. We are both deceived."

"It is impossible," said Ernest.

"How blind you are," said Constance. "I always mistrusted Theresa; she was my early friend, you remember, and I believe that Potter used to come to our house on purpose to see her, using me as a blind. Oh, Ernest, what shall we do?"

"I shall have a special train and follow them," cried Ernest.

"Then I will go with you," cried Constance.

Ernest rose and staggered to the platform once more.

"Ernest!" said a decisive, feminine voice at his elbow.

He turned, and beheld his wife and Capt. Potter.

"Hullo!" cried Potter. "Ernest, my boy, how are you? Gad! I've got into a pretty mess with all this ambuscading; wrong party after all, jolly row, pull the string, stop the train—Clapham Junction, guard in awful rage. Give us into custody, eh? Ha, ha! Here we are again back first train. I say, old fellow, I'll change widows with you."

"Come into the waiting-room," cried Black, "and tell me what it all means. Potter, I consider you an unprincipled fellow to inveigle this young lady into such a trap. You know you only want to waste her fortune as you've wasted your own."

"Gently, old fellow," said Potter; "all a mistake. My uncle died last week and left me three thousand a year."

"Then why do you make off in this clandestine way?"

"It's all right, Black, I assure you. I've got a special license in my pocket, parson waiting at Brighton. We're both of age, you know."

"Then why all this disguise?"

"Oh, that was my doing," sobbed Constance. "I was so dreadfully afraid of papa."

"And how did you get the widow's things, Constance?"

"F—from—your—Aunt Blake. It wasn't very wicked, was it?"

"I think," said Theresa, who had recovered her equanimity and her usual aspect of proud serenity, "I think, Constance, you had better come back to Shrublands with me, and be married in a respectable, orderly way."

And they settled that so it should be. They all went back to Shrublands, and Constance was married the next week, not in the widow's weeds, but in full bridal costume, with several bridesmaids.

"Ernest," said Theresa, affectionately, when it was all over, "I'll never be jealous again, but for all that I'm glad that artful minx is safely disposed of. She shall never enter my doors again, never."

Potter always speaks of his old friend Black with affectionate commiseration, and swears that the worst five minutes he ever spent in his life were passed in the Brighton express in company with Madame Theresa.

A Fiend Incarnate.

S. D. Richards, who was recently arrested at Mount Pleasant, near Steubenville, Ohio, for the murder of a woman and her three children in Nebraska, has made a confession, of which the following are the material parts: "I was born in Mount Pleasant, Jefferson county, Ohio, and am a Quaker by birth and religion. I went West, and have lived in Michigan, Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado and Nebraska. The first murder I committed was in Buffalo county, in the latter State, where I shot a man with whom I was engaged in a quarrel. I afterward murdered another man in his own house, because he cursed me, beating his brains out with a hammer. I then went to Kearney. At that place there lived a Swede, a bachelor, on a farm by himself. He had plenty of money, and I went to live with him, soon after which I poisoned him, but, as he did not die quick enough to suit me, I one night knocked his brains out with a club and took all his money. This Mrs. Harleson, whom I murdered along with her three children, had a dissolute husband, and a short time ago he went away and left her. She was a hard-working woman, and had a farm with plenty of grain, stock, poultry, etc., on it. I conceived the idea of murdering her and her children, and then selling off everything she had and pocketing the proceeds. For this purpose I told the neighbors I was going to take Mrs. Harleson and her children to a neighboring town, and for them to come over the next day and feed the stock. That night I murdered them, and hid their bodies under a hay-stack, and went away myself. After the lapse of two or three days, I returned and gave out that Mrs. Harleson had gone to join her husband, and that I had bought everything she had. I accordingly sold out everything, and, as I saw that I was suspected, left the place and came on to Mount Pleasant. It was on the 8th of December that I committed these murders. I deny nothing. I am guilty of the crimes I am charged with, and expect to hang for them, but when they take me back I want to be treated as if I was once a white man, if I do not now deserve the title, and have a fair trial before the law. I believe I will be mobbed as soon as I arrive in Kearney. I am a member of a band in Nebraska that is sworn to avenge the death of any member, and they will avenge mine. I am sorry I came home and brought disgrace upon my friends who live in Mount Pleasant."

A Vermonter's Square Meal.

A Vergennes (Vt.) letter to the New York Sun says: "On Wednesday evening a wager was laid between William Laduke, of Vergennes, and Messrs. Forton & La Bombord, as follows: Laduke was to eat in ten hours two pounds of pork-steak, four large potatoes, one-half of a pie, two slices of wheat bread, each one and one-quarter inches thick, one-quarter pound of butter, half a bushel of apples, and to drink two cups of tea. At 7 o'clock on Thursday morning the gourmand began his task by eating five apples. He then ate one pound of pork-steak, two large potatoes, one slice of bread, one-quarter of a pie, one-eighth pound of butter, and drank one cup of tea. The remainder of the forenoon he spent in walking about and eating apples, of which he had devoured twenty-three at 12 o'clock. At noon he ate one pound of pork-steak, two large potatoes, one-quarter of a pie, one slice of bread, one-eighth pound of butter, and drank two cups of tea. He was then weighed, and found to have gained seven and one-half pounds. For the next three hours he averaged about two apples per hour. At 5:30 p. m. he ate the last apple and won the bet with half an hour to spare. His weight when he began was 145 pounds, and at the close 153 pounds, showing a gain of 8 pounds in 9½ hours. Seven and one-half pounds of this he acquired in the first five hours, the last five hours adding only one-half pound to his weight. The half-bushel of apples was "heaping" measure, and numbered just sixty-five apples. Laduke is 26 years old, 5 feet 7 inches in height, and has never experienced a sick day in his life. He is a thin, spare man, and has always worked out for his living, usually among the farmers. He experienced no unusual difficulty from his square meal, and offered to bet $5 that he could eat another peck of apples the same evening."

CAPTURED BY INDIANS.

Remarkable Adventures of an Iowa Woman and Her Son.

[Omaha Cor. New York Herald.]

Deep interest is taken here in the narrative of Mrs. Charles Jones, of Washington county, Iowa, who arrived with her son last night, and whose story of suffering on the plains, with the astonishing revelations regarding certain Indians of the Yankton Agency, has few parallels in frontier history. Mrs. Jones and her son, it is believed, are the sole survivors of a party of twelve emigrants who left Washington county last February for the Yellowstone valley. They reached Fort Kearney about March 1, 1878, and when a few days out from there, in the river bottom, they were surrounded by a party of seventy Indians. William Brown, Joshua Brown and Joseph Hyatt, a brother of Mrs. Jones, constituting the men of the party, were instantly shot dead. All the others were taken into captivity. All but Mrs. Jones and her son disappeared, and, as she believes, were massacred.

She was made a slave to the Chief named Yankton, cooking, picking berries, and performing other menial offices. She was never allowed to meet or talk with her son. Her clothes were taken from her, and she was allowed only blanket and moccasins. The camp was moved often, always northward. The warriors several times left the party, and returned with clothing and plunder, evidently taken from murdered whites. The interpreter who was with the party, named Ginnes, stated that he was captured from a party of emigrants when he was only 11 years old, and he is now 40. He adopted their life, became a Catholic, and was educated at a Jesuit college. He told Mr. Jones that the party were chiefly Yanktons, from the Yankton Agency, but were a few from Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Agencies. They were out always during summer and returned to the agencies in the winter.

Their slaves are kept outside the agencies in concealment. Other female white slaves in the party told her, through the interpreter, that their friends had been murdered, and, as they had no homes, they had no desire to escape. Young Jones, who is aged 15, became a favorite and was kindly treated. At the expiration of two months they reached the neighborhood of a small village in Northern Nebraska, where the Indians procured liquor, and they all became drunk. That night Mrs. Jones escaped, having on only a ragged blanket and one moccasin. She traveled south, being guided in her course by the stars, and subsisting for many days on raw artichokes. After five or six days she met occasional emigrant wagons moving northward, and Mrs. Jones was given a dress. She begged her way through the State, reaching home in Iowa the last day of June.

Here she procured a small sum of money. She became alarmed at the uncertainty of her son's fate and returned to Central Nebraska, where she traveled from place to place, watching for emigrants from the north and living with farmers. At the expiration of many weeks, sick and disheartened, she again started eastward. One day last October, while walking through Kearney, she met an emaciated lad, whom she recognized as her son, who had just come in from a long and terrible journey. Sheltered by James Carmichael, a farmer, she watched at her son's bedside during a long illness. When the boy had partially recovered, they both started east on foot, stopping with farmers and making slow progress on account of their enfeebled condition.

Citizens here collected some money and sent both home this morning. Every detail of the above story is confirmed. The naked bodies of three murdered men were found last March on the plains north of Kearney, but the murders were supposed to be the work of tramps. Men here from the agencies are preparing to investigate the matter, and express the opinion that many of the agency Indians have kept up the systematic murder of settlers during the summer and successfully concealing their crime. At the Yankton Agency there will be an immediate investigation, and the identity of the Indians secured, if possible.

Some Old-Fashioned Scotch Funerals.

Talking of funerals, in the good old times, and in the mansions of the lairds, these used to be the most enjoyable of parochial festivities. The kith and kin came from great distances to be entertained in a style befitting the occasion. There were grave faces at the gathering when the guests assembled round the coffin to listen to a suitable prayer. Then glasses of wine were handed round once, twice, or oftener—the poorest people would procure wine for the occasion—and "the memory of the deceased" was toasted in silence. Then the long procession moved off to the kirkyard, and the body was laid silently in the grave. That duty being solemnly discharged, a load was visibly lifted from the assistants. Acquaintances came together in the carriages and mourning coaches, and there was plenty of animated conversation. When the guests took their seats at the tables in the dining-room all were in excellent spirits and appetite. The near relations might be sad at heart, but they felt hospitably bound to stifle their sorrow, and there were ample appliances for drowning it. When the old fashion of drinking healths and "taking wine" prevailed, mourners were apt to get merry in spite of themselves, while, as may be supposed, the mere acquaintances of the deceased gave themselves over easily to boisterous joviality. It was a churlish thing to be the first to break up good company, and even the minister might well sit it out till convivial example upset his decorum.—Cornhill Magazine.

THE European migratory quails imported to this country some time ago, in the hope of their taking up a residence here, are heard of now and then in the South, where they have gone to spend the winter. Meanwhile the sporting papers are begging gunners to abstain from shooting these foreign quails until they have time to increase and get a foothold in the United States.

THE GRASS-GROWN STILE.

BY NATHAN D. URNER.

Unchanged amid a world of change,
It stands with stubborn kindness fast,
Which naught from memory can estrange—
A landmark of the precious past;
Where shade was sought, and time was lost,
And gossips met to chat awhile,
And many a step, now silent, crossed
The ancient grass-grown stile.

Thinned is the grand old wood endeared,
Trimmed the low hedge that ragged grew,
The brook's wild banks precisely sheared,
And even the bridge that spans it new;
A newer path winds in and out
Through many a green and leafy mile,
And makes a studied swerve to flout
The poor old grass-grown stile.

But still the shadows come and go,
And forest scents are softly blown,
And flowering creepers to and fro
Swing, pendulous, o'er the steps of stone;
To the brook's brink, with thirsty haste,
The long, white-throated sunbeams file,
Yet falter ere the wave they taste
Below the grass-grown stile.

Here pious folk on Sabbaths meet,
A-loitering on their way from church;
The schoolboy here his satchel set,
Mindless alike of book or birch;
And here the swain forgot to sing,
And rhymes forsook for jest and smile,
As the blithe milkmaid, caroling,
Tripped o'er the grass-grown stile.

And here fond lovers made their tryst,
To list the tale, forever new,
And mingled sighs, the while they kissed,
And blessed the sweet-stolen interview;
Until, as minutes lapsed to hours,
And rosier grew the impassioned smile,
It seemed an altar, strewn with flowers,
The dear old grass-grown stile.

All silent now, and lorn and gray,
No more is heard the rustic's rhyme,
Nor lover's sound, nor roundelay,
Nor any step save that of Time,
Whose haunting foot no prayer could stay,
Nor any tale of love beguile,
As, hour by hour, and day by day,
He, too, passed o'er the stile.

SABBATH READING.

A New Year's Sermon.

Pause in thy headlong onward rush, Oh, soul!
To the mysterious margin of that boundless sea,
The fathomless depths of eternity,
And ere thou reachest that inevitable goal:
While yet time's fleeting tides around thee roll,
Think if to meet God's searching gaze prepared thy vesture be.

Here, where the new year treads upon the old—
While brazen bells of one the death is knelling;
For birth of one a joyous pæan swelling—
Bethink thee, in the year that o'er thy head hast rolled,
How hast thou built? On rock, with firm hold?
Or on the shifting sands hast reared a perishable dwelling?

If well and truly thou hast wrought, thank God
That toward eternal heaven another step is won;
Another flight still nearer to the sun
Thou'st gained. Rejoice that thou hast trode
Thou far and faithfully upon the thorny road
That ends in everlasting bliss when earth's brief day is done.

But, if thou find'st thou hast garnered rust
Where golden treasure should be; hast misspent thy time
In idle willfulness, or vice, or crime,
Let swift repentance bend thee to the dust,
On God's omnipotent mercy place thy trust;
Resolved, henceforth, to walk in virtue's path sublime.

CHICAGO, Ill. J. A. J.

The New Year.

For a brief space we pause on the threshold of the New Year. It is a suitable time to take our bearings, and see if we are tending upward and making progress in whatsoever things are noble and intrinsically good. Our plans for the year we may revise, and adapt them to present exigencies. Reviewing the past, taking note of our failures and our successes, we can see where and how to change our methods and improve on our former courses of action. As we cannot tell "what a day may bring forth," this revision is called for in some lives much oftener than once a year. Vicissitude, losses, gains, bereavements, overtake us continually, are waiting for us, and though perpetually we need, like the Captain of a ship, to consult our charts, to watch the barometer, to see that the pilot is evermore at his place with his eye on the compass and his hand on the wheel, yet there is a feeling with almost everybody that New Year is the time for a general "taking of stock" in character, in acquirements, in reasonable prospects, in well-grounded hopes.

Though outward circumstances may be largely beyond our control and we be hemmed in by barriers, social, conventional, domestic, yet within even the narrowest life there is a chance for growth. Let us not, in longing for what is beyond our reach, overlook or slight the oportunities, however small, that may be vouchsafed us. Whatever the outward life we lead, the true life is within, and for the regulation and management of this we are accountable. Virtue dwells in lowly cottages quite as often as in lordly palaces. Honor and honesty and loyalty to truth as not the texture of the fabrics that clothe their habitation. How often do we need to recall the words of Naaman's servant: "My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it?" There are very few to whom it is given to do any "great thing;" the lives of most are made up of little things, but, in the aggregate, one life thus composed may have as much of actual good done to show as lives called great by those who see from the outside. There is not one of us but may reach some human heart near us and comfort it with kindly words, or strengthen it with sympathy, or enrich it with love. Often the best service we can render others is to be ourselves exemplary, patient under burdens, charitable toward our own and others' faults, slow to anger, free from jealousy, envy, malice. "He who is of this spirit does good often when he knows not of it. He is, among men, like the showers which pass over the earth, which, falling everywhere, sometimes may fall on the desert, but more often on the soil that needs and is prepared for them. A virtue goes out from him to those who, unwitnessed, but touch the hem of his garments."

If, every day, the minor duties of life as they come up are faithfully discharged; if the petty annoyances to which we are all subject are patiently endured; if, resolutely turning our eyes away from vanities, we fasten them earnestly upon the "best gifts," and keep in sight the ideals that represent to us truth and honor and virtue, making our way as we can toward them, a year thus spent will show at its close large returns, ample rewards.

It is not wise to waste in rash and vehement resolutions the moral power we need to enter upon right courses of action. Let this moral force be conserved and drawn upon, day by day, as it is needed, keeping it reinforced by constant recourse to the fountains of wisdom and virtue, found not only in the scriptures but in the writings of uninspired men, if such men as Plato, Milton, Whittier and a whole galaxy of noble writers can be called uninspired.

A Singular Fatality in a Swamp.

A singular fatality lately happened in a swamp near Trenton, N. J., to an old man named Charles Yopp. It appears that Yopp went out to gather water-cresses, accompanied by a little dog. On the following afternoon the dog's persistent barking attracted the attention of Mrs. Gilbert, whose husband has a small farm bordering on the swamp. She went to the spot whence the sounds proceeded, and was horrified to discover the head and shoulders of a man, who was evidently exhausted and unconscious, protruding from the black mud. One hand clung to a tuft of grass and the other was extended. The woman went after her husband, and the two, with other help, returned to find the man sunk still lower and still sinking. To extricate him was a work of great difficulty, and took several hours' time, but it was finally accomplished by means of fence-rails and ropes. The man was then taken to a house, and, in an hour, he revived sufficiently to tell, in a broken way, the story of his adventure. He was attempting to get hold of a fine bunch of water-cresses, when he dropped his basket into what looked like a filled-up ditch. He jumped in after it and sank instantly, and, to his amazement found that something seemed to be drawing him still further down. His body was paralyzed by fear, and he cried for help with all his might, but in vain. At length, being still powerless to move, he abandoned himself, as he supposed, to death. Night soon came, however, and with it a slight revival of his strength. He had now sunk to his hips, and, although he felt stronger, there was nothing within reach upon which he could lay hands. He thought he sank at the rate of an inch an hour. The night seemed fearfully long, and, before it passed, he fell into a stupor, and knew no more until he found himself in the hands of his rescuers. He died two days afterward from exhaustion.

The Oldest Man Alive.

At No. 157 Sarah Ann street, in response to the reporter's summons, the door was opened by Uncle William Scott himself, who asked the writer and his companions to come in and take a seat in a manner which savored of old-fashioned politeness.

"Uncle Bill" is a fine, intellectual-looking old negro, about five feet eleven inches in height, well-proportioned, and still muscular, with bushy gray beard and hair. The first question asked him was, of course, whether his age was as great as reported. Uncle Bill at once replied, in a clear voice, "Yes, sir; 149 years, sir." This reply caused an exclamation of surprise and wonder from both the Sergeant of Police and an officer who had accompanied the reporter. According to his own statement the year of Scott's birth would have been 1729, three years before Washington was born, and when Baltimore city bore the now-forgotten title of Jones' Town.

At the suggestion of the reporter Uncle William related the history of his life. "I was born," said he, "in Calvert, Md." When asked the year, he replied: "Deed, master, I can't remember the figures." His father was a slave, and belonged to Miss Percy Lawrence, of Calvert county. His mother was a free woman, and the mother of "twenty-six head" of children, as Uncle Bill termed them. William was the fourth child. He has no idea what became of the rest. He remained with Miss Lawrence until he was 48 years of age, at which time he was made free, on account of his mother being free-born. After leaving Miss Lawrence, Scott went to live with a Col. Hoskins. With the Colonel he remained three or four years, and acted as his body servant.

At the time, about the year 1775, the Indians were a cause of a great annoyance to the people of Maryland and other colonies. As Col. Hoskins was on active service, his duties being to protect settlers of the frontier, he traveled a great deal, during all of which he was accompanied by his faithful servant. Scott says that during one of his crossings of the "Rocky mountains," probably the Alleghenies, with the Colonel and his regiment, he was one day captured by Indians and held as a prisoner for two and a half months, during which time he was treated with kindness by the savages.

He was finally released through the instrumentality of Col. Hoskins, who always expressed a strong liking for him.

After leaving Col. Hoskins he obtained employment in Gen. Howe's (the English General's) service. Scott says that after being with the General about a year in this country, the General took him to England with him.

Scott says he remained in England thirty-two years. He was asked who held the throne of England at this time, and the answer was George III. After remaining abroad for the long period mentioned, Scott returned to America. He says that he was twelve months crossing the Atlantic, making thirty-three years exactly that he was away from this country.

Uncle William said that he was certain of his age, because of some papers that had been given him by Miss Lawrence, and which long since had crumbled to dust. He also stated that A Marrying Man.

The Rev. John Mandeline, of Brooklyn, just sentenced to five years' imprisonment for bigamy, missed his calling. He should have been a humorist. In his confession to the Judge he wrote: "After my first wife died, in 1873, I went to Philadelphia, where I became acquainted with Mary E. Rustel, and married her. Soon after, my wife left me on account of my religion. I then went to Newark as a preacher of the gospel. There I became acquainted with an old widow, who proposed marriage to me; and, after telling her my circumstances as regards my wife who is living, got married to her. She also left me. I then went to Bradford, Ct., where I made the acquaintance of a third woman, to whom I was married. She found out the circumstances respecting my previous marriages, and one morning, upon returning from my work, I found that she also had fled. I then came to Troy, where I formed the acquaintance of a servant girl, to whom I was married. She fled from me. Learning that this last person intended to have me arrested, I left Troy and went to Lowell, Mass. I came across a friend who introduced me to a young lady, and, after some time keeping her company, I proposed and was married to her. About a month after she was informed of my previous marriages and I had to leave Massachusetts. I then came to Winfield, L. I., where I married my present wife, Miss Wiedel, and for which marriage I was locked up. I therefore ask for mercy."

A $10 Shake.

Gen. Sherman was recently in Arizona. At Prescott the citizens gave him a ball, every one who subscribed $10 being entitled to admission. An army officer, who was one of the three or four hundred, says that "In the midst of the joyous dance a miner, a hardy son of toil, with unkempt hair, soiled face and hands and the usual miner's outfit, trousers in his boots, in shirt sleeves, a belt filled with cartridges, pistol and knife, approached the entrance door and said to the attendant: 'See here, my friend, how much does it cost to get into this here lay-out?' 'Ten dollars,' replied the attendant. 'Does that give a feller the right to go in and shake hands with Gen. Sherman?' 'Certainly,' was the reply. 'Ten dollas goes,' said the miner, and handing the attendant a $10 bill he entered the ball-room. He made his way carefully through the crowd, avoiding the ladies' trains as deftly as could have done one of your famous German leaders, approached the General, and said: 'Gen. Sherman, I merely want to shake your hand. I fought under you in the march to the sea.' He then 'bout-faced, and left the room immediately."

Pound Cake.

Some years ago, at a large barbecue, gotten up in honor of a political triumph, the dining table was adorned with a monster pound cake, composed of saw dust, and sufficient flour, and perhaps other things, to give it a proper consistency and color. The company knowing that it was intended for show only, the cake was untouched during the sumptuous feast. After the crowd had nearly all dispersed, and the table was pretty well cleared of eatables, an old fellow who had been delayed arrived upon the ground late and hungry. Seeing but little else, he pitched boldly and without ceremony into the big cake. He put a large slice into his bosom, and with another in his hand started for home. Just as he had taken his first bite, he was met by a friend, who cried out: "Hallo! Uncle Jimmy, what have you got there?" "It's pound cake; but I believe, if it wasn't for the name of the thing, I would as soon have a piece of good corn bread?"

Why, Verily!

Why be an animated tallow-shop when Allan's Anti-Fat is a safe and sure remedy for obesity, or corpulence, and will reduce the most ill-proportioned form to a graceful outline within a few weeks. It contains no ingredients that can possibly prove deleterious to the system. A well-known chemist, after examining its constituents and the method of its preparation, gives it his unqualified indorsement as a remedy that "cannot but act favorably upon the system and is well calculated to attain the object for which it is intended."

SIXTEEN YEARS OF TRANCES.

One of the Most Remarkable Cures on Record—Miss Jennie Smith, the Ohio Invalid—Helpless, Blind, Speechless-Cured by Prayer and Faith—A Journal of Her Sufferings.

(New York Star.)

Miss Jennie Smith was born in Clark County, Ohio, in 1852, being one of a family of nine children. Her parents were in moderate circumstances, entirely reputable in character, and attendants at an established church. From a child she was seriously inclined and disposed to meditate upon religious themes, which was caued, doubtless, by the number of alarming maladies to which she was subject. At the age of sixteen she had the typhoid fever, which settled in her back and resulted in a spinal disease. From this time Miss Smith was a confirmed invalid, possibly in part by reason of a great variety of domestic calamities, a broken marriage engagement, the attempted suicide of her father, the loss of property and a number of deaths in rapid succession in the domestic circle. She was under the treatment of several physicians, but grew rapidly worse, and at last became perfectly helpless. Lying upon her back in bed, occasionally she had what she calls "sinking spells," in which she was seemingly lifeless, but was filled with remarkable visions of heaven, "seeing the green pastures and being lead by the still waters." In February, 1862, her physician told her that she could not live another day, at which she rejoiced, as her sufferings had been so great. The prolongation of her life was considered a miracle, as she lost her speech and could only move her hands. As her mother—to whose care and support she seems to have been left at this period of her life—was in very great poverty, all the invalid's strength was employed in making fancy work, which was purchased by her friends, and afterward when she had recovered her speech she had some pupils whom she taught from her sick bed. The excitement of teaching made her much worse, and in 1865 she was carried to Urbana, Ohio, to be placed under the treatment of Dr. Newton, who had some theories in regard to medical practice at that time which were quite novel, especially in the treatment of patients by electricity. No good result, however, were produced in Miss Smith's case, as her back was so paralyzed that after using the battery for three or four hours she was insensible to its effects. From this time Miss Smith kept a journal of her peculiar ailments.

The following year her physical condition seemed to change. Her back and limbs became so sensitive that it was almost impossible to move her, and her eyesight failed; but, as she says, "her spiritual eyes brightened" as she became physically blind. This blindness came and went apparently, as sometimes she could see as others see, and again she could not save in some supernatural way. Electricity was resorted to a second time, and with some success, but she was afflicted with diseases besides that of her spine, which made her the wonder of the whole neighborhood, it being regarded as so strange that a mortal could be so afflicted and survive. Miss Smith drew the plan of a cot, which Mr. Blackburn improved upon and afterwards patented as an invalid chair. From this time the poor invilid lived in her chair or cot on wheels, going by car and steamer when sufficiently convalescent to various parts of the country near her, always having visions and developing the spiritual part of her being, while the material of her physical seemed slowly dying. She attended the camp meetings, at which people gathered about her to hear her talk and pray, and to learn that she was fasting as a means of grace. In 1870 her paroxysms increased, so that at times her body was bent nearly double; it required often six persons to keep her in her chair; she suffered also from tetanus; and the more severe her illness, the more remarkably her mind seemed to be afflicted, and her visions were more brighter and more wonderful. The intervals between her paroxysms were occupied in some literary work which had ready sale. In 1873 her brain became incapacitated for mental labor, and again for days and weeks she was entirely helpless, blind and speechless. From this condition she again partially rallied. In 1875 she underwent a new kind of medical treatment. Her whole physical condition seemed now to change, and she had new and alarming symptoms. One day while her friends were gathered around her trying to alleviate her pain, the terrible twitchings of her muscles ceased, her system relaxed, and she breathed easily. She attributed this result to the prayers which were offered for her at the time.

From that hour she gradually recovered, and is now in good health.

Miss Smith has writen a little volume which she calls "Valley of Baca, a Record of Suffering and Triumph." There is a picture of her in this book as she appeared as she lay in her ivalid chair. The introduction was written by her former pastor, Thomas H. Peame, of Dayton, Ohio.

A particular want of good sense in many sensible people consists in their not knowing how to interpret what another has said, when he has not said it precisely as he should have done.

There is a burden of care in getting riches, fear in keeping them, temptation in using them, guilt in abusing them, sorrow in loosing them, and a burden of account to be given up concerning them.

Manners are the shadows of virtues, the momentary display of those qualities which our fellow creatures love and respect. If we strive to become, then, what we strive to appear, manners may often be rendered useful guides to the performance of our duties.

One day you will be pleased with a friend, and the next day disappointed in him. It will be so to the end, and you must make up your mind to it and not quarrel, unless for very grave causes. Your friend, you have found out, is not perfect. Nor are you—and you cannot expect to get much more than you give. You must look for weakness foolishness, and vanity in human nature; it is unfortunate if you are too sharp in seeing them.

No man, having plenty of wood, refuses to build him a house because he would prefer stone or marble; no woman, with due provision of muslin and merino, goes unclothed because she cannot afford silk and satin; each wisely makes the best of the materials within reach.

The principle applies to far higher and subtler things. Have you a gift for music? Do not bury it in a napkin because you cannot have a piano and a teacher; play a melodeon, a flute, an accordeon,—either is better than nothing, either will serve for a stepping-stone to a more perfect instrument. Do you feel the soul of an artist stirring within you. Waste no time in pining for colors, palette, brushes, and instruction, but take pencil and paper and draw the stone fence at the foot of the garden, the shanty over the way, the beggar girl at the crossing, the tree struggling painfully up to the sunshine between close city walls; anything will answer for present training of eye and hand, and prepare you to make good use of better advantages when you can get them. Would you like to be an author? Accustom yourself to describe the places you see, the people you meet the events you witness in carefully chosen words and patiently remodelled sentences—not to send to the magazines for many a long day yet—but for praticce, the steady, resolute practice which alone makes perfect. That is to say,—spend no time in lamenting what you have not, but go to work and do your best with what you have,—the cheap and simple materials that are always at hand. Your training may be slow, but it will be sure; and every step will lift you a little higher, make the way a little clearer, and bring the things for which you long a little nearer to you.

Above all, apply the principle to your happiness—that, too, must be made from the materials that you have, you cannot possibly make it from those which you have not. No use in wishing for wealth, or beauty, or genius, in dreaming of a freer path and a wider sphere, in setting up a fair and stately ideal by the side of a commonplace husband or wife, in picturing a home without cares, friends without faults, light without shadow;—if you are to have any real happiness in life, you must make it out of your actual surrounding and relations. Only by taking such things as you have, and making the best of them, can you reasonably hope and expect to work your way to something sweeter and higher A watch-spring is a marvel of fineness and finish, yet it was once only a bit of coarse, crude ore. Slowly and surely, patience and labor, out of the commonest materials, build up the finest and fairest results.

A pious father, who was recently conducting his young barbarians through the menagerie, halted them before the great sagacious elephant, the behemoth of Scripture, and said to them: "Behold, dear children, another evidence of the great and almighty powers of Omnipotence. You may buck the striped tiger of the orient, but there is no use bucking against the elephant, when once you have set out to see him. The sturdiest baggage-smasher recoils in dismay from an encounter with his trunk. The glory of his nostrils is terrible. Selah! He eateth hay like an ox and giveth him the waters of affliction to drink. And think, dear children, when the last awful day comes, and there is no use giving alarms of crying, 'Fire,' and all the insurance companies go up higher than Gilderoy's kite, imagine what must be the intense heat of that exciting hour, when even, as we are told expressly in the Good Book, the elephants—yes, elephants such as you behold before you—shall melt with fervent heat. Now let us pass on to admire the bounteousness of nature as evinced in the Sumatrian musk-ox.

Some Old-Fashioned Scotch Funerals.

Talking of funerals, in the good old times, and in the mansions of the lairds, these used to be the most enjoyable of parochial festivities. The kith and kin came from great distances to be entertained in a style befitting the occasion. There were grave faces at the gathering when the guests assembled round the coffin to listen to a suitable prayer. Then glasses of wine were handed round once, twice, or oftener—the poorest people would procure wine for the occasion—and "the memory of the deceased" was toasted in silence. Then the long procession moved off to the kirkyard, and the body was laid silently in the grave. That duty being solemnly discharged, a load was visibly lifted from the assistants. Acquaintances came together in the carriages and mourning coaches, and there was plenty of animated conversation. When the guests took their seats at the tables in the dining-room all were in excellent spirits and appetite. The near relations might be sad at heart, but they felt hospitably bound to stifle their sorrow, and there were ample appliances for drowning it. When the old fashion of drinking healths and "taking wine" prevailed, mourners were apt to get merry in spite of themselves, while, as may be supposed, the mere acquaintances of the deceased gave themselves over easily to boisterous joviality. It was a churlish thing to be the first to break up good company, and even the minister might well sit it out till convivial example upset his decorum.—Cornhill Magazine.

THE European migratory quails imported to this country some time ago in the hope of their taking up a residence here, are heard of now and then in the South, where they have gone to spend the winter. Meanwhile the sporting papers are begging gunners to abstain from shooting these foreign quails until they have time to increase and get a foothold in the United States.

TUTT'S PILLS!
A NOTED DIVINE SAYS
THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD
READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

Sold Everywhere, 25 Cents.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and lead-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy, not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,
DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE
will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

DR. C. McLANE'S

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

Rules and Regulations for the Admission of Pupils to the Indiana Deaf and Dumb Asylum.

I. The institution is open to all the Deaf and Dumb of the State, of suitable age and capacity for receiving instruction, free of charge. For the present, and until additional accommodations shall be provided, boys can be admitted only between the ages of twelve and twenty-one; and girls between the ages of ten and nineteen.

II. Pupils will be admitted on the following conditions: 1. The pupil, well provided with clothes, is to be brought to the institution punctually at the commencement of each session unless detained at home by his or her sickness. 2. The pupil is to remain in the school until the last Wednesday in June in each year. 3. No parent or guardian shall be allowed to take a pupil out of the school in session time, without assigning satisfactory reasons.

III. The annual sessions of the school commence on the first Wednesday after the 15th day of September, and close on the last Wednesday of June. Every pupil is to come on or before the first day of the session, and is to remain until the last day of the same. The only exceptions allowed are cases of sickness.

IV. The Institution will provide for each State pupil regularly admitted, boarding, lodging, washing, superintendence of conduct, manners and morals, medical attendance, instruction, school books, slates, and all other incidental expenses of the school room, without charge, but will not pay the traveling expenses of pupils in coming to or returning from the Institution, nor supply them with clothing, except in cases of destitution.

V. Those who are unable to pay for the necessary clothing, or whose parents neglect to supply them, it is made the duty of the Superintendent to furnish in accordance with the following legislative enactment:

"That when the pupils of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb are not otherwise supplied with clothing, they shall be furnished by the Superintendent, who shall make out an account thereof, in each case, against the respective counties from which said pupils were sent, in an amount not exceeding forty dollars per annum for every such pupil, which account will be signed by the Superintendent, and attested by the seal of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, and the Treasurer of State shall charge the account thus certified to the county, from which the pupil was sent, and credit the amount to the current expense fund of the Indiana Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

"SEC. 3. When such account shall be received by the Treasurer of the proper county, to whom it shall be immediately sent upon its reception by the Treasurer of State from the Superintendent, such County Treasurer shall cause the same to be paid out of the County Treasury to the Treasurer of the State; and such County Treasurer shall collect the ammount of such account from the estate of such pupil, if he have any, by suit, if necessary, in the name of the county."

VI. Each applicant for admission should come well supplied with clothing, and on all articles on which it is possible to mark the name of the pupil, it should be written with indelible ink. In all cases, except those clothed by the county, besides the ordinary supply of clothing, the aplicant should deposite with the Superintendent a sum not less than five dollars, to defray incidental expenses, repairs of shoes, etc, any part of which remaining unexpended at the close of the session will be returned. Each pupil should be supplied with a trunk.

VII. The Institution is not an asylum, but a school for learning; hence no one can be admitted or retained as a pupil who, from sickness or from other cause, is unable to pursue his or her studies successfully.

VIII. The course of study in the primary department embraces Spelling, Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, Geography and Grammar, and ordinarily requires seven years to complete it. All the pupils who wish it, and who will avail themselvs of it, are allowed the full benefit of this course of study.

IX. For the benefit of those who wish to qualify themselves for teaching or for other intellectual pursuits, the trustees have established a High Class, and adopted a course of three years' study in the sciences. From among those who complete the primary course of study, the Superintendent may select each year the most promising pupils and admit them as members of this class.

X. It is the intention of the trustees to render the pupils self-supporting, so far as practicable, and that every pupil on leaving the institution, shall be proficient in some useful occupation or trade, so as to be able to procure a livelihood without reliance on the charities of others. In accordance with this design, all the scholars will be required to labor a portion of each day, the girls performing the lighter kinds of house work and various kinds of needlework —as plain sewing, ornamental work, and dressmaking; and the boys at various trades, the necessary work about the Institution, and in the cultivation of the farm and garden.

XI. All business letters or letters of inquiry in regard to pupils in the Institution, or those whom it may be designed to place there, should be addressed to Superintendent Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Indianapolis, Indiana.

XII. Those persons bringing pupils to, or taking them away cannot be furnished with board and lodging at the Institution.

XIII. No pupil, unless under extraordinary circumstances, can be received at any other time than at the commencement of the session.

XIV. The pupils will be sent home to spend the vacation, which extends from the last Wednesday in June to the first Wednesday after the 15th of September.

The Biggest Locomotive Engine.

(Pittsburg Telegraph.)

A huge specimen of locomotive art passed through here yesterday, towed by other locomotives, on its way to the Far West. It is a monster tank engine for the New Mexican and Southern Pacific Railroad (A., T. and S. F. Railroad,) and which is specially intended to work on a long and heavy grade on a point on the Rocky Mountains. It is the largest and most powerful locomotive engine ever built in this country. It is a ten-wheel tank engine of consolidated pattern, having eight driving-wheels and a pony (two-wheel) truck. The cylinder measures twenty by twenty-six inches and the driving-wheels are but forty-two inches diameter. The boiler is enormous, being straight, fifty-eight inches diameter. It has 213 tubes each over eleven feet long. The fire box is about ten feet long. A water-tank, almost the entire length of the boiler, rests on top of the engine, and when filled with water will add considerably to the weight. The truck wheels are thirty inches in diameter, and are of paper, with steel tires, similar to those now being used so extensively under the Pullman sleeping-cars and on the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad, New York. This engine, when in working order, will weigh 118,000 pounds. The great weight and size of the boiler, and the small driving-wheels combined, form a tremendous power, well suited to the work the engine has to perform. The eight driving wheels are merely to distribute the weight, for if the weight rested on but four, no track ever laid could withstand the pressure. The weight is so great that the Western railroads over which it must pass will not permit it to go over bridges, so it will have to be taken to pieces and carried over in sections. It passed over all the bridges of the Pennsylvania Road without being dismantled.

Purdue University.

The following is a copy of the act passed at the last Legislature authorizing the appointment of students to Purdue University by the Board of Commissioners of each county, and to provide for the admittance of such scholars and defining their privileges therein:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indina, That the Board of Commissioners of each county in this State may appoint, in such manner as they may choose, two students or scholars to Purdue University, who shall be entitled to enter, remain, and receive instruction in the same, upon the same conditions, qualifications and regulations prescribed for other applicants for admission to, or scholars in said University: Provided, however, That every student admitted to said University by appointment, by virtue of this act, shall in no wise be chargeable for room, light, heat, tuition janitor or matriculation fees, and said students shall be entitled in the order of admittance to any room in the University, then vacant and designed for the habitation or occupancy of a student, and such student so admitted, shall have prior right to any such room, subject to the rules of the University, over any student not appointed and admitted as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That no more than two students at the same time, for any one county, shall be entitled to admittance to said University under provisions of this act; but the Board of Commissioners of each county may, from time to time, appoint as foresaid to any vacancy in their appointments.

SEC. 3. Whereas, an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this act, the same shall be in force from and after its passage.

The Democratic Party.

If, during the past two decades of years, the logic of events has proved anything at all, it has demonstrated beyond all national controversy that the Democratic party of the United States must rule, or the institutions of the Government, founded by the fathers, must perish. The rise of the Republican party, its supremacy and its decline, embody every necessary proof of the proposition we have laid down. Quickened into life, under influences destructive of all Government, every day of its existence has served to develop its inherent infamy, until the people determined in their soverign capacity to dethrone it, and this they accomplished at the ballot-box in 1876; and to-day it is doubtful if there is a State in which the Republican party has a majority of the people who favor its policy In the days of Grant the Republican party was supreme; its power was unquestioned; its opportunities grand. But being an aggregation of hates and crimes, it fell, until in the days of Hayes it is a thing of unutterable loathing. The people outraged and disgusted resolved to dethrone it, and the grand work began in the states which, under the influence of the sober second thought of the people, wheeled grandly into line under Democratic banners and were ready in 1876 to pronounce their verdict upon the Republican party of "guilty." This guilt touched with paralyzing effect every great interest of the country, and there was but one remedy and that the reenthronement of the Democratic party. Notwithstanding this, the verdict of the people, so emphatic in its pronunciation, so beneficent and far-reaching in its effects, so entirely in consonance with truth and justice, the organs of the Republican party seek to regain its lost power by repeating and perpetuating the vilest slanders upon the Democracy of the country; as, for instance, the New York Tribune, inherently vile and venomous as a hooded cobra, says:

"that the very nature of the elements which form a great portion of the Democratic party compels that party to become the party of the repudiators and of the communists," and that "the Democratic party is essentially the party of the turbulent and lawless. And all that is dangerous and law defying in the outgrowth of communism, trades unionism or socialism finds in Democratic demagogues of the lower order its natural allies."

It is by pouring such a steady stream of malignant vituperation as the foregoing upon the country that the organs of the Republican party hope for success. Every allegation made by the Tribune is notoriously false and unsupported by any facts worty of a moment's consideration. The Democratic party has never favored repubiation. On the contrary, it has been the advocate of the strictest justice between debtor and creditor. It has opposed the financial legislation of the Republican party because the effect was to increase the wealth of capitalists while it impoverished the producing classes of the country. The Democratic party has been always the friend of the working people of the country, and has sought by every means at command to remove unnecessary burdens and to increase their prosperity. A more malignant falsehood is the charge that the Democratic party is the advocate of socialism or communism, in any offensive sense. Like the other charges made by the Tribune, it is so essentially at war with the history of the Democratic party that it can not be made available in arresting its onward march to supremacy in the country. The Democratic party points with just pride to its past record and to its present purposes. After the 4th of March, 1879, it will have control of the legislative department of the government, and this fact, since it shows the disposition of the people, is sufficient of itself to stamp the Tribune's malignant charges as puerile partisan lies.

Scriptural Authority.

"In the early ages of the world perfumes were constantly used, and they have the high sanction of Scriptural authority." The patrons of perfumes at all times have been the most polished people in the world, and in this age no refined lady or gentleman consider their toilet complete without the use of some delightful scent like Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes, which are really the gems of all odors.

INDIANA STATE SENTINEL!
FOR 1879
HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO
One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary.

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 20,000 new subscribers.

Portable Mulay Saw Mill,

With improvements recently made is unequaled as a neighborhood mill. It can be run by either steam or water power, and is especially adapted to the engines used for threshing.

It may be operated by either two or three men, and will cut as much lumber in proportion to the power and number of hands employed as mills of larger capacity.

It makes smooth and even lumber, leaves no stubshot and will cut any sized log up to four feet in diameter. It may be transported from one locality to another and re-erected ready for sawing in from two to three days, and can be made profitable in localities where there is not sufficient timber to justify the erection of a large mill. WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

The Teller Committee began work at New Orleans on the 7th inst., and on that day several witnesses were examined regarding the charges of bulldozing, intimidation, etc. J. E. Breda, of Natchitoches parish, an ex-Confederate soldier, but since 1871 a Republican, testified that "there is no lawlessness among the negroes—miserable individuals. They hardly dare strike back. They are murdered there like sheep. Political speeches calling upon the negroes to cut loose from the Democratic party are styled incendiary speeches, and I never made a speech that was not strictly a speech on simply political subjects. The negroes are ground down and cannot even sell their crops under their own names. There are 1,700 white and 4,000 colored voters in the parish, and there are more white men who vote the Republican ticket than blacks who vote the Democratic ticket. The Democratic majority in the recent election, given in the official journal, was 2,880." Senator Cameron—Are any prosecutions against fraudulent voters, etc., being carried on in any of the State courts? Witness—No, sir. For, if so, the whole judiciary of the state would have to be brought to trial. I state this on hearsay only. I know nothing from personal observation. I and my brother were driven out simply because we were political leaders. Several other witnesses were examined, all of them Republicans, who testified similarly to Breda in regard to the goings on in Natchitoches parish. Messrs. J. D. McGill, Lucien Bland, and J. M. McGill, residents of Tensas parish, testified that before the election there were two tickets in the field—a regular Democratic and an Independent Democratic. The negroes agreed to support the latter. Witnesses believed the negroes were intimidated to such an extent as to prevent the election of the Independent ticket. They also believed that frauds were committed by stuffing the ballot-boxes. The whole machinery of the election was in the hands of the regular Democratic nominees. Witnesses were candidates on the Independent ticket.

At the meeting of the Teller Committee at New Orleans, on the 8th inst., a number of parties from Tensas parish were examined with a view of proving that bulldozing and intimidation had been carried on in that parish at the late election. Fleming Branch (colored) testified to the attack on Fairfax, Republican candidate for Congress, of the shooting down of the adherents of Fairfax, and of the latter's precipitate flight to save his life; witness himself was wounded in the melee, and he and a number of other colored people took refuge in the bushes. On the Tuesday following the attack on Fairfax the slaughter of negroes began, and some eighty, the witness stated, were killed altogether. Daniel Kennedy, Viola Wallace and Rebecca Ross (all colored) testified substantially to the same occurrences related by Branch. E. C. Ruth, a colored Justice of the Peace, testified that 200 colored men in his ward were forced to join the Democratic club, and then received certificates entitling them to protection. Witness testified to other acts of lawlessness. J. N. Mitchell, the only white man examined during the day, testified concerning armed bands from other parishes and from Mississippi. He heard a great many things, but knows the reports were exaggerated. He said: "In fact, if you inquire rigidly into many stories you will find not a word of truth in them. Armed bands did some things which I could not approve. There is hostility between the negro and the white man. I won't try to disguise this fact. Show me a negro who votes the Democratic ticket, and I will show you a hypocrite or a fool."

Before the Teller Committee, on the 9th inst., W. D. Rollins, of Tensas parish, testified that he was a candidate on the Independent ticket at the late election; saw no outrages committed, but thinks intimidation frightened the negroes so much that they stayed away from the polls, and that if the negroes had voted they would have had a majority of 1,000. J. R. Rosey testified in regard to the dispersing of the negroes massed for the purpose of attacking Waterproof; was one of the Sheriff's posse; said "the negroes were in their quarters, and, when we fired one volley, they dispersed. Two or three negroes were wounded; don't think any were killed." Frank Watson (colored) was the next witness. He lived eight miles from Waterproof, and was told by a Democratic friend that the place was getting too hot for him; that he had better clear out. He ran away, leaving his partly-gathered crop to take care of itself. Other colored witnesses testified that on the day of election there was a riot in Caledonia, Caddo parish. The riot commenced after the voting was over, and three negroes were killed. Witnesses testified to the general intimidation of negroes in Caddo.

THE EAST.

During the year 1878, 917 failures were reported in New York city, with liabilities amounting to $63,958,403 and assets valued at $18,025,331. This exceeds the record of any other year.

Caleb Cushing died at his residence in Newburyport, Mass., on the 2d of January, after an illness of brief duration. He was 78 years old.

Gardner Tingley, of Attleboro, Mass., while insane, murdered his wife by cutting her throat, and then ended his own life by the same means.

Morton McMichael, proprietor of the Philadelphia North American, and ex-Mayor of that city, is dead. He was 72 years old.

THE WEST.

A reporter for the Chicago Journal interviewed Hon. E. B. Washburne, and learned from his own lips that he has not been offered the Berlin mission, and, further, that he could not accept it in case it should be tendered to him.

On the 29th of January two murderers are to be hanged at Indianapolis, and on the 14th of February two more will expiate their crimes on the gallows at St. Louis.... One thousand and nineteen buildings, having a street frontage of 31,118 feet, were erected in Chicago last year, at an aggregate cost of $7,419,000.

At Carbon, Wy. Ter., a party of masked men broke open a baggage car and took out and hung to a telegraph pole "Dutch Charlie," who was en route to Rawlins for trial, charged with murder. He was a notorious character, and had been identified with a number of stage robberies.... Justice Hunt, of the United States Supreme Court, is seriously ill from a stroke of paralysis.... The wretches who so cruelly burned Mitchell and Ketchum to death in Dawson county, Neb., are under arrest.... The extensive establishment of the St. Louis Beef Canning Company, at St. Louis, Mo., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $125,000.

A most daring robbery was committed in Chicago a few evenings ago. A few minutes after 6 o'clock, when the streets are more crowded than at any other hour of the day, a cutter carrying two men drove to the corner of Madison and Dearborn streets—one of the busiest corners in the city—and, the two men alighting, one of them proceeded to fasten from the outside the door of A. Goldsmid's pawnshop, while the other, with a hatchet, smashed the plate glass of the show window. The two then seized several trays of diamond rings and other jewelry, leaped into their cutter, drove off, and have not since been heard of. A robbery almost precisely similar, and perpetrated at about the same hour of the day, occurred in New York city a few weeks ago.

Fort Robinson, in Nebraska, has been the scene of a bloody emeute, resulting in a wholesale slaughter of Indians and the death and wounding of several soldiers. For some time a large number of Cheyenne Indians who were engaged in the raid in Western Nebraska last summer, and were subsequently captured, have been held under restraint at that post. It having been determined by the Government to send these savages south into the Indian Territory, preparations were being made to that end. They asserted their determination not to go south, asserting that they would die in resisting such a movement. The military tried to starve them into submission, and even went so far as to deprive them of fuel, but their stubborn natures would not yield. Finally it was determined to place the two leading chiefs, Old Crow and Wild Hog, in irons, and separate them from the common Indians. In carrying out this step there was a furious struggle between Wild Hog and the guards, in which one of the latter was dangerously stabbed. This affair caused the wildest excitement among the savages. Some of them commenced chanting a war song, and, at a given signal, the entire body made a dash through their prison windows, and, firing on the guard with revolvers which they had succeeded in concealing, all ran for the open prairie. The guard opened fire on the fleeing savages, shooting them down by dozens in the frozen snow, presenting a scene that discounts the Custer massacre. The cavalry continued in pursuit of the retreating savages, killing them without mercy. Four soldiers of the Third cavalry were wounded and one killed, having been shot through the heart. Dull Knife, the Cheyenne savage leader, was numbered among the dead, having been shot through the head. Altogether between thirty and forty of the Indians were killed and a great many wounded.

THE SOUTH.

Charleston, S. C., has suffered from a disastrous fire. The property destroyed consisted of a cotton warehouse and 10,121 bales of cotton. Total loss, $572,000.

Charles Longly, of Nicholasville, Ky., attempted to light a fire from a coal-oil lamp. The lamp exploded, fatally burning Longly and one child, and seriously injuring another child. The house caught fire and was entirely destroyed.

An entire family of emigrants, consisting of Clark Hubbard, his wife, and two children, were recently frozen to death near Pilot Point, Texas.

WASHINGTON.

The national debt was increased $1,233,785, according to the official statement, which is herewith appended:

The recent letter of the Secretary of the Interior, calling upon Gen. Sheridan for specific facts in support of his charges against the efficiency of the Indian service, has elicited a reply in the form of a report from Gen. Sheridan to Gen. Sherman, in which he specifies numerous instances of bad management in the Indian service.

Washington reports represent Gen. Sherman and the War Department officials at loggerheads over the new Army bill. The latter, 'tis said, charge the General of the Army with exceeding the bounds of propriety, by resorting to extraordinary methods to influence Congress in favor of the measure.

Federal appointments: Thomas L. Nelson, Massachusetts, to be United States District Judge for Massachusetts; James B. Howell, Iowa, Orange Ferris, New York, and A. O. Aldis, Vermont, for Southern Claims Commissioners; Lewis E. Payne, Virginia, United States Attorney for Wyoming Territory; A. Worth Spates, Maryland, Secretary of Wyoming Territory; Peter Mantor, Register of the Land-Office, Bismarck, D. T.; James Longstreet, Postmaster at Gainesville, Ga.

Congressman Hartridge, of Georgia, died at the capital on the 8th inst. His disease was pneumonia.... Illinois has only 420 persons resident in the District of Columbia; Ohio has 1,573.

The House Committee on Education and Labor has authorized Representative Willis to report a bill heretofore agreed upon by the committee, providing that not more than fifteen Chinese shall be admitted to this country on any one vessel, with a request that the House specially assign the earliest possible day for its consideration.

POLITICAL.

At the second day's session of the Potter Committee, in New Orleans, Mr. John Ray, counsel for Secretary Sherman, filed a communication setting forth that he had no intention of offering further evidence on the subject of intimidation in the elections of 1876. Chairman Potter then announced that, inasmuch as several witnesses wanted by the committee were in Washington, the committee would adjourn to that city. In the meantime Mr. John Ray, representing Mr. Sherman, and another gentleman to be selected by the Chairman, would remain in New Orleans and take whatever testimony might be offered in rebuttal of the evidence already taken by the committee.

Alonzo Garcelon, Democrat, has been elected Governor of Maine, receiving 21 votes to 10 for Joseph L. Smith. Every Republican Senator voted for Garcelon.

The Washington National Republican comes out for John Sherman for President.

The Republicans of the Pennsylvania Legislature met in caucus, on the 8th inst., and nominated J. Donald Cameron as his own successor in the United States Senate.

GENERAL.

The taking effect, on the 2d of January, of the Resumption law caused no excitement in the financial centers of the country. At the United States treasury, in Washington, no gold was paid out, even for interest on bonds, as Secretary Sherman had given orders to pay out gold in New York only. Persons who asked for gold were given coin drafts on the Assistant Treasurer in New York. This fact created some comment of an unfavorable character. Treasurer Hillhouse, at New York, was prepared to meet the probable rush for gold; but, contrary to general expectation, the demand was light, while in many instances greenbacks were preferred.

The Manitoba blizzard that swept over the country on the 2d and 3d of January will be long remembered as one of the severest visitations of the kind in weather annals. It penetrated to every quarter of the land—East, West, North and South. In the region of Buffalo the cold wave was accompanied by a blinding snow-storm, blocking railroads and placing a complete embargo upon business of all kinds. Numbers of unfortunate people are reported frozen to death in different sections of the country. Altogether it was a "spell of weather" that will not soon be forgotten.

Burned: The Honore building, in Chicago, in which was located the city post-office, the offices of the Chicago and Alton railroad, and several law offices, loss $75,000; the Academy of the Holy Angels, Buffalo, N. Y., loss $60,000; the leading hotel and several of the largest business houses in Columbus, Ga., loss $200,000.

Incidents of the recent cold snap: In Chicago a teamster was frozen to death while sitting on his wagon box, and another was so benumbed by the frost that he fell from his wagon and expired in the street. Near Crawfordsville, Ind., two children were frozen to death in bed, the drunken father having removed the bed-covering from the little ones and appropriated it to himself. Mrs. Mary Kerwin, aged 81, was frozen to death in bed at Bloomington, Ill. The harbors of New York and Philadelphia were so blocked with ice as to impede navigation and delay the arrival and departure of the European steamers. At Battleford, the capital of Northwest (British) Territory, the thermometer marked 60 degrees below zero, and at Bismarck, Dakota Territory, it was 35 below. At Cairo, Ill., the Mississippi river was frozen over so firmly that heavy teams crossed and recrossed, a thing never before known there. At New Orleans the weather was the coldest experienced in fifty-five years; sidewalks were covered with ice, the streets frozen hard, and one man froze to death. Atlanta, Ga., reports it the coldest weather since 1835; mercury 5 degrees above zero; many trees popped open from the intense cold, and there was much suffering in the country regions. Jacksonville, Fla., reports that everything thereabout was covered with a thin coat of ice—something unprecedented—and it is feared the orange groves have been greatly damaged.

FOREIGN.

The business failures in Great Britain during 1878 were 15,059, of which 2,648 were in financial and wholesale and manufacturing branches of trade. The increase is 4,037 failures for the last year over the preceding year.... The bursting of a 38-ton gun on board the British war-ship Thunderer created terrible havoc. The turret in which the monster cannon was rigged was completely demolished, and seven men were killed outright and forty wounded.

Twenty-four French Communists in New Caledonia have been pardoned because of services against the insurgents.... Ex-President Grant was in Dublin last week, and was presented with the freedom of the city.

The Senatorial elections in France have resulted in a great Republican triumph. Of the Conservative Senators whose terms expired, only thirteen have been re-elected. All the retiring Republican Senators have been re-elected. The general result shows the election of fifteen Conservatives and sixty-four Republicans. The Republican majority in the Senate will be about fifty-seven.... The Cornish Bank, at Truro, in Cornwall, England, has failed. It had several branches, and the deposits amounted to $25,000,000. The failure will cause much distress in West Cornwall.... Juan Moncasi, who attempted, in October last, to assassinate the Spanish King, was executed the other day, in the presence of an immense crowd.... The city of Cork, Ireland, flatly refused, by a unanimous vote of the Town Council, to give Gen. Grant a public reception.

The continued cold weather has greatly aggravated the prevailing suffering throughout England. In Manchester, Sheffield, and other manufacturing centers, thousands of suffering poor are being fed by the public relief committees.... Strikes are the order of the day in the British manufacturing towns.... The people of Londonderry, Ireland, publicly honored ex-President Grant by tendering him the freedom of the city.... A terrible plague is raging in Astrachan.... A dispatch from the City of Mexico says that ex-Gov. Bravo, who headed a rising in Colima and Michoacan, has been killed, with fourteen of his followers.

The old King of Holland was married the other day to the Princess Emma, of Waldeck-Pyrmont. He is 62; she, 20.

A Berlin dispatch says the Emperor is wonderfully well, though still obliged to carry his arm in a sling. He drives out daily with the Crown Prince or his own equerry.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says the Kharkoff Veterinary School has been broken up, and the Kieff University closed in consequence of the riotous demonstrations of the students.... Advices from the seat of war in Afghanistan represent that the winter campaign in that country is virtually ended. Most of the Afghan chiefs had sent friendly messages to the British commander, and Yakoob Khan was believed to be preparing to follow the Ameer in his flight to Russia.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Tuesday, Jan. 7.—Senate.—Bills were introduced and referred as follows: By Mr. Booth, for the interchange of subsidiary silver coin and United States notes; by Mr. McDonald, to authorize the taxation of outstanding legal tenders.... Mr. Edmunds said that on this glad morning of the new year, when there were peace and joy and hope everywhere, he thought it best to offer a resolution tending to cement more perfectly the good will and harmony now existing all over the country. He therefore submitted a resolution declaring that in the judgment of the Senate the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States have been legally ratified, and are as valid as the other parts of the constitution; that it is the right and the duty of Congress to enforce such amendments by appropriate legislation, and the duty of the executive department of the Government faithfully and with diligence to impartially execute such laws; that it is the duty of Congress to appropriate money to that end, and instructing the Judiciary Committee to report a bill for the protection of the rights of citizens and the punishment of infractions thereof. Laid on the table at the request of Mr. Edmunds, to be called up hereafter.... Mr. Voorhees called up his resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of making the trade dollar legal-tender, and providing for its recoinage into the standard silver dollar. He addressed the Senate at length, denouncing the trade dollar as fraudulent money, which, having failed in its mission abroad, had returned home to cheat the honest people of this country.... A large number of committee reports, petitions and communications were presented.

House.—Mr. Acklen called attention to the scandal in Louisiana with which his name is associated, and presented a resolution to authorize an inquiry. Defeated, on the ground that the resolution did not embrace a question of privilege.... Mr. Kidder introduced a bill for the admission of Dakota as a State. Referred.... Mr. Ryan introduced a bill extending the time to pre-emptors on public lands who have suffered by prairie-fires. Referred.... Mr. Carlisle introduced a bill to include newspapers, periodicals and proof-sheets in mail matters of the third class. Referred.... Mr. Waddell, Chairman of the Committee on Post-offices and Post-Roads, reported a bill relating to the classification of mail matter and the amount of postage thereon. Ordered printed and recommitted.... The Geneva Award bill was called up and discussed.... The deaths of B. B. Douglas, of Virginia, and A. S. Williams, of Michigan, were then announced, and the House, in respect to their memory, adjourned.

Wednesday, Jan. 8.—Senate.—Mr. Edmunds said there were no joint rules between the two houses of Congress, and he, therefore, submitted a concurrent resolution declaring that on the last three days of this session no bill passed by either house shall be sent to the other for its concurrence, and on the last day of the session no bill shall be sent to the President for his approval. He said he hoped this resolution would be passed, and Congress devote the last three days of the session to consideration of bills pending between the two houses. Referred.... Mr. Grover, arising to a personal explanation, denied seriatim the published charges that some $97,000 of the public funds of Oregon had been expended and not accounted for during his administration as Governor of that State.... Consideration was resumed of the bill to amend the "Patent laws," and Mr. Wadleigh took the floor, but was interrupted by a message from the House announcing the death of Representative Hartridge. Senators Gordon, Booth and Beck were appointed a committee to accompany the body to Georgia.

House.—Official notice of the death of Representative Hartridge was taken, and Messrs. Cook, Frye, Cox, Cabell, Stone, Davidson and Hanna were appointed a committee to accompany the remains to Georgia.

Thursday, Jan. 9.—Senate.—Mr. Beck called up his resolution of the 7th inst., referring to the Committee on Finance the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury to the resolution of Dec. 5 relative to the amount of silver coin received in payment of customs dues, and its disposition. He criticised the answer of Dec. 5, and said that specie resumption had been reached by the ruin of hundreds of thousands of the best men of the country. He quoted from the answer of the Secretary, and spoke of some of it as nonsense. He showed scant respect for the Senate and none for the law. The Secretary was the servant and agent of the people, and not of the creditors of the Government. He had no right to allow the bondholders to say in what coin they would take their interest. Mr. Beck then argued that the Secretary had increased the interest-bearing debt of the United States $105,000,000. This was not a very flattering exhibit, when business of all kinds was so depressed. Unless the Secretary could show some law authorizing him to divert silver coin from the purpose for which it was intended he was guilty of official misconduct.... The resolution deferring the answer of the Finance Committee was then passed, and the bill to amend the Patent laws was taken up, and Mr. Wadleigh spoke in favor thereof. At the conclusion of his remarks the Senate went into executive session, and when the doors reopened took a recess until 3 o'clock.... Upon reassembling, the Senate, headed by Vice-President Wheeler and Secretary Gorham, proceeded to the House to attend the funeral of the late Representative Hartridge, of Georgia.

House.—Out of respect to the memory of the late Mr. Hartridge, no business was transacted by the House. In the afternoon the funeral services of the deceased member were conducted in the Hall of the House.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.

Contested Seats in the House of Representatives.

The New York World figures up the next House, as follows:

Democrats	146
Republicans	129
Nationals	10
Tammany	3
Vacancy through death (Twelfth New York)	1
To be chosen in California	4
Total	293

It then proceeds to describe and predict the contest for seats, as follows:

Of the Nationals, Messrs. Gillette and Weaver, of Iowa, will act with the Democrats in organizing the House. Mr. Barlow, of Vermont, is classed as a Republican, being in reality a bolting Republican, though running as a National. The Tammany members will act with the Democracy on national issues.

Delaware—There is some talk of contesting Mr. Martin's seat, on the ground that he had been convicted of slave-owning and that his pardon had not been properly entered, but nothing came of it.

Florida—The majority for Hull (Dem.) in the Second district being only 13, Bisbee (Rep.) may contest the seat.

Illinois—In the Fifteenth district, the seat of Forsythe (Nat.) may be contested by Decius (Dem.). In the Second district, W. H. Condon (Nat.) has given notice that he will contest the seat of S. R. Davis (Rep.) whose plurality was 4,236, Condon only receiving 250 votes in a poll of nearly 21,000 votes, but the notice is said to be irregular.

Indiana—In the Ninth district, the seat of Orth (Rep.) will be contested by McCabe (Dem.), who was beaten by ninety-seven. There are charges that some twenty-five or more college students, not residents of the State, voted for Orth, and fraud is alleged in Vermillion and Montgomery counties.

Iowa—There is likely to be a muddle in consequence of the claim that the October election was not legal, and that the members elected in November are entitled to their seats. Elections were held in six districts in November, when the following gentlemen obtained majorities:

2. Hiram Price, R.	7. E. H. Gillette, D. & N.
5. Rush Clark, R.	8. J. C. Holmes, D.
6. J. B. Weaver, D. & N.	9. John Wilson, D.

The first four were elected in October, and took this step to make their claim good in either contingency. Republicans having done this as well as Democrats, it cannot be alleged that the move was a "party dodge," and the best legal opinion of Iowa is divided as to the regularity of the first election.

Louisana—In the Third district, Hebert (Rep. and Nat.) will contest the seat of Acklen (Dem.).

Maryland—In the Fifth district, Crane (Rep.) will contest the seat of Henkle (Dem.) on the ground of fraud and interference with Supervisors.

Massachusetts—In the Sixth district, Boynton (Nat.) will contest the seat of Loring (Rep.), alleging among other reasons that 413 votes for the latter did not specify the office to be filled. Loring's plurality over Boynton was 113.

Minnesota—In the Third district Donnelly (Dem. and Nat.) will contest the seat of Washburn (Rep.) on the grounds of "bribery, intimidation, violence, fraud, and corruption." Washburn's majority was 3,013.

New York—In the Twenty-fifth district, J. M. Wieting (Nat. and Dem.) will contest the seat of Hiscock (Rep.), who was elected by 3,425, on grounds of alleged corruption and intimidation.

North Carolina—In the First district, Yeates (Dem.) will probably contest the seat of Martin (Rep.), the State Canvassers having declined to go behind the returns, which on their face gave Martin 51 majority. In the Second, O'Hara (Rep.) will contest the seat of Kitchen (Dem.), claiming that his votes were illegally thrown out in Halifax, Edgecombe, Craven, and Lenoir counties, which sent up amended returns.

Pennsylvania—In the Twentieth, Curtin (Dem.) will contest that of Yocum (Nat. and Rep.), on the ground of fraud and bribery. Yocum's majority was 92. There is a squbble over the seat of Klotz (Dem.) in the Eleventh, which is claimed by Albright. The Canvassing Board split, but Klotz has filed the judicially certified returns of all the counties with the Clerk of the House as a safeguard. They give him 95 majority. There has been some talk of McCandless (Dem.) contesting the seat of Bingham (Rep.) in the First district, where Bingham's plurality was 7,427.

Virginia—In the Ninth district it is said that McMullin (Ind. Dem.) will contest the seat of Richmond (Dem.), who was elected by a plurality of 291.

Wisconsin—In the Third district, King (Nat.) will probably contest the seat of Hazelton (Rep.), whose majority was 120, on the ground of colonization of voters in Lafayette county.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

Responses of Senators Blaine and Thurman to the Call of the Committee for Evidence.

BLAINE.

Mr. H. M. Teller, United States Senate, Chairman Senate Committee, etc.

Dear Sir: I have this morning received your favor inclosing the following resolution adopted by your committee:

Resolved, That the Hon. James G. Blaine, the mover of the resolution, be requested to specify in writing the particular class of frauds, outrages, and violence committed in the recent elections which the committee is expected to investigate, and to furnish such information and evidence as may be in his possession, and the names of witnesses he may wish to be examined.

It cannot, of course, be the purpose of your honorable committee to limit the investigation to any particular class of frauds, outrages, and violence committed in the recent elections that may be "specified" by me. The resolution is the action of the Senate, speaking almost unanimously, and it is not for me to say what your committee is "expected" to investigate beyond what is expressed in the resolution itself in very explicit terms. It would be gross assumption in me to "specify" where the Senate itself has directed.

But, anxious to indicate any details that may expedite the labors of the committee, I will call your attention specially to the tissue-ballot frauds in South Carolina; to the laws of that State, which made free voting impossible in certain counties; to the practice in that State of breaking up all meetings held to oppose the Democratic party unless Democratic speakers were allowed to take part in the discussions, and to all the methods by which in Sumpter and other counties a full and free election was prevented.

In Louisiana I invite your attention to the murders in Tensas parish on election day, and to the frauds committed in the same; to the frauds and outrages upon the ballot in the city of New Orleans, and, even while I write, to the alleged assassinations of two witnesses while on their way to the United States Court to testify against those who robbed them of their rights on the day of election. I could make further specifications in these two States and in other Southern States, but I have not time. I am just leaving for New England, and am compelled to postpone further details until after my return.

Among the witnesses I would name are James B. Campbell, E. W. M. Mackey, and C. G. Mimminyer, of South Carolina; Gov. [illegible]; his agent, Col. Zachary; ex-Chief Justice Ludeling, of Louisiana; the Hon. [illegible], of Mississippi; J. Cole Davis, of Helena, Ark.; and the editor of the Avalanche, a Democratic paper published in Memphis, Tenn. But I beg especially to refer you to a large mass of valuable information in the office of the Attorney General of the United States, already called for by the Senate, and soon, I presume, to be laid before your committee. This is official in its character, and in many cases has the weight and value of legal evidence, not requiring further examination of witnesses to authenticate and confirm it.

In offering the resolution in the Senate I did not assume the part of Public Prosecutor, but especially declined any such service. The invitation of your honorable committee, however, is one which I cannot disregard, and on the reassembling of Congress I shall from time to time lay such facts before you and make such suggestions as may seem to constitute a full and fair compliance with all the requirements of your resolution.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

J. G. BLAINE.

THURMAN.

The Hon. H. M. Teller, Chairman of the Select Committee of Investigation.

Dear Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 21st ult., inclosing a copy of the resolution adopted by your committee requesting me to furnish in writing such facts and such evidence as may be in my possession touching the matter involved in the amendment made on my motion to the resolution under which the committee is acting. Of course the committee does not suppose that the matters embraced in that amendment are within my personal knowledge, or that of any one man. They relate to elections in every part of the republic, and the allegations are for the most part to be found. In the opening of his speech in support of his resolutions, Dec. 11, the Senator from Maine distinctly stated that the resolution was based on accounts given in the press, which has teemed with statements which, if true, require the investigation proposed by my amendment, and I have no doubt the members of the committee read the newspapers quite as diligently as I do. It is probable they know where to look for the sources of information as fully as I do, and they are charged with the responsibility of making investigation, and I am not. I beg respectfully to say that I take no part of it upon my shoulders. Nevertheless, as the amendment was offered in perfect good faith, and, with a firm belief that the matters it embraces require investigation quite as much as the matters contained in the original resolution, it will be proper for me, especially since your committee has requested it, to furnish such information touching the subject as may, from time to time, come under my observation.

I therefore send herewith installment No 1, consisting of

1. An editorial article cut from this morning's Washington Post.

2. A copy of a petition of sixty-odd citizens of New York to the House of Representatives, complaining of the illegal and oppressive conduct of John I. Davenport and other Federal officials at the late election in New York city, and I am authorized by the Hon. Fernando Wood, who presented the petition, to say that its statements are proved by sundry affidavits in his hands, and that he will, if required, furnish the names of the affiants, and other witnesses to the same facts.

3. A copy of an opinion of Judge Feedman touching the rights of certain naturalized citizens of New York, which rights were grossly violated by the said Davenport, as set forth in said petition.

4. I respectfully refer you to that portion of the speech of Senator Wallace, one of your number, delivered in the Senate, Dec. 8, 1878, which relates to the last election in Pennsylvania. (See Congressional Record, Dec. 18, p. 28). I also beg leave to refer you to the published letter of the Hon. William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, showing the means employed by the Federal officials and others to defeat his nomination and election. You have, no doubt, seen the letter in the newspapers. If not, I will have a copy prepared for you.

5. An editorial article from the Argus and Patriot, a newspaper of Montpelier, Vt., touching the election at Bennington, in that State.

6. A copy of the President's Civil-Service order of June 23, 1877, and, as showing what attention has been paid to it, also what means were resorted to by the Republican Congressional Committee of 1878. I include a circular of that committee, signed by George C. Gorham, its Secretary. This circular, it is said, was sent to nearly every person in the civil service of the Government and to public contractors and others having relations with the Government.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. G. THURMAN.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTE FROM THURMAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 4.

Hon. H. M. Teller, Chairman Select Committee of Investigation.

Dear Sir: In further compliance with the request of your committee, communicated to me by your letter of the 21st ult., I have the honor now to inclose to you "installment No. 2" of facts relating to the late elections, and especially to the misconduct of United States Supervisors and Deputy Marshals, to wit:

1. A letter from James H. Paine, of Jacksonville, Fla., relative to the misconduct of United States Supervisors and Deputy Marshals at the late elections in the Second Congressional district in that State.

2. An affidavit of Owen J. Sommers, of Duvall county, Fla., relating to the same subject.

3. Statements of F. C. Randolph, of Montgomery, Ala., showing misconduct of United States Deputy Marshals at the late election in that State.

I am assured that these three gentlemen are citizens of high standing and respectability, and I beg leave to commend their statements to earnest consideration of your committee.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. G. THURMAN.

Charles Lamb, when a little boy, walking with his sister in a church-yard, and reading the epitaphs, said to her: "Mary, where are all the naughty people buried?"

THE NEW ARMY BILL.

Serious Objections to It—Probability of Its Revision.

A Washington correspondent states that "Opposition to certain features of the Army bill increases, although there are many provisions which meet with general approval. Its enlargement of military power at the cost of civil authority is exciting wide criticism, and the issues made by Gen. Sherman with Secretaries Rawlins and Belknap are recalled to the prejudice of the new measure. The abridgment of the power of the President in the assignment of staff officers, making him dependent upon the favor of the General of the Army, meets with disfavor, and is likely to be stricken from the bill. The probabilities are that both the Senate and the House, particularly the latter, will be slow to enlarge the power of the chief military commander in time of peace by limiting the powers of the President, who is the constitutional Commander-in-Chief.

"The origin of the sections of the bill which confer enlarged authority upon Gen. Sherman dates back to his issue with Secretary Rawlins in March, 1869. Gen. Schofield was then acting Secretary of War, and he issued the Sherman order before Gen. Rawlins was qualified, transferring the heads of the staff bureaus from the civil to the military control. Gen. Sherman followed the Schofield order with a general order from the headquarters of the army, transferring the heads of the staff bureau from the control of the Secretary of War to his staff. Gen. Rawlins at once protested against the subordination of his office to the General of the Army, and on the 27th of March, with the approval of the President, he rescinded the Schofield and Sherman orders and restored the military and civil authorities to their old relations. The fact that the new Army bill proposes to give the General of the Army the authority by law that Gen. Sherman attempted to exercise under both Rawlins and Belknap, and even to give him greater power over the civil authority of the War Department than he then claimed, is operating greatly to the prejudice of the measure, and will doubtless lead to its severe revision by Congress.

"Those who have sacred regard for the civil powers of the Government also protest against the extraordinary power it confers upon courts-martial to enforce the attendance of witnesses both in civil and military law by military officers. The transfer of all the powers of a civil court to a court-martial, to enforce processes, and attach and punish for contempt by military rules, is a startling innovation on the civil government in time of profound peace.

"A spicy discussion may be anticipated on the bill in both branches, and it is now expected that Senator Edmunds will declare some features of the bill limiting the powers of the President to be unconstitutional. It is generally expected that the bill will pass after it shall have been materially amended."

Perils of Revenue Raiders.

The returned revenue raiders give thrilling accounts of their experience among the mountains in Fentress county, Tenn., in hunting illicit distillers. While on the march a heavy snow-storm overtook them, followed by rain and then freezing, making the mountain trails absolutely impassable. One man slid down a fifty-feet incline, stopping on the brink of a 150-foot chasm. It was finally decided to return and wait milder weather.—Nashville (Tenn.) paper.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

GOV. WILLIAMS' MESSAGE.

GENTLEMEN OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY: I cordially welcome you to the capital for the discharge of the important duties intrusted to you by the people. It will be my pleasure to aid you in learning the transactions of the executive department of our State Government during the past two years, and in providing for the needs of our community during the ensuing two years, for which we are together responsible.

The last General Assembly, having been convened in special session for the completion of important matters which had been inexcusably delayed until a late day of the regular session, adjourned March 15, 1877. The acts of the two sessions, in one volume with the "accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money" required by the constitution, were so "published and circulated in the several counties of the State by authority," that by the receipt and filing of the same in Pike county, they took effect July 2, 1877, as evidenced by my proclamation of July 5, 1877.

Joint resolutions proposing nine important amendments to the constitution were passed, and the proposed amendments, having been agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two houses, were entered upon their journals and referred to the body now constituted of yourselves. It is desired that you take early action upon this pending business, that the proposed amendments, if agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each house, may be at once submitted to the electors of the State, and, if ratified by them, be declared parts of our fundamental law upon which you may proceed to enact a series of wholesome laws now urgently demanded by the interest of our people.

I congratulate you that the instruction to our Senators and Representatives, conveyed by a joint resolution, requesting them "to use all lawful means to procure the speedy enactment of a law of Congress restoring the legal-tender quality of the silver dollar of the coinage of 1792, and making the same legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private, except as otherwise provided by law," has aided in the restoration of our original unit of value, by an act of Congress to which they gave their support. Sustained by its original double metallic standard, our financial system gives promise of greater stability than when deprived of its support.

The mandates of other resolutions addressed to ministerial officers have been obeyed, and you will be advised of the conclusions reached by them.

The act of March 7, 1877, providing Judges to preside at adjourned terms, and to try causes on change of venue from the Judge of a circuit, has been of advantage to litigants in securing a speedy trial, but the provision for compensation, made in section 5, has been so annulled by the later act making general appropriations that County Treasurers have been embarrassed in their efforts to comply with an appropriation so unusual and irregular. Gentlemen who have performed services await further legislation providing for their compensation.

The additional courts constituted for the counties of Marion, Allen, Cass, Vanderburg, Jackson, Washington and Wayne have been organized by the appointment and qualification and subsequent election of Judges.

The acts providing for the election of township officers were found to contain conflicting provisions, which must be harmonized by you.

The modification of the act defining larceny, and prescribing a punishment more within the discretion of the court than before, has served a good purpose. It may be well to revise other sections of the criminal code in the light of this experience.

The "act authorizing the acquisition of Green River island, or to locate the true boundary line at said island," has been so far executed as to learn from the Governor of Kentucky that the action of the Commissioner appointed by that State to make the survey had been ratified and confirmed by the Legislature.

The attempted amendment of section 22 of the act for the incorporation of towns, conferring enlarged powers upon the Board of Trustees, has been held to be void because violating a well-settled rule for the amendment of statutes.

I appointed Messrs. Frank Emerson, John B. Hannah and Robert P. Haynes, three discreet persons, to settle and adjust the claims made against the State Prison South, payable out of the appropriation of $130,000 made by act of March 10, 1877. Their work was so discreetly and satisfactorily done, as shown by their records and papers filed with the Auditor of State, that a highly satisfactory adjustment and settlement was made of that very troublesome floating indebtedness.

EXECUTIVE AND ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES.

The constitution, in dividing the powers of the Government, has vested "the legislative authority of the State" in yourselves, the "judicial power" in the courts, and the residue, "the executive, including the administrative," "in a Governor." The duties of the respective offices denominated "administrative" are "directed by law." The officers are the ministerial agents of the people upon whom duties are "enjoined by law" which must be literally and exactly performed. The Governor is charged with the duty "to execute the laws," "to suppress insurrection" and "to repel invasion," and is given ample military power. It is provided that "he shall from time to time give to the General Assembly information touching the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he shall judge to be expedient." To do this, it is provided further that "the Governor shall transact all necessary business with the officers of Government, and may require information in writing from the officers of the administrative department upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices," and it is enjoined that "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." He is given power in his discretion to control the execution of process upon criminal judgments and modify fines and judgments rendered upon forfeited bonds. To avoid the consequences of vacancies in certain ministerial offices and in the General Assembly itself he is authorized to appoint to the one and "issue writs of election to fill" the other. He may convene the General Assembly at a place remote from the seat of government, and "may at any time by proclamation call a special session." His part in the business of legislation is such that he may return to the General Assembly for its reconsideration any bill for an act presented to him for approval and execution. It thus appears that the Governor is not a ministerial officer, but rather a supervisor of the transactions of others and possessed of discretionary powers peculiarly his own, and entitled to a respect equal to that accorded to each of the other departments. If so, much legislation heretofore enacted imposing laborious and responsible duties of a ministerial character upon the office has been justifiable simply because of the acquiescence of the incumbent in the will of the law-making body, and is not a good precedent to be followed. The duties incident to the establishment and management of Purdue University, the House of Refuge, the Orphans' Home, the Female Prison, the Insane Hospital, the State House, the valuation of property for taxation and sundry other boards of an administrative character, may be mentioned as examples of that disposition. With a few exceptions, the office which I have the honor to hold has been treated with marked respect by the administrative officers amenable to it under the constitution. The retiring State officers are entitled to great credit for the zeal, integrity and ability which they have displayed in the discharge of the duties of their several offices during their four years' occupancy thereof, and for the reforms which they have effected therein. Each has my grateful acknowledgments for his co-operation with me. One who will enter upon a further and unusual term of service has in his election thereto received a rare commendation from our appreciative people.

ANNUAL REPORTS, 1877.

An act approved Feb. 3, 1853, provides for annual reports of State officers and benevolent institutions, the same to be made to the Governor. Officers since created have, by executive requirement and implied legislative direction, reported in like manner. These reports for the year ending Oct. 31, 1877, fifteen in all, have been published in a volume of convenient form, entitled "Annual Reports of Indiana, 1877," and are laid before you for your information. The Secretary of State communicates a condensed report of the business of his office for the year, including a report of the proceedings of the administrative boards of which he is Secretary ex officio, a register of State and county officers, Commissioners of Deeds, Notaries Public, and Justices of the Peace, and others, to whom commissions have issued, a list of corporations and associations organized, and other matters pertaining to the office. The reports of the Auditor and Treasurer together constitute a complete showing of the transactions of the Treasury Department. Upon the enactment of the appropriation laws of March 10, 1877, the fiscal business was made to conform strictly to their requirements. The general fund had and received during the year $2,128,242.83, and disbursed $1,838,[illegible], leaving October 31, 1877, $290,267.47. The receipts included $200,000 of the temporary loan, being the proceeds of a renewal at a less rate of interest of the part falling due Dec. 1, 1876, which appears to have been paid. Each disbursement account has its authority in those acts, so much as precedes April 1 being legalized by the third section of the first act, and the others limited by the express terms of its sections one and two. As the accounts of each institution were verified by the Auditor of State, they constitute exhibits in detail of the sums charged to them. They will be carefully examined by your appropriate committees.

The report from the Department of Public Instruction is brief. Its contents relate mostly to the enumeration and school attendance, and the school funds and revenues for the year, and will reach you in a revised and more comprehensive form in the biennial report.

ANNUAL REPORTS, 1878.

I respectfully transmit a report to you of "each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted and, also, the names of all persons in whose favor remissions of fines and forfeitures have been made and the several amounts remitted during the years 1877 and 1878, by my predecessor in office and myself, as required by the constitution. Accompanying it are some tables approximating accuracy, and showing the growth of crime and punishment of criminals since the reception of the first convict in the State prison. Imperfect as our criminal statistics are, they may afford valuable aid in legislating upon an important and troublesome matter. The constitution provides "that the General Assembly may by law constitute a council, to be composed of officers of State, without whose advice and consent the Governor shall not have power to grant pardons in any case except such as may by law be left to his sole power." In order to relieve the Executive of a great responsibility, I recommend a law in accordance with this proviso.

For your information as to the transactions of the Government during the year ending Oct. 31, 1878, I lay before you reports made to me by officers named as follows:

The Adjutant General.
The Quartermaster General.
The Secretary of State.
The Auditor of State.
The Treasurer of State.
The Attorney General.
The Superintendent of Public Instruction.
The State Librarian.
The Trustees of the Institute for the Education of the Blind.
The Trustees of the Institution for Educating the Deaf and Dumb.
The Trustees of the Soldiers' and Seamen's Orphans' Home.
The Trustees of the State Normal School.
The Trustees of Indiana University.
The Trustees of Purdue University.
The Directors of the State Prison South.
The Directors of the State Prison North.
The Commissioners of the House of Refuge.
The Managers of the Female Prison and Reformatory Institution.
The Board of State House Commissioners.
The Provisional Board of Commissioners for the Hospital for the Insane.
The State Board of Agriculture.
The State Horticultural Society.

The Commissioners of the Hospital for the Insane have preferred to follow the mandate of the act of 1852 providing for the government of the hospital rather than the act of 1853, providing for annual reports from the subordinate officers to the head of the executive service, and have made their report directly to you. It was received at my office Dec. 7, and, appearing not to be made to it, was delivered to the Secretary of State, that upon his organization of the House of Representatives he might deliver it to the Speaker.

MILITIA.

The act approved May 11, 1861, for the organization and regulation of the Indiana militia had so far become a forgotten relic of our civil war as to be omitted entirely from the last revision of the statutes. The constitution (article XII.) provides who shall be subject to military service and that "the General Assembly shall determine the method of dividing the militia into divisions, brigades, regiments, battalions and companies, and fix the rank of all staff officers," and divide it into classes of sedentary and active militia. These requirements are met by the act of 1861. It prescribes the manner of organizing and mustering a company into the active militia denominated "The Indiana Legion," and for the supply of arms and equipments, a system of instruction and encampments, councils of administration and courts-martial; calls into active service and resignations, dismissals and discharges. Until quite recently the last-named have been the most popular features of the law. Of the system a General officer, who observed its working while protecting the southern border of the State from invasion in 1862, wrote to his superior in command: "Much may be done to increase the efficiency of the Legion by proper amendments of the law. There must be some inducements to go into the companies, either by way of exemption from other burdens, or by bounty, or by both. Whatever the inducement may be, it must be a continuing one, so that it will have the effect not only to impel men to join the companies, but to continue in them and discharge the duties which result from membership. It can not be expected that men will long give up their other employments and spend their money to get up and maintain military organizations without some inducement. * * * The law should provide a short and efficient means of compelling attendance of members at drill, etc. Its provisions on this subject are circuitous and inefficient. The law provides for swearing the members of the companies after the election and it is said, in many instances, that those who have signed the articles of association, not getting an office, have refused to take the oath. It is suggested to me that the oath should be administered first and the election held afterward. Other amendments might be suggested in regard to the organization of companies. The process ought to be greatly simplified."

The present Adjutant General has succeeded in securing the organization of twenty-one companies, those forming the associations having been led to assume the burdens imposed by the law because of a generous rivalry between the lovers of military tactics and display in our leading cities and towns. You will be asked to add needed amendments to the existing statute, or to enact a new law affording as much encouragement to military organizations as do the laws of other States of equal rank.

Occasion for the use by civil authority of a well-drilled and well-disciplined body of troops may arise at any time in our populous localities, or even in remote districts where men congregate who have little knowledge of our laws, and no respect for the peace and dignity of our State.

On the 26th of July, 1877, I was officially informed by the Sheriff of Marion county that certain railway employes, because of a disagreement with their employers, had ceased from service, and by their inactivity had occasioned an interruption and delay of transportation across his county; that no breach of the peace had come under his observation, and no information of any had been received by him; that, with the exception of the detention of railway trains, there had been no forcible violation of the peace, and that no injury to person or property had been committed. He advised the issuance by me of a proclamation ordering all unlawful assemblages to disperse, cease their violence, and yield to the authority of law, expressing the opinion that such an order would command that respect which an officer occupying his position could not secure. In conclusion, he said: "Such a proclamation from you as I suggest might accomplish the desired result; but in my judgment permission will not avail anything. I have no organized force at my command of any description, but am utterly powerless in the event of a serious disturbance, unless you will at once furnish me an adequate force to maintain the law." I at once issued and caused to be published my proclamation of that date. The organized companies in this county were ordered into camp at the United States Arsenal grounds, and the Adjutant General, assisted by prominent citizens of Indianapolis, constituting a "committee of safety," rapidly organized, mustered, officered and equipped other companies and caused them to encamp on the same grounds. I requested Gen. Ben. Harrison to assume command of the forces so organized. He replied, saying: "I am very much obliged for this expression of your confidence, but the committee of safety had recommended Gen. Dan Macauley for the place, and I would therefore ask you to commission him." He, however, took command of a company. Gen. Macauley was commissioned, and immediately took command and organized a staff, which was also commissioned and entered upon duty with him. By advice of the committee of safety, and especially of a member thereof, who is an experienced officer, and the commandant himself, to avoid the possible danger of a delay in transmitting formal requisitions to the Ordnance Department for ordnance stores due the State, I telegraphed the President, saying: "In view of threatened domestic violence growing out of the railroad strike, I request that authority be at once given to the commandant of the arsenal to render all the aid possible in preserving the public peace." Receiving at the same time and complying with requisitions for troops much less formal from the Governors of other States, and unaware of the fact that our militia was encamped under the shadow of the arsenal buildings, and had good reasons to draw from their stores, the Secretary of War replied (July 27, p. m.) as follows: "I am directed by the President to say that, in the absence of a call upon him under the constitution and statute, for military aid in suppressing domestic violence, the Federal troops at Indianapolis can only be used in protecting property of the United States and enforcing process of Federal courts." It seems not to have occurred to the honorable Secretary that the arsenal was understood to be a depot of military stores, and not a garrison of men. Late in the night of that day, a Lieutenant Colonel of the United States army called upon me, saying: "I have been ordered to this city with 200 men to assist the civil authorities in preserving the peace and protecting property. I have the honor to report to you my arrival, and to ask if you have any instructions for me." Having made no requisition for troops, and having even been advised that my requisition for ordnance stores would not be complied with, I could then only reply to that effect. On the 28th, I was enabled to inform the Sheriff of Marion county that an adequate force had been organized in his county, and would be placed at his disposal upon his making formal requisition to the Adjutant General. Disturbances of a similar character arose in other localities, notably in Allen county, and like preparation was made. These preparations in aid of local authorities and the counsel of prudent citizens made the use of the force unnecessary, and it was disbanded. The expenditures were so carefully managed that, while the outlay of other States reached many thousands of dollars, our own were easily met by the limited appropriation for "military contingent expenses." Details will be communicated as required by law. I take occasion again to express my obligations to the citizens who promptly took up arms in support of the civil authorities, and especially to those wise counselors who were able by their coolness and reason to dissuade an extensive organization of determined men from rash purposes, and overcome the clamor of passionate men for vindictive measures. It is a source of great satisfaction to our citizens that we passed through an ordeal involving to other communities and threatening to us the most serious consequences, without the loss of a life, and with a small expenditure of the public funds. I am moved to so particular a statement of these occurrences, now long past, first, because prominent gentlemen on the floor of Congress, and in carefully-prepared addresses to our people, have manifested a disposition to distort their simple truth; and second, in order that you may provide in advance for such a possible emergency hereafter.

Other disturbances growing out of our unsettled labor question occurred in the mining region of Fountain county, with deplorable results. A want of due carefulness in the local authorities resulted in the issuance and charge to that county of arms which were received from it upon approved bond by persons unworthy of membership in a company of the militia. It became the duty of the State authorities to review these proceedings and secure a return of the arms to the State and a disbandment of the company. This delicate duty was satisfactorily discharged by the Adjutant General, whose report will more fully disclose its nature. At the request of the Judge of the Fountain Circuit Court troops were sent to and maintained in the county for some weeks to protect the lives and property of citizens, insure peace, and secure a prompt administration of justice to the offenders. The expenses of this call were met as before.

The Quartermaster General accounts for the military stores received, issued, and now held by him. The State yet has a credit of $7,295.08 upon her account with the General Government under the act for a distribution of arms to the States.

By my order, an experienced officer was detailed by the Adjutant General to inspect the arms belonging to the State. As this duty had not been performed for many years, it will be of interest to learn the exact quantity and condition of our munitions of war as disclosed by his report.

It is proper that I should say to you that companies have been called out and kept in camp several days, and many of the members who were laboring men thereby lost their situations. Under section 34 of the law, they could receive only the small pay allowed to soldiers of the United States army, and the fund at my disposal would not admit of an additional allowance as bounty. I recommend an appropriation to pay them a reasonable compensation for their services.

THE BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

The constitution makes it the duty of the General Assembly to provide by law for the support of institutions for the education of the deaf and dumb and of the blind, and also for the treatment of the insane. At the date of its adoption, an institution had been provided for each of these classes, all having been founded about thirty years ago.

From an attendance in 1848 of ninety-two and an annual expenditure of $11,765.83, the attendance of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb has increased to 328 and the expenditure to $62,904.99. Twelve hundred and seven pupils have received instruction. The course of study has been enlarged and improved to correspond to the progress in the common-school education guaranteed to our children who have the use of their faculties. A table showing the comparative attendance and expenses of the institution since 1853 is given by the trustees in their report. More than 100 children having claim to an education cannot be received because of a lack of accommodations for them. You will be asked to provide for the construction of an addition to the present building.

The average attendance of pupils in the Institute for the Education of the Blind during the year was 108. Five hundred and ninety-eight pupils have received instruction since the opening of the Institute in 1847. The expenditures for the fiscal year were in the sum of $31,404.90, being $250.20 per annum for each pupil. The estimate for the ensuing two years is made upon an anticipated attendance of 120 pupils at $230 each per annum. Additional accommodations are asked.

Since Nov. 1, 1848, the Hospital for the Insane has received and treated 7,648 patients. During the past year 470 were admitted, and the same number discharged, leaving 614 remaining at the close of the year as at the beginning. The expenditure was in the sum of $132,129.67. To provide for the large number of insane who need treatment, and several hundred who have been pronounced incurable and in need of the care and protection afforded by a State institution planned and constructed for the purpose, a new building, to be called the Department for Women, was authorized by an act approved March 11, 1875. Six hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated and nearly all of that amount expended. You will be asked to inspect the work done, and provide means for completing and furnishing the building for immediate use.

Since the transfer of the soldiers from the Soldiers' Home at Knightstown to the National Home at Dayton, the institution has been devoted to the orphans of deceased soldiers and seamen. The building was destroyed by fire on the night of Sept. 3, 1877. The trustees used the money received upon policies of insurance for the construction of a building much more suitable for the purpose than was the former, and applied an unexpended balance of the year's appropriation toward the payment of the additional expense, making $41,238.32 in all. You will be asked to reimburse the officers and teachers and other inmates for their losses of clothing and other effects by fire.

All superintendents, officers and employes, engaged in any of the benevolent institutions of the State, who are boarding or lodging in the institutions, should receive much less salaries than those who board and lodge themselves; and the superintendent or officer who has a family boarding in the institution should be required to pay board for any and all except himself and wife, unless employed as assistants.

EDUCATION.

Our educational interests have been under the careful supervision of an officer possessing the confidence of the people. His biennial report will give you in a comprehensive form a history of the recent progress and present condition of our common school system, and also of the institutions of a higher grade which have been the outgrowths of it. The reports of the Trustees of Indiana University, Purdue University and the State Normal School will disclose the fact that the higher education afforded by the State is given at an expense far beyond that of other institutions sustained by private contributions, and in excess of a just economy. The pupils who attend the Normal School do so to qualify themselves as teachers, the better to make a living thereafter. I am unable to see any good reason why they should not pay a reasonable tuition fee, thereby making the support of the school much less burdensome to the taxpayers, many of whom receive no direct benefit from it. The same rule could properly be applied to the two universities.

The law authorizing each county to send two students free of charge to each of the universities should be repealed, and all students should be required alike to pay a reasonable tuition fee.

Our school fund is now reported in the sum of $9,000,000, which perhaps equals that of any other State in the Union. It is constituted of the State's indebtedness (nearly $4,000,000), the common school fund held by the counties (about $2,500,000), and the Congressional township school fund (also about $2,500,000), each part requiring peculiar care in its management. I trust that it will be your pleasure to so administer this magnificent endowment as to produce the largest results in the interest of the rising generation.

THE STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

Your attention is called to the financial report of the officers of the State Board of Agriculture. The board owns thirty-six acres of land upon which their improvements are situated, and two acres east of the grounds, in all thirty-eight acres, upon which there is a mortgage of $60,000 drawing 8 per cent. interest. Fifteen thousand three hundred dollars is due the guarantors of the exposition fund. The State advanced $25,000 two years ago. It is for you to consider whether the State should pay $75,000 more, and take the property, or lose the amount so advanced. Although the last was a very successful fair, the net earnings would not pay the interest on the indebtedness. I trust you will give this subject a careful consideration.

HORTICULTURE.

The Horticultural Society has accounted for the small annual bounty of $500 appropriated for the encouragement of its work. You will be interested in the proceedings of its annual meetings, as reported by the Secretary and published by the State.

CRIME AND ITS PUNISHMENT.

Crime has steadily and rapidly increased. Our old prison for male convicts is greatly overcrowded, and the new has had use for the additional accommodations provided by the last Legislature.

The Female Prison has held more than three times the number (17) transferred to it when it was opened, in 1873. As required by the act of March 3, 1877, the Board of Managers was reorganized as thereby constituted, Mrs. Emily A. Roache, Mrs. Rhoda M. Coffin and Mrs. Eliza C. Hendricks receiving commissions for their respective terms and assuming the duties imposed upon them by law. Assisted by Mrs. Smith, the Superintendent, and others, they have, as shown by their two reports, trained the inmates of the institution to habits of industry, practiced a rigid economy in every department and kept their expenditures within the appropriations. Some indebtedness for the inclosure of the grounds should be provided for. The managers have had much trouble and annoyance because of bad sewerage. I recommend an appropriation of $4,000 to secure a permanent and reliable system in its stead, that being the amount of the estimate prepared.

The Prison North had at the beginning of the last year 646 and at its close 665 convicts, 265 having been received, 340 released, and the average being 619. The disbursements were $75,295.73, being $868.06 in excess of the earnings. This excess is explained by the additional accommodations provided for an expected increase in the number committed to the prison. The new cell-house and workshop authorized by the last Legislature were completed and a main sewer also built, leaving a balance of $19,606.00 of the $80,000 appropriated. This amount the Directors think could well be devoted to the construction of a new dwelling house for the Warden, some cells for the insane convicts and a solitary for disciplinary purposes. Additional shop room is asked. It is urged that the district of the prison be enlarged by the addition of one tier of counties next south of the line of demarcation, and that the good time of convicts be increased to twice that now allowed. In the education of the convicts required by law the moral instructor finds great necessity for proper text books, and asks that they and books for general reading that will inculcate correct sentiments be provided. The salary of the physician is regarded by the officers as quite too small for the services expected, and they ask that it be increased to the proper amount.

The Prison South had at the beginning of the last year 590 convicts, received 335, making 925 in all, and released 299, leaving 626 remaining at the close. The daily average during the year was 626. Since its establishment in 1822 it has received 6,526 convicts and released 5,900. More than two-thirds of those remaining are unmarried men. Less than one-third are over 30 years of age. Forty-four are sentenced for life. The expense of maintenance per man was $29.03, which was the lowest in ten years, being less than one-half the expenditure five years before. The total cost for the year was $72,783.19, being $28,529.53 in excess of the earnings. The report of the Directors is a careful review of the condition of the prison and the present needs of the inmates. But a little over one-half the convicts have been leased. The State receives 45 cents per man. It is supposed that the employment of four-fifths of the convicts would make the institution self-sustaining. The diverse but well-expressed views of the Directors and Warden as to the best means of discipline will demand your careful study. A better "good time" law is recommended by the Directors. Because of the great increase in his labors, they are of opinion that the physician should receive a salary sufficient to justify him in giving his whole attention to the prison sick. Better provision for the mental and moral instruction of the prisoners is asked. It is especially urged that opportunity be given for evening reading and study by the supply of a light in each cell. The Directors think the deprivation of light is an inhuman hardship which the General Assembly can not afford to longer disregard. Provision is asked for the insane, numbering about fourteen. The prison has but one-half enough cells. More than 300 have had to be kept in the chapel and other rooms, at greatly increased expense. A new cell-house must be provided, or the surplus convicts transferred to the Prison North. It will be for you to determine what course will best provide for this great increase of convicts, and impose the least burden upon good citizens who must meet the expense of their safe-keeping within prison walls.

It is enjoined in the constitution "that the General Assembly shall provide houses of refuge for the correction and reformation of juvenile offenders." An institution for boys was established at Plainfield in 1867, and has been in operation eleven years. One thousand one hundred and twenty-eight boys have been admitted during that time. All cannot be classed as offenders. Many have been admitted for a reformation of their character, that they may be prevented from violating the laws. At the close of the last year 145 had been admitted and 383 remained, that being the greatest number in the institution at any one time. The Board of Commissioners have reduced the expenditures greatly below the amount appropriated, leaving the surplus in the treasury. Their estimates for subsequent years appear in a reduced form. They have added to the accommodations and reformatory influences of the institution, and report it in good condition.

Like provision for controlling the criminal inclinations of girls has been made in the reformatory department connected with the Female prison. Two hundred and ninety-six have been received since 1873.

THE STATE LIBRARY

was removed to the building rented for its accommodation, and has, by exchanges and purchases, received the usual additions to its shelves. The Librarian and his lady assistant have filled with credit their respective positions, as their careful preparations for your meeting will convince you. Hon. Horace P. Biddle, of our Supreme Court, who has devoted his life to general literature, as well as to that of his profession, has expressed to me a "desire to dispose of" his "library to the State of Indiana, to be kept as a part of the State library. It contains about 6,000 volumes, collected at a cost of over $10,000, and is the gradual accumulation of fifty years." He proposes "to sell the entire library to the State for a nominal sum," retaining its possession and use during his life and providing "for its delivery" by contract upon a consideration reaching each volume rather than by donation, that" he "may know the books will ultimately reach their destination." Recognizing the necessity for legislative action authorizing the Librarian to make such a contract, he holds himself in readiness at any convenient time to adjust the details.

NEW STATE HOUSE.

The last General Assembly, by an act approved March 14, 1877, authorized and provided for the erection of a new State House, and for matters incident thereto. I appointed Gen. Thomas A. Morris and Gen. John Love, of Marion county; W. R. McKeene, Esq., of Vigo county, and Hon. I. D. G. Nelson, of Allen county, as prominent representatives of "the two leading political parties of the State," who should, together with myself, "constitute the Board of State House Commissioners." They at once qualified and each gave the required bond and entered upon the discharge of his duties. Mr. McKeene, on account of private business, found it necessary, in January last, to tender his resignation, which was reluctantly accepted. I immediately appointed Hon. John Collett, of Vermillion county, as his successor. He accepted the office, qualified and gave bond, and still serves as a member of the board, which is otherwise unchanged. The Commissioners have pushed forward the work as fast as the means at their command would warrant. In addition to the quarterly reports made as required "for the use of the public," and containing "a synopsis of their proceedings and an account of their expenditures," I requested that they make their report for the last quarter so comprehensive as to include the documents and proceedings which are, in their opinion, important for your information. Such a detailed statement has been prepared, and is herewith submitted for your careful examination. The tax levy was, for the year 1877, 1 cent, and, for 1878, 2 cents, on the $100. At the close of the year ending Oct. 31, 1878, the proceeds of the tax had reached $42,023.56, most of which has been expended upon orders of the board. The proceeds of the current levy will perhaps not greatly exceed $150,000, which is not as much as ought to be and could be profitably expended during the year.

The constitution provides that "no law shall authorize any debt to be contracted on behalf of the State except in the following cases: to meet casual deficits in the revenue; to pay the interest on the State debt; to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or, if hostilities be threatened, provide for the public defense." Our existing indebtedness has been justified in part by each of these provisions. Our heaviest interest charge, exceeding one-fourth of a million dollars per annum, is upon an indebtedness to the common-school fund caused by the use of its money for general expenses. In the absence of any provision for its payment, we may assume it to be the settled policy of the State to make the loan perpetual. If so, you can safely provide for a special annual levy of say five cents on the one hundred dollars to pay the interest upon our indebtedness and to gradually discharge the other claims growing out of a negligent administration of the school revenues in former years. The temporary loan largely represents the old indebtedness incurred by our system of internal improvements before the adoption of our present constitution, and reasonably included with our "State debt" referred to therein. Having made special provision for these extraordinary demands, by authorized loans and separate taxation, the revenues of the general fund at a greatly reduced rate, say seven cents, will be found adequate to meet the ordinary expenses of an economical administration of the State Government, and increase the means for the rapid prosecution of this work. The appropriation of a sum sufficient for the immediate completion and furnishing of the structure, while the times are so favorable to cheapness, would, perhaps, create such "a casual deficit" as would justify a loan. In my opinion, the advantages resulting from a speedy completion of the enterprise which we have begun would greatly overbalance the interest to be paid until our taxpayers shall have gained relief from their present heavy burden of local taxes.

I recommend that you do, at least, continue the present levy "of 2 cents upon each $100 worth of taxable property in the State" for the "new State House fund," in addition to any appropriation you may see cause to make from the "general fund."

UNITED STATES SENATOR.

Hon. Oliver P. Morton, our senior Senator in Congress, died at his home in this city, Nov. 1, 1877, worn out by a life of unusual activity in the public service. Thousands of our fellow citizens and many visitors from other States followed each other in solemn procession through the corridor of the building in which you are now met, viewing for the last time his familiar face as he lay in state, and afterward accompanying his mortal remains to their resting place in Crown Hill Cemetery, near where he made his last public address to the people. Having filled a prominent place in the affairs of our State and country, his public life is familiar to the present generation, and his acts have become a part of our history for the study of those who will come after us.

I appointed Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees to fill the office made vacant by his death. It will be your duty to elect a successor.

REPRESENTATION IN CONGRESS AND IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

My views upon the question of a reapportionment of the State for Congressional and legislative purposes have been frequently expressed and were communicated at length to the last General Assembly. The districts for the election of members of Congress are manifestly irregular in form and their population is out of due proportion to each other. The requirement that a Senatorial or Representative district, where constituted of more than one county, shall be composed of contiguous counties was literally fulfilled, but its spirit was grievously violated in essential features. Some of you have been elected by a voting population much less than the average, while others have a constituency greatly in excess. I recommend the enactment of a just law in each case, and such I will gladly approve. The Auditor of State reports the enumeration necessary for your information in making the apportionments.

OUR COUNTY SYSTEM.

While many of the older States were established upon "the town system," our own has grown up on the basis of "the county system," more suitable to the habits of our Western people. The Enabling act of April 19, 1816, recognized the thirteen existing counties, and they were represented in the convention forming our constitution. Ninety-two such subdivisions of our territory now exist, each for itself administering important local affairs at great expense to the people. Our Board of County Commissioners is, in legal contemplation, the county, and as such is declared to be a body corporate and politic, and intrusted with large powers of a local administrative character. Prohibited from passing local or special laws regulating county and township business, the election of county and township officers and their compensation, the General Assembly has for many years tried in vain to reduce the county business to a simple, economical and uniform system. I wish you better success. Recently a commission of experienced gentlemen, appointed by Marion county, has given the subject careful study and reduced the results to a form suitable for your consideration.

Our laws fixing the compensation of officers were enacted when times were flush, when the necessaries of life were high, and when labor received better compensation and was in greater demand than now. Therefore, I recommend a reduction of all fees and salaries in accordance with the times.

Our cities and towns should be reduced to a proper subordination to the counties of which they severally constitute parts. They are now almost independent of State supervision, and involve their citizens in needless expenses. The assessment and collection of their revenues alone, by one set of officers in a county, would result in a great saving, and is recommended.

EXPERT EVIDENCE.

The statutes say that witnesses subpenaed to testify in the county where they reside shall not be entitled to demand and receive their fees in advance. I see that some gentlemen who had been subpenaed to testify as expert witnesses in an important criminal trial in progress in this county recently, refused to testify unless fees were paid in advance. I cannot see any good reason why one class of citizens shall be compelled to attend and testify under a penalty of fine and imprisonment, and another class embarrass the proceedings of a court because the party wanting their evidence is unable to pay them fees in advance. I recommend that you remedy this growing evil; for, if you have the right to pay or excuse one class, you have the right to pay or excuse all others in the same manner.

OUR JUDICIAL SYSTEM

needs your careful consideration and wise legislation. Too much of the time of our Circuit Courts is occupied with suits brought for small sums, especially by administrators, the costs of which equal the amount recovered. I recommend that you remedy this evil, and suggest the propriety of enlarging the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace, so as to relieve the Circuit Courts of a great deal of business of a frivolous nature involving no unsettled questions of law or practice. At the same time you could perhaps relieve the Supreme Court in a great measure by a further limitation of its jurisdiction, and making judgments of certain classes final, without appeal therefrom. A speedy and economical administration of justice is demanded by the times.

LAWS AND JOURNALS.

Unnecessary delay has occurred for many years in publishing and circulating the laws and thereby putting them in force, and in printing and distributing the journals. I respectfully suggest that you provide for the printing of the journals at the close of each day's proceedings, that they may be carefully inspected and corrected the next morning by the members, thus securing accuracy, promptness and a great saving in the work and expense, and keeping yourselves and the people advised of the progress of your business. The acts should be printed in the order of their enactment, and, the financial statements being ready and appended, they could be given to the people at an early day after your adjournment. The Secretary of State makes some further recommendations which should receive your consideration.

THE STATE FINANCES.

The reports of the Treasury Department are full and complete. The last Legislature reduced the State tax from 13 to 12 cents on the $100. The proceeds of that levy, with delinquent taxes, docket fees and taxes otherwise collected and amounts reimbursed by counties and received from prison contractors, have been sufficient to defray the expenses of the several departments and institutions in whose favor appropriations were made. I trust the same amount will be sufficient to pay the expenses for the next two years. It is not the State taxes but the county and township taxes and fees of officers that oppress the people. They are double and in many instances three times that of the State.

The general fund had and received during the last year	$1,860,777.61
And disbursed	1,497,356.20
Leaving, Oct. 31, 1878	$ 363,421.41

The receipts and disbursements each include the $200,000 of temporary loan falling due April 1 and renewed.

The treasury statement for the month ending Dec. 31, 1878, shows the balance at that date of general fund in the sum of $628,161.52.

The public debt was at the close of the fiscal year $4,998,178.34, having been reduced in the sum of $4,100. Of this $1,093,386.12 is "foreign," and $3,904,792.22 "domestic," being evidenced by five non-negotiable bonds held by the school fund.

The total value of the taxable property was:

In 1877	$865,190,195.00
In 1878	850,616,987.00

The total number of taxable polls was:

In 1877	497,931
In 1878	[illegible]

Having through your committees gained information as to the correctness of the Auditor's detailed estimates of the expenditures to be defrayed from the treasury for the ensuing two years, it should be the work of but a few days to prepare and pass bills for appropriation laws and for a law fixing the rate of taxation and for renewing temporary loans.

I sincerely hope that, realizing the limited term for which you are convened, you may be able, at any early day, to consider the matters communicated to you, and that your most important business may not be delayed until the confusion incident to the closing hours of the session shall involve you in errors which you will afterward regret.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THURSDAY, Jan. 9.—SENATE.—The Senate organized by resolution, declaring the following as the Senate's choice of officers: Daniel D. Dole (Democrat), Secretary; Charles W. Ward (National), Assistant Secretary; and Richard Hutcheson (Democrat), Doorkeeper. The Lieutenant Governor's vote was required to pass the resolution. Of three National Senators, Major voted with the Democrats, and Poindexter and Davis with the Republicans.... Bills were introduced fixing the rate of interest at 6 per cent.; making grave-robbery a felony instead of a misdemeanor; providing for a new system of keeping public accounts; for the abolition of the Superior Court in Wayne County; and for providing medical colleges with subjects for dissection.

HOUSE.—The House organized by electing Henry S. Cauthorne (Democrat), as Speaker; Webster Dixon (Democrat), Clerk; D. H. Wilson (Democrat), Doorkeeper....A bill was introduced to fix the number of jurors at six instead of twelve.

Spelling Reform.

The Illinois Industrial University at Champaign bids fair to become the cradle of the Western spelling-reform movement. Both faculty and students are joining in the good work in a manner well worthy of imitation by other institutions. "The I. I. U. Spelling Reform Association," organized during the last month, already numbers a large proportion of the students, and waxes stronger day by day. Its rules are, for the present, only the following five: 1. Use e for ea when equivalent to short e. 2. Omit silent e after a short vowel. 3. Use f for ph. 4. Omit one letter of a final double. 5. Use t instead of ed when it represents the sound.—Chicago Educational Weekly.

The McGarrahan Claim.

Senator Garland, of Arkansas, has prepared a bill by which it is hoped the famous McGarrahan case will be finally dismissed from Congress, where, without positive action, it seems destined to live forever. Senator Garland proposes to send the case to the Court of Claims, with the right to appeal to the Supreme Court. His bill is in the interest of the United States, and provides that the Court of Claims shall also take into consideration the rights of the Government in the case, since it is held by some excellent lawyers that neither McGarrahan nor the New Idria Company have valid claims to the land in controversy.

The leading National Greenback organ of the Eastern States, the New Haven Union, shows that it has a level head. In its issue of the 8th inst it says that "the Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees should receive the vote of every National in the Indiana Legislature who is sincere in advocating Greenback principles. Even were it possible to elect a National by a coalition with the Republicans, such a step would be ill-advised." There is the wisdom in that which leads to success. If principle, and not personal success, is what is sought by party organization, no opportunity should be lost to show earnestness of conviction. That is the way to plant seed for the future harvest.

The General Assembly of Indiana was duly organized last Thursday. Senate Officers—President, Lieut. Gov. Isaac P. Gray; Principal Secretary, Daniel D. Dale, of White county; Assistant Secretary, Charles W. Ward, of Vermillion county; Doorkeeper, Richard Huncheon, of Laporte county.

House Officers—Speaker, Henry S. Cauthorne, of Knox county; Principal Clerk, Webster Dixon, of Jackson county; Assistant Clerk, Thomas C. Mays, of DeKalb county; Doorkeeper, David B. Wilson, of Shelby county. The whole number of bills introduced up to Tuesday evening, was, in the Senate 90. In the House 123. The Democratic members will hold their caucus for the nomination of a United States Senator, on next Monday evening. The caucus for the nomination of candidates for the other offices will be held on Thursday evening the 23d.

A New Postage-Stamp.

The Post-office Department has ordered a new postage-stamp to be used on letters not prepaid. Heretofore a letter being posted and wanting a stamp has been held in the office at which it was mailed. The Post-master at this office then writes to the individual addressed, saying that such a letter has been held in that office for him, the postage not having been prepaid. The new stamp which has just been ordered under the new regulation is put on the letter not prepaid and sent to the Postmaster at the office of its destination, who is charged with the amount due, and to collect the same from the person addressed on the delivery of the letter. A new stamp has also been ordered to be put on the letter after it passes into the hands of the carrier, who then becomes responsible for the collection of the postage. This new stamp is intended as a check upon the carrier, who is thereby prevented from pocketing his collections. The new system acts somewhat similar to the bell-punch of the street-car conductors.

A sign of better times: The delinquent tax list will be a little smaller that it was last year.—Waterloo Press.

"A little smaller" for the reason than the law does not allow the publication and sale of lands and lots upon which the delinquent tax is not double the amount of the publication fee. Heretofore the Press has been publishing the list for ten cents each description, which would allow the publication and sale of all lands upon which there was twenty cents or more delinquent taxes; this year the Auditor allows the Press fifty cents for each description, and as there are several hundred lots and small tracts of land in the county upon which the taxes are delinquent the amount on each being less than one dollar, of course the lands and lots cannot be advertised, which accounts for the list being "a little smaller than it was last year." When the publication of the list was let to the lowest bidder, Bro, Baxter took it at ten cents a description, but now when there is no competition allowed he charges fifty cents, as a "sign of better times."

Daniel and the Trade Dollar.

We have read the speech of Hon. D. W. Voorhees, delivered in the United States Senate on the 7th of this month, in which he advocates making the trade dollar a legal tender; and while our objection to the enactment of such a law may be of little consequence, we have independence enough to "speak out in meeting" and present our objections to any measure that would result in speculation in favor of capital and against labor.

Senator Voorhees says: "In my recent association with the generous people of my own great state, I met thousands of farmers, as well as other laboring people, who have suffered loss by reason of the deception practiced on them through the trade dollar. As the time approached, soon after harvest when farmers were anxious to realize on their wheat to meet pressing necessities, the trade dollar in large sums appeared at different points in the state and was used for the purchase of grain at its face value. Very soon afterward the hard-working farmer discovered that he had received but ninety where he thought he had received a hundred cents; but ninety dollars where he had counted to himself a hundred."

Very true; but that time has passed, and the farmers and business men have had their eyes opened—have learned to shun the trade dollar, and to know the value of is before accepting it, which has practically driven it out of circulation in this community; the few remaining are exchanged with difficulty at 95 cents.

Again, the Senator says: "After full consideration, the best method for the cure of the trade dollar blunder, as it appears to me, is to incorporate it into our lawful currency, making it a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and providing for its re-coinage into the standard silver dollar as fast as it comes into the treasuary in the course of business.

It is objected to this that brokers, speculators and financial gamblers now hold considerable sums of this illegitimate currency, and that a profit will be accrue to them by making it lawful money. To some extent this is true, but such a minor evil as that ought not to be urged as a reason for continuing to rob and defraud our own citizens."

We heartily endorse the clause "providing for its re-coinage into the standard silver dollar," which the government can do as well without making it a legal tender as it could if the value was changed by Congress. The objection to which the Senator refers we regard as well taken, as the "brokers, speculators and financial gamblers" are to-day gathering and hording the "trades" at 90 to 95 cents, in anticipation of the passage of a legal tender act which would add at least five cents to the current value of every trade dollar of the thirty-five millions that have been issued, making a net profit for the speculators amounting to $1,750,000. It would not only profit the speculators and money gamblers, but it would cost the government between three and four million dollars more to redeem legal tender trade dollars for the purpose of re-coinage, than it would to call them in at the rate they are now quoted by the government. If the government has a right to call in one kind of currency, it has a right to do the same with another, then let congress require the trade dollar nuisance to be taken up, and re-coined and re-issued in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains each. Notwithstanding our appreciation of the ability and integrity of Senator Voorhees, we fear his efforts in this instance are detrimental to the interests of the Democratic party.

The Ohio Democrats held enthusiastic celebrations at Columbus and Wooster on the 8th of January, in memory of the gallant old hero and statesman, General Jackson. Speeches were made by the representative Democrats of the state, among whom was General Ewing, who in response to the toast, "The next President of the United States" said: "Who shall our leader be? No man who expects to win the Presidency by a suit in chancery, or an Electoral Commission or by money. Let us have a pure and brave man, on a plain and candid platform. Let it be resolved that the result shall be ascertained and declared according to the immemorial usages of the Government, no matter what powers of force and fraud may attempt to defeat the verdict. It is to be a fight between manhood and money—between the people who bore the heat and burden of the war and an aristocracy which grew and fattened on their sacrifices. Let our leader be one who is with the people, heart and soul—who has a back-bone—and who, if duly elected, will be the President."

This is the ring of pure metal—the key note which should be sounded throughout the west from now until the nomination is made by the National Democratic Convention. Read the extract carefully, it speaks volumes.

Two more congressmen gone. Julian Hartridge of Georgia, and Gustave Schleicher of Texas, both men of ability. This makes nine members of the 45th Congress who have died since it came into existence. It is now reported in Washington that Representatives Ebenezer R. Finley of Ohio and Jacob M. Thornburgh of Tennessee are dangerously ill, with but little hope of recovery. Messrs. Douglas, Williams, Hartridge, and Schleicher were Democrats, as is also Mr. Finley; Mr. Thornburgh is a Republican.

But one Financial issue.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The meeting of the New England Nationals at Boston, on the 2nd inst., laid down the correct issue of the future as to the financial question, until it shall be definately decided by the people. Wendell Philips stated in this way: "The only thing that seems to me to be the issue is, whether this nation shall exclusively issue its money, or let the National Banks issue it; whether the nation will resume its sovereignty or not." He wishes to enforce the wisdom of having but one leading issue at a time. He said: "Now, I don't desire to separate the issues, but one thing at a time must be your object." * * * And Mr. George W. Hewett enforced the same idea. He remarked that while he was on the plains, that "to secure a full game bag, it was necessary to shoot single birds. He, therefore, thought that those in favor of currency reform should come down to the one important issue and stick to it if they wish to succeed, and that issue is the resumption by the Government of its authority, to the exclusion of all else, to issue the money of the country.

The good sense of that will not be disputed by any one who can lay just claim to the possession of that article. To have a purpose and stick to the accomplishment of it alone, to the exclusion of all else, is the way to win, if success is at all possible. Mr. Philips well said that the great mass of the public has never settled but one issue at a time, and if we want success we must present one issue at a time, and not a complication of issues. The Enquirer has insisted on that, claiming that the one great overruling issue for popular settlement is the determining of the question, 'who shall issue the paper currency of the country—the Government or private corporations?' There should be no other financial issue. That, and that alone, should be presented singly to the people. It is a plain, simple proposition, easily understood, and not easily befogged. Who should be intrusted with that attribute of sovereignty? The Government or private corporations? When that shall be decided the details will easily follow And all currency reformers can unite on that one issue—Democrats, Nationals, Greenbackers. Lay the foundation before beginning to build. Settle the character of the foundation first. Senator Thurman, with his usual clearness, has made that very plain and demonstrates its wisdom. General Tom. Ewing does the same. It has the old Jackson ring about it, and will sweep the country.

Last week, independent altogether of the regular issue, the Irish World printed a special edition of thirteen hundred thousand copies. One million three hundred thousand! The papers were folded by steam and wrapped by wrappers kept in constant operation. Put in the scales that would weigh about a hundred tons—a good load for forty horses. Measured, sheet by sheet spread out, it would cover nine hundred and forty miles; and cut into single columns, it would go twice round the earth

This is the largest edition of any newspaper ever published in this or any other country.

Mr. Andrew Ellison, a capitalist of LaGrange makes the following novel proposition in the way of reducing interest on loans made by him. He says; "I am satisfied that if the farmers' produce is to continue at present prices then interest is too high. I have concluded that all persons who have borrowed money of me, the interest on which will become due after the 1st of July, 1879, and prior to the 2nd day of July, 1880, may pay the interest in wheat at the rate of one bushel of wheat for one dollar of interest. If wheat is over one dollar per bushel, they may sell the wheat and pay me in money, as heretofore. If it is less than one dollar per bushel, no matter how low, they may bring me the wheat on the terms above stated."

EXECUTOR'S SALE.

A Magnificent Stock of Dry Goods to be Sold Regardless of Cost.---Not oftener than once in a life-time does such a chance occur.

By the terms of the will of the late John Gray Foster his interest in the business of the widely known firm of Foster Brothers, Fort Wayne, was permitted to remain for the term of two years, but at a recent conference of the executors and remaining partners, it was mutually agreed to close the estate interest on or about March 1st, 1879, and with that end in view the firm will inaugurate

A Great Special Sale, Regardless of Cost. Commencing Monday Jan. 13.

At least $25,000 worth of the immense and elegantly assorted stock must be turned into cash before the day of settlement arrives. To accomplish this at a dull season of the year, Foster Brothers realize that they

MUST TAKE A BIG LOSS FROM THE START.

But the firm which never quailed when, at the close of the war, and during the panic of 1873, it was sometimes necessary to loose a thousand dollars in a single day will not show the white feather now.

This Fearful Cut in Prices Will be Made in Every Department of Our Immense Store.

DRESS GOODS, SHAWLS, CLOAKS, FURS, FLANNELS, BLANKETS, JEANS AND CASSIMERES, CLOAKINGS, PRINTS, GINGHAMS, MUSLINS, TABLE LINENS, MERINO UNDERWEAR, EMBROIDERIES AND ALL FANCY GOODS, CARPETS, OIL CLOTHS, AND WINDOW SHADES WILL ALL GO DOWN TOGETHER.

These Prices Will Show What a Fearful Loss we are Ready to Take

All best Merrimac, Cocheco, American, Gloucester, Pacific, Sprague and Garner Prints 4 cts. a yard. Just think of it! four cents a yard
The recent price has been 8c, and before the war they brought 12½c.

When an entire stock of goods is being slaughtered it is impossible to give many quotations. Goods we shall have one day will be sold the next. Those who come first will, of course, get the best bargains, and will have the best assortment to select from. People who wait until some kinds of goods are all sold will be unreasonable if they blame us for the results of their lack of promptness in taking advantage of this extraordinary opportunity for the purchase of dry goods and carpets at prices below the cost of manufacture.

Remember this Sale does not Commence until Monday, January 13th, 1879.

All Goods will be Marked in Plain Figures, and will be Sold only for Cash.

—How disgusting it is to see a crowd of men (?) stand by and witness two little boys wallowing in the snow, crying and scratching like two cats, and not attempt to part them, but encouraging them to "pitch in," "go for him," &c. Such proceedings are very unbecoming in a civilized community.

—Mr. Umber, of the snath factory has taken a partner, the firm is now Umber & Brown. Mr Umber is entitled to credit for his energy in building up an enterprise which now gives employment to twenty hands when laboring men need work the worst. The amount of timber used is also quite an item in the way of money expended and put in circulation.

BUTLER, IND., Jan. 13th, '79.

The hitherto peaceable school district No. 4, at Harvestock's Corners, is thrown into confusion this winter, the facts in the case I will try to describe. About the first of November at a regular school meeting the district elected Mr. McQscar as their choice of teachers for this winter's term. About two weeks afterward we understood that our trustee was going to take our chosen teacher to another school and was going to hire C. H. Thurston to teach our school. We immediately called a school meeting and petitioned the trustee to not hire him. 14 out of 15 permanent legal voters present signed the petition, which was presented to the trustee the next day, but C. H. Thurston stole a march on us (in common parlance) and went to the trustee before daylight and hired before our petition was presented. After our petition was presented, and the trustee saw what a delima we were in, he went around in another district that had as yet no teacher, and got a promise of the district to accept Thurston, but he refused to go. We again called a school meeting and preferred charges against him believing that we could substantiate, and hoping to get him dismissed. In the mean time he commenced his school with two scholars, and if they attend regular they will average two. The second week of school the writer of this at the request of the trustee called upon Mr. Thurston at school, and asked him if he would resign his school if the district would withdraw the charges, he said if that was all the compromise the district had to offer he would have nothing to do with it. I asked him it he had any thing to offer, he said he had not. I told him if at any time he had anything to offer, I would do all I could to bring about a reconcilliation. He said he had hired legally to teach the school calculated that to be his winter's work, as to his being legally hired we would say the public is occasionally badly plundered even under the sanction of law. Several years ago congress passed a law commonly called the Salary Grab law, by which members of congress voted themselves each several thousand dollars. A good many, to their honor, would not receive the money, and most of those who did gobble have been retired to private life. It seems that our trustee hired Thurston unconditionally, the two previous trustees, Mr. Ash and Mr. Sewell, generally hired on condition that the teacher must have a certain average number of scholars, our complaints are that we think the trustee ought not to assume arbitrary power and take away the chosen teacher of a district, or to put a teacher on a district who is repugnant to the larger scholars, or parents of the district. We believe the spirit and intent of the school law is, that each district shall choose its own teacher. If the district fail to elect from any cause, then it is the duty of the trustee to fill the vacancy. To the citizens of surrounding districts and teachers who have nobly offered to take as many of our scholars as we could send, we return our sincere thanks, but I think there are about 20 who ought to be at school that cannot under the circumstances attend.

—MESSRS. A. F. Shultz are running their saw mill to good advantage to themselves and neighborhood. They are trying to fill a contract of 2500 ties, to be delivered on the Air Line R. R. at Waterloo, thus furnishing work for a good many hands and teams. Their ambition will be to deliver the best lot of ties ever received at Waterloo.

JOHN SOWL.

Died.

SPROTT:—At his residence in Williams Center, Williams county, Ohio, on the 31st day of December, 1878, in the 73d year of his age, Col. John Sprott

Deceased was born at Darlington, Beaver county, Penn., Oct. 19th, 1806. Removed with his father thence to Richland (now Ashland) county in 1823; was married to Miss Thomzin Fleming in 1830, and removed to Canaan Center (now called Windsor) Wayne county, Ohio, and in 1836 removed thence to that portion of Putnam county now attached to Allen county, Ohio, where he resided in different locations until 1872 when he removed to said Williams Center, where he remained until his death.

He was a man of pure moral and christian character, having been a respected member of the Presbyterian Church for more than thirty years; a man of unflinching integrity and honesty, having for many years served as Justice-of-the-Peace, and having served two terms as Director of the Allen county Infirmary; respected by all who knew him; of sound and unswerving political principles and love of country and her institutions; liberal to a fault, and always ready to extend a helping hand to the needy; a farmer by occupation.

The remains were followed to their last resting place in Byran graveyard by many weeping relatives, and numerous sorrowful neighboring friends. He leaves two surviving brothers, two sisters a wife, seven daughters, two sons and thirty-five grand children, to mourn their bereavement.

—An exchange says: we don't like this thing of resumption—a fellow is so apt to mistake a $20 gold piece for a silver half dollar when he meets a tramp that he frequently gives $19,50 more in charity than he intended to.

Notice.

Is hereby given that the taxes of the town of Auburn for the year 1878 are due, and the warrant is in my hands for the collection of the same. Office with Thos. H. Sprott.

Jacob Walburn, C. A. O. McClellan, G. H. K. Moss, Wm. McIntyre, J. H. Ford, C. L. Luce, Isaac Hague, E. Berry, J. E. Shilling. We understand that Mr. Ed. Harris, a gentleman of considerable bank experience, will be appointed Assistant Cashier.

—The Oliver Chilled Plow Company of South Bend gave a grand reception on the 9th inst. It was an expensive and grand affair, special trains were chartered to convey the agents of the company from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois. Elegant dinners and suppers were furnished the excursionists along the several routes and all expenses paid while in South Bend. Hon. Schuyler Colfax delivered the address. A number of representatives of daily newspapers were present to write up the proceedings, and give the factory a good send-off for the coming season. Advertising pays.

—A young man in Boston received a bequest of $25,000. He had been poor and the sudden acquisition of wealth rather turned his head. He began to spend the money in reckless dissipation, in spite of the efforts of his father to restrain him, and kept on until only $11,000 was left. The father begged that this remainder might be given to him for safe keeping, and the son, being then ill from long drunkenness, and very penitent, readily complied. The father put $10,950 into a pocket in his shirt, and started out to spend the other $50 in a frolic. That night he slept on a bench in a barroom and in the morning every cent of the money was gone.

—The recent decision of the supreme court of the United States, declaring the law of Congress of 1862 unconstitutional, which makes polygamists bigamists, will likely create no little commotion among the latter day saints of Utah. These apostles of lust have appealed to the Bible and the constitution for justification of their beastly habits, and have been able to maintain their hostile attitude toward civilization and law; but the decision of the supreme court will, we conclude, have the effect at an early day, to change the Mormon programme, and we shall not be surprised to see a number of the leading Mormons, who boast of the number of wives at their command, inmates of the penitentiaries, paying the penalties of bigamists.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

—Bear in mind that the game law is now in force, the following are the provisions of that statute.

Section one provides that it shall be unlawful to shoot, trap or kill in any manner, deer, buck, doe or fawn, between the 1st day of January and the 1 day of October, the penalty being a fine of $10 for each offense.

Section two provides that it shall be unlawful to net or trap quails at any time, and to shoot, trap or destroy quails or pheasants, between the 1st day of January and the 1st day of November of each year. The penalty is a fine of $2 for each violation.

Section five, provides that it shall be unlawful to net, trap, kill or to injure or to pursue with intent so to do, any woodcock between the 1st days of January and July in each year. The penalty is a fine of $2 for each offense.

Brainards' Musical World.

Another Holiday number for the new year, of this popular musical monthly. The Musical World for January, 1879, appears in an entire new dress and with an elegant and attractive new title page and is now one of the handsomest publications in the country. Fifty pages of the choicest of new music and interesting musical reading matter will be found in each number. In all twenty pages of new music, usual sheet music size and worth alone about $3.00. The literary contents are very interesting and include all the musical news of the day. An elegant full page portrait of some musical celebrity is also given in each number. For $1.50 you can secure the World for 1879, which will contain over $25.00 worth of new music, or for 15 cents a sample copy will be sent you by the publishers, S. Brainard's Sons, Cleveland, O.

Madame Anderson.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—Madame Anderson concluded the task of walking 2,700 quarter miles in as many consecutive quarter hours to night. Considerable money is said to have changed hands on the result. She commenced the last quarter at 10:45, and made it in two minutes and thirty-seven seconds. During the last four quarters she was the recipient of several presents. The quarter before the last she stepped upon the stand and said she hoped they would keep quiet so that she might accomplish the feat without interference. She appeared greatly exhausted. After her last quarter mile had been accomplished, she was taken to her physician where she will be under treatment for a week or two. At first she will not be allowed more than fifteen minutes sleep at a time, as it is said she would probably never wake if not disturbed, but in a day or two she will be allowed to sleep two hours at a time, and rest will be gradualy increased until she can take all the rest she desires without fear of injury.

As spring approaches we naturally begin to look around to see what the prospects are for improvement and enterprise during the coming season. The first thought that enters our mind is concerning the manufacturing interest the life of every prosperous town, and the branch of industry which above all others should receive encouragement from the people. We know of no town better situated for shipping facilities than Auburn. We have an abundant supply of timber of all kinds suitable for the manufacture of agricultural implements and machinery and an effort should be made to induce responsible parties to locate here and engage in that branch of industry. Auburn is also greatly in need of a first class foundry and machine shop in connection with the manufacture of machinery, the county being thickly settled the item of repairs alone is of considerable importance. A great many other manufactories of a similar character might be mentioned, such a wagon and carriage factory on an extensive scale, furniture factory, woolen mill &c. Every inducement should be offered by the citizens to secure the location of such manufactories as will give employment to a large number hands.

—Monday night the jewelry establishment of Mr. J. Gorman was entered, and about half a dozen watches stolen together with a lot of other jewelry. The shoe shop of Mr. A. He is said to be a boy about 18 years of age. This ought to be a warning to business men, as they are very careless in the way they expose their places of business.

CLARA.

The COURIER of this week contains the message of Gov. J. D. Williams, in full. The message contains suggestions upon all matters of importance likely to come before the legislature for action; it is free from the usual allusions to national finances and national politics, the blessings of Providence, &c. The Governor presents his ideas in plain unmistakable language, that there may be no misapprehension of his position upon any subject considered in the message. It is a good State paper. Read it, and judge for yourselves.

FORESHADOWINGS.

[Cornelia asks her sons, the Roman Gracchi, "to remember that their wives are now living on the earth, and to pray for their weal, although, as yet, they have not been seen by their future husbands. * * * Your best preservation is anticipation. Think that you wish to win a white soul and you will be unwilling to give less than you bargain for."—Extract from one of Joseph Cook's lectures.]

How shall I know thee when thou comest, my King,
Seeing that thou wearest not thy crown abroad;
Seeing that thou sendest me no token ring,
And that no mark is on thy forehead set?
Ah! I shall know thee as my heart knows God!
And I affirm that thou art all for me,
As I, thy Queen and subject, am for thee,
If that thou be not wrongly captive led
By any other woman's luring smile,
Nor lay on any other heart thy head,
If thou canst live thy life apart awhile
[illegible]
If so be thou canst bear this long, sharp care
Which eats my heart as it consumeth thine,
While I go groping vainly in the dark,
Hoping to touch thy hand and find thee out,
And by thy love be robed and wrapped about,
And crying like a newly-orphaned child
Because I do not grasp thee anywhere—
Or like to one who is in sleep beguiled;
For ah! in dreams what will not fancy dare?
Be true to me as I am true to thee!
Keep sacred all thy tender ways for me;
Keep the caresses of thine eyes for me,
And every thrilling hand-clasp, till I come,
Like one who staggers wearied toward home,
To hold my unkissed face up to thine,
To feel thy strong life passing into mine,
Making me likewise strong, until my feet,
Like to my heart's responsive, steady beat,
Keep firm and even step beside thine own,
And we walk on together through the world—
Never, oh! never more to be alone—
With faces like unto the face of him
Whose life was haunted by a dream of treasure,
Which he went searching for throughout the earth,
Holding all lighter things of little worth,
Until, at last, he found it one glad day,
Which made it sweeter than all flowers of May,
And took it up and went his way with pleasure.

CLATE MILLER'S EXPLOIT.

The Millers were Eastern people, who had moved out into Minnesota the year previous to my story. They went in the spring and took up land under the Homestead law, on the border of "Lick's prairie," near the "big timber," as the heavy-growth forest is there called.

Claxton, or Clate, Miller was then 15 or 16 years old, a well-made though rather lean and tall boy, who loved hunting rather better than hoeing corn or sowing wheat.

Now a new farm even in the West cannot be made at once productive, and the Millers, who were poor people, had to shift almost any way to live for the first year and a half.

The game which Clate shot stood them in good stead, for the boy not infrequently got a deer. Deer were plenty, though shy, in the "opens" among the timber, and about the "sloughs" and "sinks," or small lakes.

Before a year passed Clate had become quite successful at stalking deer, and had grown inured to the hard tramps which such hunting involves.

Mr. Miller, senior, had served as a soldier in the army, and had brought home his gun, a rifle of the pattern manufactured at the Springfield Armory. This he had "smooth bored" for shot—thus changed from a rifle to a shot-gun. It made a very good fowling-piece, though rather heavy. Clate used it both for shot or bullets, as suited his game.

One morning in October he set off a little before light after deer, and had gone to a "run" a mile or two distant, where he had observed "signs" a day or two before. The run, which in wet months was the bed of a small creek or brook, making down from out the timber, was now dry, for the season had been very droughty.

The land on both sides of it was half-open meadow, with hazel clumps, high grass and briars, and there were fresh raspberries here even then.

The briars and hazel-bushes overhung the dry creek-bed. Clate's plan had been to get into the creek-bed, and so work cautiously up the run, peeping up at intervals for a look on both sides. If there were deer feeding in the "open," he thought that he might thus be able to get near enough for a shot.

Carrying out this maneuver, he crawled up the run for half a mile or more; then he heard an odd cracking noise close at hand. It was apparently only a few yards back from the turfy bank of the creek beneath which he was crouching. The bank here was three or four feet high, and overgrown with wild gooseberry-bushes and dry grass.

Clate thought that the noise was caused by a deer coming through the bushes, though it did not sound just like that, either. With gun cocked, he straightened noiselessly up, and cast a sharp glance through the gooseberry bushes.

To his astonishment he saw, not a deer moving in the brush, but an Indian, sitting on the ground scarcely fifteen yards off, cracking hazel-nuts with one stone on another.

Now Indians often strolled about the locality, and frequently came to settlers' houses to beg food. Sometimes they stole articles, but were not much feared. They were regarded rather as beggars, whom, however, the settlers commonly tried to keep the right side of. Clate knew a good many of these vagrant redskins, and had sometimes traded and dickered with them.

But within a month or two there had been rumors of outrages in the back sections. (It was the fall preceding the New Ulm massacres.) An Indian war was feared. Fewer of the savages had come about the settlement of late, and those who had were reported as insolent and as giving out menacing threats. For some little time the people had been living in uneasiness verging toward positive alarm.

A month or two before, Clate would have hailed the redskin and stopped for a friendly talk; but now the sight of him set our hero's heart beating, for he felt quite sure his presence there boded mischief.

As the bushes and grass were dense, Clate stood still and watched. It was now quite light, and he noticed at once that this Indian was not in tattered breeches and dirty blanket-coat—as the frontier redskin ordinarily presents himself—but painted and belted, as if on some brave expedition.

His hair was feathered and dressed. At his side hung a new sharp hatchet, and he had fresh deer-hide trousers and new moccasins. At his other side was suspended from his belt a beautifully-trimmed pocket, made of a single glossy sable's skin. This held the hazel-nuts which he was cracking.

His gun, a fine long-barreled rifle, such as Government agents seem to have abundantly supplied to these rascals, leaned against a bush near him.

"He's here for no good," thought Clate, "else he wouldn't be eating hazel-nuts for his breakfast when he could just as well have a better one for the asking down at Ohlsen's. He'd most likely shoot me if he got sight of me. I've a good mind to pepper him."

Hardly had these thoughts flashed through the boy's mind when three more savages, one a huge, brawny fellow, came suddenly and noiselessly through the bushes. One of them, a heavy-faced young buck, had a tin pail—a curious dish for an Indian to carry—in which there was milk; while the third bore a large bundle, swaddled up [illegible] gown.

Clate's heart was now bumping away at a great rate. "They've been stealing, if no worse," thought he; but the face and figure of the big savage at once riveted his attention.

A long, deep, livid scar seamed one entire side of his face, from the corner of his eye downward, his forehead was fairly creased and wattled, and there was that frightfully repulsive coarseness and thickness of the mouth and lips which made Clate feel sure that this Indian could be none other than "Old Scar Face," as the settlers had named him, a sort of chief, and who had the reputation of being a ring-leader in Indian fights, and a quarrelsome, dangerous savage.

At sight of this ugly savage, Clate trembled and crouched lower behind the bushes. He felt sure now that some attack was meditated, and that his own scalp would be hardly safe on his head if they found him.

Then he thought of his folks, and knew that he ought to warn them; but he dared not stir. The snap of the least twig might reveal his presence to the quick-eared, sharp-eyed redskins, for the sun was now lighting up the whole landscape.

The low gutturals of the savages came to his ear as they talked and hastily drank the milk. When they had finished it, they tossed the pail toward the creek bed. It fell within a short distance of where the boy lay listening.

Then he heard them going off through the briars. Rising cautiously, he saw that they were moving out across the "open," in the direction of Ohlsen's clearing. This belonged to a Norwegian family named Ohlsen, that lived two miles below the Millers.

The Indians had not taken their big bundle. The moment they were out of sight, Clate came out and found where they had set it away among some hazels. He hastily pulled it open. It contained blankets, coats, pants, women's dresses, even aprons, together with knives and forks, spoons, tin plates and dippers.

It was evident that some settler's cabin had been plundered. This Clate readily surmised. But the bundle of spoils contained still more conclusive evidence of rapine and outrage; for, jumbled in with the other articles, there now rolled out a bloody cloth, in which were wrapped—horrible sight!—two fresh, gory scalps, one a man's, or a boy's, the other that of a little child!

At sight of these frightful trophies of murder the boy turned quite sick, and for a moment he was so faint as to be scarcely able to stand. He had read and heard of such things, but never before had he seen them.

Then a feeling of rage and fury as suddenly rose within him. He clenched his gun and determined to follow after the cruel wretches, though by no means certain as to what he could do.

Down at the edge of the "timber," where the woodland bordered the prairie, he came in sight of the four savages about half a mile ahead. They were going to Ohlsen's, as he had suspected.

The settler's log-house was in plain view. From the chimney a blithe morning smoke was now just rising high in the clear, crisp air.

Here for a moment Clate stood irresolute, for he was tortured by the thought that he ought to go home and alarm his own folks.

But he had true sympathetic courage. He could not see those murderous scoundrels going towards Ohlsen's to do them fatal injury, and then turn his back on the kind-hearted Norseman and his family of little children.

On he ran again, and, keeping in the bushes along the edge of the timber, came down opposite the house in time to see the redskins go to the door and then pass into the house.

Between the timber and Ohlsen's house there was a bushy pasture, inclosed by a log fence, in which their cow was kept. Getting over the fence on the forest side, Clate ran across the pasture, toward the house, from bush-clump to bush-clump, till he came to the log-fence on the road, only a few rods from the house door.

Fireweeds and briars had grown up along the fence, making a thick hedge. Scarcely had the boy reached this fence when he heard loud words in the house. Ohlsen was ordering the Indians to leave. Then came a loud crash, as of chairs and dishes, and with it screams and the cries of the children. The miscreants were at their work!

To leap the fence and rush to give such help as he could was Clate's first impulse; but what chance of success would he stand against four armed savages? But the next instant the house door was burst open, and Ohlsen, struggling with three of the red-skins, was dragged out.

The poor man fought desperately with his fist and a billet of firewood. Twice he broke away from the savages and felled one of them senseless for a moment; but the other two threw themselves upon him, wrenched the stick from his grasp, and held him fast.

At the same instant the big, hideous-faced savage rushed out of the house with a ferocious whoop, flourishing the scalp of Ohlsen's wife, and dragging one of the little boys by the hair. The air rang with the poor little fellow's frantic screams.

"Oh farder, farder!" he shrieked.

With a mighty effort Ohlsen had again almost wrenched away from the Indians, seeing which, "Old Scar Face" let go of little Hanse, and, pulling his tomahawk from his belt, bounded forward and struck at Ohlsen's head.

The loud report of a heavily-charged gun burst on the morning air at the same moment from behind the log fence, and, with a groan, "Old Scar Face" tumbled forward, then struggled to his feet again, only to totter backward, dead, shot through and through with the heavy deer charge.

Regardless of the consequences to himself, Clate had fired, and with true aim. The other Indians at once let go of their victim, stopped and looked toward the spot from whence the gun had been fired, and sprung to get their guns, which, on entering the house, they had set up beside the door. Ohlsen lay on the ground as if dead.

[illegible] across the pasture, through the bush-clumps, over the log fence. The redskins shot at him in the open space. Clate heard the balls whiz past.

His own gun, now useless, he had dropped the moment he had fired. As he leaped the fence, he saw that the Indians were running after him at their utmost speed.

And now the lad's long legs stood him in good stead. Dashing into the timber, he did not try to hide in the thickets, for he knew his pursuers would ferret him out of these, but sped away for dear life for a mile or more, to where a road had been "bushed out" leading down through the timber from the settlement above, at Holt's corn-mill, to the Lick's Prairie settlement.

Getting into this road, or, rather, trail Clate started for Holt's corn-mill, four miles off. If he could reach that, he would be safe.

He had not run more than a hundred rods up this road, however, when he met a loaded mule-team, with two Swedes, coming down to Lick's. One of them had a gun. Clate shouted the alarm to them. They stopped the team, and prepared to defend themselves as best they could.

But, when the Indians came out into the trail and saw the team and three men, they did not think best to attack them, but went back into the timber.

Thus ended Clate's adventure.

The Swedes drove to Ohlsen's and found him up and stirring, though frightfully wounded in the head. The hatchet-stroke had cleaved the scalp and flesh from the skull on the left side of his head, and shaved his left ear completely off. In the struggle the blow had gone a little to one side.

There can be little doubt that Clate's timely shot from behind the log fence saved not only Ohlsen's life, but the lives of his five children, though his poor wife died within a fortnight from her injuries and the fright she had received.—Youths' Companion.

Our Foreign Commerce.

Edward Nimmo, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, has prepared a statement compiled from complete commercial reports of November, which shows the balance of trade for the month to have been the unusual amount of nearly $2,000,000 in favor of the United States. This is the largest November balance in our favor that has been noted since records have been kept, which is one of the dullest months of the year. The balance of trade in our favor for five months of the current fiscal year, commencing July 1, is $113,904,084, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. over the balance in our favor for the corresponding months of last year. The balance in our favor for the twelve months ending November 30, 1878, is $309,309,741, while that for the twelve months ending November 30, 1877, was only $140,723,629. This shows the growth of our commerce in a single year, and returns for the calendar year of 1878, which are complete, with the exception of the last fifteen days in December, show that the balance of trade in favor of the United States will be nearly $350,000,000, more than $100,000,000 more than last year, nearly $200,000,000 more than 1876, more than $250,000,000 more than 1875, and $300,000,000 more than 1874, before which time the balance of trade ranged from $10,000,000 to $150,000,000 against the United States. The exportation of gold has almost entirely ceased, and there has been very little transatlantic movement of coin for the last two months. The statisticians of the treasury state that the year just closing has been the most prosperous, as far as foreign commerce is concerned, in the history of the United States.

Attacked by Wolves in Minnesota.

Recently Mr. Miner, of the town of Langola, Benton county, was driving from his own house to Mr. Morrill's, having with him his wife and three children, and when near the Jocelyn school-house was attacked by five large timber-wolves. The fierce beasts sprung at his horses, and, when Mr. Miner struck at the nearest one with his whip, it made a leap to get to him, but struck against the wagon box. At this moment Mr. Miner's dog bravely attacked this wolf, but was at once set upon by the whole pack, killed, and almost entirely devoured. This gave Mr. Miner an opportunity to whip up his horses and make off, which he did at a full gallop, calling loudly for help. His cries attracted the attention of Mr. Jocelyn and family, who came to the rescue, and the wolves were driven off. But for the fortunate interference of the dog the result might have been much more serious. An attack of this kind by wolves is almost without precedent in this part of the State, and it must be that the animals were driven to it by ravenous hunger.—St Cloud (Minn.) Journal.

The Meanest Man.

An English bridegroom residing at Plymouth had a very eventful honeymoon. He quarreled with and thrashed his wife the second hour after marriage, thrashed her again at night, after clubbing the wedding guests out of the house, and on the second day sold all his clothes, excepting his trousers, for rum, and wound up in jail on the third day.

About the Only Drawback.

If Edison's electric light should take the place of kerosene in our kitchens, there must be some other plan adopted to prevent the increase of ignorant servants.—Norristown Herald.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

A SMALL quantity of salicylic acid is found to stop germination altogether. Phenic acid only suspends it.

DR. HALLEY says that the total evaporation caused by the rays of the sun on the surface of the Mediterranean sea amounts to 58,800,000,000 tons of water in one summer day.

IT is estimated that there are 114,043,940 tons of coal consumed annually in England. If the quantity of sulphur contained in this coal be supposed to be 1 per cent.—there has been no accurate determination of the percentage of sulphur—not less than [illegible] tons of sulphuric acid is discharged each year into the atmosphere.

FROM the debris of the coal mines France makes annually 700,000 tons of excellent fuel, and Belgium 500,000 tons. In England, where there is not so much waste in coal mining, and where coal is much cheaper, the manufacture of artificial fuel is only about 200,000 tons a year. Germany makes fuel, for the most part, from peat and similar earths.

PORK differs from beef and mutton, not in flavor only, but in the larger proportion of fat to lean flesh. This is due both to the nature of the animal, in its tendency to store up fat, and to the habit of so feeding and treating it that this tendency may be fully developed. The pig stores up in its body three times more of its food than the ox, and by so much is it more cheaply and quickly grown and fattened.

A. S. WILSON, an English scientist, has made an elaborate calculation to show the marvelous industry of bees. Starting with the ascertained fact that 125 heads of clover yield approximately 15.432 grains of sugar, and that the proportion of sugar in honey may be roughly estimated at 75 per cent., he finds that 2,500,000 clover flowers must be visited by bees to obtain one pound of honey from that source.

M. GOPPERT says that no matter how carefully writing has been obliterated, enough traces of the iron oxide of the ink will remain to appear in a photograph of the paper written upon. The light reflected from virgin paper acts differently on photographic materials from that reflected from parts which have formerly been covered with ink, even though the eye may not be able to detect any difference. M. Goppert thinks that the genuineness of a document may always be tested by photography.

VEGETABLE physiologists used to think that leaves absorbed dew and rain until a Frenchman named Duchartre, in 1857, reversed this view, and his opinion was adopted by botanists. Practical gardeners, however, have never been converted, and they freely syringe their plants under certain conditions. And now the Rev. Mr. Denslow, in England, has, after many experiments, concluded that dew is not absorbed at night, but that absorption takes place at sunrise, when transpiration is begun, and the water on the leaves is sucked in.

IN his "True Law of Population," Doubleday points out that "Populations are universally found thin in pastoral countries where the food is chiefly animal; denser where it is mixed; still denser where vegetable but plenteous; densest of all where it is vegetable and scarce." The natural inference is that in the plethoric state productiveness is arrested, while in the deplethoric it is reinvigorated. In the poorest times Irish families subsisting on potatoes and meal averaged seven, against five in England and three in France. In rice-eating countries the population is dense.

A PARIS physician has discovered a soporific which he declares to be innocuous, and which has the virtue of being limitable in the duration of its effects at one's pleasure. The time during which a given dose will operate can be calculated to within ten minutes of the actual figure. Thus, a traveler with two hours and a half's journey before him might feel perfectly safe in taking a two hours' dose, or even a two hours and twenty minutes', though the last might be a little dangerous. The inventor, who, throughout his experiments, had railway traveling in his mind, arranges the doses in "miles," or rather kilometres. Of course, its composition is a secret. It has already been tried by a number of the physician's patients, who allowed themselves to be experimented on. They pronounce it agreeable to the taste, having something of the flavor of chartreuse.

Ambidextrous.

There is something more significant than most persons think in the "left" hand. We give all our nice work to one hand, and thus train it to strength, celerity and skill, and leave the other to feebleness and awkwardness. Indeed, children are generally trained to one-handedness almost from infancy. If both hands were trained alike, they would be alike. Even the toes can be trained to the dexterity of the fingers. In musical education both hands are equally trained for the keys of the piano and organ.

Now in many employments much would be gained by being able to use either hand with equal facility, and often both at the same time. Brown-Sequard, one of the most eminent of modern writers on physiology, urges that children be educated on both sides of the body equally; and Agassiz advised his pupils to train both sides alike, notwithstanding they had been brought up to the special use of one side. Most adults would find it difficult to change the old habit, but with the young it would only be a matter of care and attention for a comparatively short time.

Two Brothers.

There was an affecting and dramatic scene at a wedding among colored people in Pittsburgh last week, when two brothers whom slavery had divided were suddenly brought together after long separation. They had been born in Maryland, and the planter, whose property they were, becoming embarrassed in business, was obliged to part with some of his slaves, and the two boys were among those whom he sold. One of them was taken to Texas, the other to Virginia. They had grown to be men before the war came, and never expected to see each other again. After emancipation they both went North and engaged in business, but they never met. Each supposed the other to be dead. To this wedding went many colored people from the South and West among them the brothers. As they appeared to be strangers, some one introduced them. Before the day was over they discovered their relationship and each had told the story of his life.

The Lottery Ticket.

An Italian gentleman with a nice little income had a nice little servant girl, who said to him one morning, "O, if you please, won't you give me 3 francs to buy a lottery ticket with? I dreamed last night that No. 41,144 was going to draw the capital prize, and I want to buy that number."

He gave the girl 3 francs, and, next day, on happening to look at the report of the drawing, saw that No. 41,144 had drawn the capital prize of 518,652.85 lire, or, to speak more accurately $100,000.

Returning quietly to the house he concealed his emotion and said to the servant girl, "Susan, I have long observed with approbation your piety, beauty, modesty, skill in the art of cookery, and other good qualities calculated to adorn the highest station. Be mine. Let me lead you to the hymeneal altar. No delay. Just as you are."

"Honest Injun?" said the blushing virgin.

"You bet. I swear by yonder silver spoon that tips with beauty all the fruit-pie top"——

"Then count me in, and regard me hereafter in the light of your turtle-dove."

"Hasten, then, Susan; put on your bonnet and shawl, and let us take a walk around the block to the only friar's cell, where we shall be made one."

In a few minutes the bride-elect returned clad in a red, red shawl, with a black velvet bonnet trimmed with sunflowers and Victoria regia. In a few minutes more the ceremony had been performed, and the twain were one. They returned to the house, where the husband carelessly took up the paper, and said with a well-counterfeited start of surprise;

"Darling, everything is bright for us upon our wedding-day. You remember the ticket in the lottery that you dreamed about and I gave you 3 francs to buy? Where is it, my ownest?"

"Oh! I didn't buy it. I spent the money for this duck of a bonnet."—Paris Paper.

Mrs. Doveturtle's Diary.

January 2.—What charming people the Coobiddys are! I do hope we shall meet them again at the Toodys' ball.

February 1.—Those dear Coobiddys have been to dinner. What a delightful woman she is, and what a well-informed man he is, and how charming are the girls! so unaffected—so nice!

March 3.—We have been to the Coobiddys'. What a duck of a house it is, and how sad to think their lease is up!

April 1.—The house next door to us is to let, and the Coobiddys have taken it. How delightful to have such nice neighbors!

May 1.—The Coobiddys have dined with us twelve times during the last month, and we have dined with them thirteen times. We owe them a dinner.

June 30.—Mr. Doveturtle says that our Henry is almost too young to marry dear Rose Coobiddy, and that dear Fred Coobiddy ought to be a year or two older before he marries our Marion; but I cannot say that I agree with him.

July 31.—Thank goodness, at last Mr. Doveturtle has given his consent, and the day has been fixed for both marriages.

August 31.—What a delightful month we have spent with the dear Coobiddys at Newport! What a pity the holiday is over!

September 1.—Mr. Doveturtle's temper is very uncertain sometimes. Supposing he did invest in those wretched shares on Mr. Coobiddy's advice, he need not be rude to our friend and neighbor.

October 10.—If what Mrs. Toody says is correct, Mrs. Coobiddy is a false, hollow-hearted woman.

November 5.—Our Henry and Marion have returned all the rubbishing presents. If the Coobiddys had any sense of honor they would see that their children did the same, and not stick to all that was of any value.

Christmas Day.—Somehow I always thought there was something wrong with the Coobiddys, and now they are sold out at auction.

A Crazy Woman's Leap.

As a Canada Southern train was passing King's Mills, Ontario, some forty miles west of Buffalo, and while running at the rate of forty-seven miles per hour, an insane woman named Strocher, who was traveling from Detroit to Oswego, rushed to the door of the car and out on the platform, jumping therefrom and landing in a snow bank. Before the train could be stopped it had run some three miles, and when it was backed up the woman was discovered running toward the train. On reaching her she refused to enter the car, and considerable of a scuffle ensued. She was finally overpowered and taken aboard, when it was found that she was entirely uninjured.

Agriculture in Italy.

The Journal of Chemistry says there is no nation in Europe so advanced in its methods of teaching agriculture as Italy. It possesses two high schools of agriculture, a school of forestry, a school of horticulture, one of viniculture, two veterinary schools and twenty-one secondary schools, varying in prominence and organization, but which may be compared broadly with similar French colleges. These institutions are largely subsidized, either by the state or the province where they are situated.

BISHOP HAVEN now proposes that the whole of North America be put under one government; and we hereby nominate him a committee of one to do it.—Chicago Journal.

FAREWELL OF THE OLD YEAR.

When the [illegible] of friendships are numbered,
How oft it appears
That the love which in laughter has slumbered
Awakes now in tears!

We are friends that have journeyed together
Long time, you and I;
Through sunshine and stormiest weather,
But the old year must die.

And awhile in your hearts will awaken
A bitter regret;
And the paths your feet have forsaken
You cannot forget.

Yet I pray you to mourn not my going,
Though we have been friends;
What am I but one billow, whose flowing
Has touched shore, and ends?

And the tale of my joy and my sorrow
Lives but as the trace
Of the waves, that the tides of the morrow
In turn shall efface.

Yet I leave you, as waves leave their treasures
Of coral and shell,
A gift, passing sorrows and pleasures,
Our friendship to tell.

I leave you the friendships, whose growing
Has been from my birth;
There is naught that the tide brings in flowing
Can equal their worth.

For, as shells from the murmurs of ocean
Steal echoes that last,
So in friendship is stored the emotion
Of years that are past.

THE following style of paragraph seems to be growing very popular this season: "It is a sad fact that often the wittiest paragraphs are written while the writer is suffering the keenest mental or physical agony and distress, and the laughter of the public is only the echo of his own suffering," etc., etc., etc. Ah, well, that may be all very true; but if the paragraphist suffers when he is writing his funny things, just think how terribly the poor public suffers when it has to read them.

His Mother.

"Above all things in this world," said a youth who stands on the street corners for a living, "do I value the love of my dear, good mother." "God bless you, young man, for those noble sentiments," said a missionary. "Having so much respect and love for a mother, you need no other recommendation to successful men who will aid you." "Yes," continued the young man, "mother feeds me, clothes me, and does my washing, and has been doing it for twenty years. I don't know what I should do without her."

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

A Love-Chain.

BY MISS PROCTOR.

The bond that links our souls together;
Will it last through stormy weather?
Will it moulder and decay
As the long hours pass away?
Will it stretch if fate divide us,
When dark and weary hours have tried us?
Oh! if it look too poor and slight,
Let us break the links to-night!

It was not forged by mortal hands,
Or clasped with golden bars or bands;
Save thine and mine, no other eyes
The slender link can recognize;
In the bright light it seemed to fade—
And is hidden in the shade;
[illegible]
Or solemn vow, or plighted word.

Yet what no mortal hand could make,
No mortal power can ever break;
What words or vows could never do,
No words or vows can make untrue;
And if to other hearts unknown,
The dearer and the more our own,
Because too sacred and divine
For other eyes, save thine and mine.

And see, though slender, it is made
Of love and trust, and can they fade?
While, if too slight it seem, to bear
The breathings of the summer air,
We know that it could bear the weight
Of a most heavy heart of late,
And as each day and hour flew
The stronger for its burden grew.

Weak but Strong.

I have a dainty, delicate little friend, tall and lily-like in her slender, swaying form. Her big, brown, velvet eyes look out with dreamy sweetness from beneath a wealth of red-gold hair. She was brought up in luxury, to dress, to live in idle luxury; but the sunshine of unalloyed pleasure falls fitfully into most of our lives, and the clouds of reverses came and left her mother an unprovided-for widow with three children to support. Then the girl rose hopefully up and said: "I am almost glad that poverty has come upon us, because it forces me to know of what material I am made and what I can do. I have a little talent, I know, but I intend joining persevering endeavor to it and see what will come of it." That luxuriously-reared child has more orders to-day than her slender hands can fill. Orders for the china she so exquisitely paints, from original designs, with wild roses almost fragrantly natural, with a humming-bird hovering here or a butterfly lighting there, or a ladybug "on her way home" or a frog leaning indolently up against some aspiring bullrushes. Her vases seem alive with autumn flowers and foliage, and the leaves of burnished gold and crimson seem to have just been gathered from their woody homes.

Fashionable Tardiness.

It is now considered the height of fashionable flummery in this city to be among the last arrivals at a sociable party given at a private residence. Last evening there was a party of that description on on North B street—which didn't come off. A lady who desired to give a little entertainment made the usual preparations and invited a number of guests. She illuminated the parlor and left the blinds open that the glare of the gas might light the weary traveler on the street. This was her grand mistake. About 9 o'clock a couple came up to the house, and the young lady looking in the window and seeing the parlors empty, insisted on returning home, as she would not for all the world do such a vulgar thing as to enter a house where there was not a big room full of people to look at her. The two accordingly returned home. In a few minutes another couple reconnoitered the situation from across the street and retired. One after another the guests came up, viewed the empty parlors, and melted back into the darkness. There was no party, and the lady who prepared the entertainment didn't know what to make of such shabby treatment. This idea of trying to be the last one at the evening party is growing to be so common on the Comstock that the time will come when an invitation to a Friday evening's entertainment will mean "Come as early as possible on Saturday morning."—Virginia, Nev., Chronicle.

About Young Women Whom Nature Made Graceful.

Young women, whom nature made graceful, tender, delicate, affect to despise both the duties and limitations of their sex and study mainly how to make themselves the most like men, pretending to be what they are not, and to pose for what they can never be. Or they adopt the airs and graces of another school altogether, and are ultrafeminine, artistic and æsthetic to their finger tips—women to whom the homely life of work and duty is a degradation, common sense the denial of the higher spirits, and affectation the altar to which the domestic altar is raised and the daily tribute brought. Who does not know these artistic daughters of the commonplace? These impossible expounders of æsthetics? Homely in feature and clumsy in form, they drape themselves in the flowing, tight fitting garments of the ideal lady of mediæval times; she whose lines should be all long and slender and instinct with natural grace; long-visages and melancholy; they frizz out their hair, put on coquettish hats, much beribboned and be flowered, and go as near to a group of the phedresses after Watteau as the times will allow; with small twinkling black eyes, snub noses and roguish faces, they pile up their heads in Pompadour or ape the sweet majesty of Marie Antoinettes four feet nothing in height, and round not say pody about the waist and hips, they attempt that swimming, gliding walk which goes only with a lenghty kind of willow wand, but it is impossible to all else; but if they are tall and lean, they probably skip and prance like youthful fairies, thinking that art can conquer nature, and that a sufficient amount of affectation can make them seem to be what they are not. This is one exhibition of airs and graces patent in London society, where everything is set forth save naturalness. That independence which is part of the English character, happily for us, every now and then blossoms out into bold eccentricities, which prove nothing but individual hardihood, and the æsthetic style of dress is one of them. For, unless there is the most absolute harmony between the style and the person, nothing is more ludicrous than these affectations of costume. But oddly enough, for the most part that harmony is wanting, and the woman who has spent precious time in studying patterns, tints and ornaments, knows nothing of the exigencies of her own style, or how to utilize what she has, supply what she has not, and conceal what she ought not to have. Large feet wear glaring stockings and voyant slippers; scraggy shoulders low dresses, an inch below their neighbor's; short, thick throats wear puffy frills and broad black velvet bands, while straight, smooth hair, the merit of which is its silkiness, is tortured into the staring spectres of curls and crimps; and hair that no ingenuity can make to lie straight is plastered and braided down, worn a la Chinoise when nature imperatively demands a fringy and fuzz and refuses a compromise.—London Queen.

Mysteries of Coiffures.

The preference this season is for low coiffures in the daytime and for the street, while full-dress coiffures for evening are high and low at the same time. Two loops, each made of a broad plaited braid, drooping low on the neck, form the present modification of the chatelaine coiffure which has so long been popular.

Crown braids are very fashionable again, and there are many double braids in crowns; these are liked by short ladies, as they add to their height, especially when made of the light fluffy crimped braids; tall ladies use the heavy smooth braids that lie close to the head. Hair-dressers arrange a crown braid of hair slightly crimped, and finished on each end with a little cluster of five or six short curls that meet low at the back, making a pretty Psyche coiffure. Finger puffs are not much used; they have been arranged in stiff set rows, or else stuck about on the head so negligently and in such impossible places that they have lost their favor. In their stead are knots of hair, or else a bow, or a single long loop; for instance, instead of filling up the crown braid with puffs, the wearer's own hair is tied very high, and brushed forward to form a single long loop that fills us the crown.

Many young ladies continue to wear the thick, clustering Montague locks of crescent shape on the forehead and temples. These are very becoming to oval faces, but they shorten round faces unpleasantly. Long curls at the back and sides are not used; the short Greek cluster of curls for the back and a tuft for the side or center of the crown are more fashionable. There is a fancy for raising the crown braid slightly higher on one side, and just below this is an ornamental knot of hair, or else the spray of flowers, or a feather, or a jeweled ornament is placed here; only a single very small ornament is added to the fancifully dressed hair.

Gray hair is the most expensive hair, now that hair dyes have gone out of fashion. Formerly, dealers were reluctantly compelled to take several ounces of gray hair in every case of imported hair: now they are made to pay more for gray hair than for any other, not excepting the golden blonde or the rare Titian red. The white gray hair—not that with blue tinges—is really a fashionable shade. Silver gray hair, that looks like handsomely-powdered hair, is not considered gray enough. Ladies ask hair-dressers to bleach their natural hair when it is turning gray, but this cannot be done with safety. Oils and pomades are not used on the hair. Frequent shampoonings are advised by the hair-dressers, and a great deal of brushing done by strong, swift strokes to bring out the natural oil of the hair, and thus make it look glossy without looking greased.—Harper's Bazar.

Why?

A certain London journal, Vanity Fair, has been discussing social topics like "Why Men Marry," "Why Women Marry," and so on, and presents some ingenious arguments in support of its theories. It would seem a simple and sufficient answer to say that men and women marry for the same reason that dogs delight, etc.—"for 'tis their nature, too." But Vanity Fair's suggestions are entertaining enough to reprint:

The willingness of women to marry is greater and more potent than that of men; and, we will add, that it is a great deal more wonderful. That women have, to use a colloquial phrase, the worst of it all through life, we entertain no doubt, and that the matrimonial state, as understood by experience, has, as a rule, fewer attractions for them than a man, we also believe to be true. Yet, while there are many men who from choice abstain from marrying, and still more who put off marrying till the last practical moment, we doubt if there are any women worth mentioning who refuse the married state from option and deliberation, and not many who postpone marrying till a late period of life from a general repugnance to having a husband. That women refuse individual men, and sometimes go on refusing man after man, is true enough; but then their objection is to the man and not to the condition of life the man proposes; or, not unfrequently, their refusal arises from mere skittishness, from a feeling that they may do better, or from a cheerful conviction that there is plenty of time to "think about it." As a rule, however, women who have the chance of marrying, marry; and they would marry yet more promptly than they do, were it not that they are frequently put back from taking a foolish step by wise parents or dissuading friends. How is apparent paradox to be explained? There is less to induce women to marry than to induce men; yet men hesitate to marry and women jump at marriage. Some one will answer that men is a rational and woman an irrational animal, but over and above the distinction being too uncomplimentary to be true, it is one of those plausible explanations that explain nothing. Again, it is sometimes affirmed that, in marrying, men sacrifice liberty, whereas women, in marrying, acquire it. But this is an epigram easily disposed of. When men sacrifice what is called their liberty by marrying, they are already tired of their liberty, or that particular form of it which bachelorhood enjoys; and were the point thoroughly examined, we suspect it would be found that they abandon a form of liberty of which they are weary, for another form they have not yet possessed.

Brief Notes.

POLKA dotted neckties are the rage with young ladies.

VASES, with candlesticks attached, are among the handsome goods shown by a New York house.

THE "Langtry Pompadour" is the name of a handsome lace and silk Pompadour for the neck, and is so called for the famous English beauty, Mrs. Langtry, better known as the "Jersey Lily."

SEALSKIN hats for ladies are turned up on the side, to resemble the English walking hat so popular now.

PALE drab or beige colored suits are worn by young ladies as late as the present season, and with fur trimming will be used all winter. These are very stylish when made with an English coat that has a deep round collar and deep cuffs of glossy black beaver fur. Others more celebrated have borders on each skirt of the shaded light fur called 'coonskin.

LADIES wearing mourning that is not considered the deepest wear white linen cuffs and collars at home, and also on the street when plainly dressed; for more dressy occasions they have white crepe lisse colors, or else crimped frills. Gold watch chains are not worn; instead are onyx, jet, or else ribbon guards, or perhaps the black bamboo chains. Crape veils are worn fastened on the back or one side of the bonnet; illusion veils are worn over the face. Instead of white lace cravats there are dressy jabots of crepe lisse, of muslin, or of footing; sometimes white china crape is used for cravats, and there are pretty bows of reversing.—Bazar.

THOSE of us who are growing old will find comfort in the assurance of a Paris correspondent that fashion nowadays favors elderly people. "Women are found to be most charming at fifty and upward, and men most delightful going off from fifty. The fashion of dress and entertainments all tends to this. Golden and silver weddings are made much of; the quilting, fur-lining, hood-wearing, hair-powdering, step-dancing, and the discountenancing of the round-dance, are in the same direction. The rounded form of a woman of fifty is found much finer than the slender shape of one of twenty to thirty. Girlish freshness, simpering and giggling, are voted silly, and young men verdant and shallow. The autumnal tone is the fashion. The veterans are having their day, and young people have to tarry at Jericho until forty years and upward have ripened them."

"Saw-Logging" in Nevada.

A chute is laid from the river's brink up the steep mountain to the railroad, and, while we are telling it, the monster logs are rushing, thundering, flying, leaping down the declivity. They come with the speed of a thunderbolt, and somewhat of its roar. A track of fire and smoke follows them—fire-struck by their friction with the chute logs. They descend the 1,700 feet of chute in fourteen seconds. In doing so they drop 700 feet perpendicularly. They strike the deep water of the pond with a report that can be heard a mile distant. Logs fired from a cannon could scarcely have greater velocity than they have at the foot of the chute. Their average velocity is over 100 feet in a second throughout the entire distance, and at the instant they leap from the mouth their speed must be fully 200 feet per second. A sugar pine log sometimes weighs ten tons What a missile! How the water is dashed into the air! Like a grand plume of diamonds and rainbows, the feathery spray is hurled to the height of 100 feet. It forms the grandest fountain every beheld. How the waters of the pool foam and seethe and lash against the shore! One log, having spent its force by its mad plunge into the deep waters, has floated so as to be at right angles with the path of the descending monsters. The mouth of the chute is perhaps fifteen feet above the surface of the water. A huge log hurled from the chute cleaves the air and alights on the floating log. You know how a bullet glances, but can you imagine a saw log glancing? The end strikes with a heavy shock, but glides quickly past for a short distance, then a crash like the reverberation of artillery, the falling log springs 150 feet vertically into the air, and, with a curve like a rocket falls into the pond seventy yards from the log it struck.—*Truckee (Nev.) Setting the Message.

Years ago, when the writer of this was an apprentice boy with another young codger named Frank Ball, they two being the only hands in the office of the Orleans Republican, there was a president's message came to them to set. It was the production of John Tyler, and as long as the moral law. Having two copies, each took a part, and set out at early dawn to race it for the day, testing which could set the most type by daylight. Starting out on the voyage was like a ship starting out on the trackless ocean, for from the beginning no one in those days could see the end of a president's message. Without stirring, speaking or stopping, the two boys laid themselves out to the work. With brains fairly reeling as darkness came, they stopped to measure up. They were astonished at the work they had accomplished, but were more astonished when, comparing notes, they found that each had been setting precisely the same part of the message! Poor Ball died a few years after, and the survivor has had little taste for setting on president's message since.—Elmira (N. Y.) Advertiser.

Beaconsfield as a Dramatic Mourner.

Lord Beaconsfield's appearance in Parliament after the reception of the news of Princess Alice's death is somewhat sarcastically described by a Manchester correspondent. He was perfectly made up in the deepest of mourning, which could not have been deeper had the Princess Alice been his own daughter instead of the queen's. He had on, as far as one could judge, a new black hat with the deepest of cloth. His scarf was black; his coat, vest and trousers were of the sablest hue; and altogether a more funeral figure could hardly be imagined than he presented as he walked to his seat with bowed head and soft tread, as if he were in the chamber of death itself. This was very much overacted, and so, for that matter, was the speech in which he moved the address He overdid the emotion. He presented in voice and manner the picture of a grief which, in the nature of things, it was impossible to feel.

DANGERS OF CHEMISTRY.

Terrible Possibilities of Combinations of Harmless Chemical Ingredients—The Power over Nature and Human Life which Chemistry Gives.

A most unfortunate accident which has occurred at Prague recalls, in many of its details and circumstances, the quaint traditions that were once prevalent in regard to the medieval alchemists. Professor Fischer, of the Prague Gymnasium, a young man only twenty-five years of age, and of the highest eminence in his profession—that of chemistry—has come to an untimely end under the most melancholy circumstances. No one needs to be told that cyanide of potassium, a drug largely used in photography, is a poison of the most deadly character. Its active ingredient is prussic acid. Prussic acid in its pure, or, as chemists would term it, "anhydrous form," is a substance too dangerous to be kept, or even manufactured. If a glass capsule containing a wine-glassful of pure prussic acid were broken in the pit of a theatre, those amongst the audience who were nearest the doors might escape, but the great majority would be killed on the spot. The prussic acid ordinarily sold, and occasionally used for killing dogs and cats, contains about a drop of pure prussic acid to a quarter of a pint of water. Pure prussic acid no chemist dare keep. He might as well compress a ton of dynamite into a single cartridge, supposing such package to be possible, and then leave the deadly parcel lying loose on the table.

Cyanide of Potassium is not, like prussic acid, volatile. It is a white powder, rather resembling flour or chalk. It is, however, so poisonous that a mere pinch of it, sprinkled over an open wound or sore, will cause almost instantaneous death, that a fragment almost imperceptible to the eye will, if swallowed, prove equally fatal; and that its mere smell has before now produced immediate death. It was, it seems, the ambition of Professor Fischer to discover some means of rendering cyanide of potassium harmless. We can do this with gunpowder—although the analogy is not strictly exact—the means employed with gunpowder being mechanical, while those for which Professor Fischer sought were chemical. We know what happens if a light is applied to a keg of gunpowder. If, however, we mix the powder with four or five times its bulk of sawdust, a torch may be applied to it with impunity. The mechanical resistance of the sawdust makes it impossible for the explosion to at once spread to the whole mass, and the consequence is that a sort of sputter ensues, like that of a squib or blue light. Professor Fischer's idea was that, if cyanide of potassium were thoroughly mixed with sal ammoniac, it would be as harmless as gunpowder mixed with sawdust, but would still remain equally available for all those purposes of photography, for which it is at present absolutely indispensable.

In the course of his researches Mr. Fischer made a mixture, of which in his own mind he felt assured that it would meet the conditions of his problem. He compounded the cyanide with some other substance, and then, turning to his laboratory assistant, said:

"Science has now so far advanced as to be even able to render harmless so dangerous an agent as cyanide of potassium."

With these words he tested the mixture, and was almost in an instant seized with the most violent and excruciating agonies. He at once implored his assistant to send for medical aid. Cyanogen, however, whether as prussic acid or cyanide of pottassium, kills almost instantaneously. In a few seconds Professor Fischer was beyond help. We are told that there is no possible reason to suppose that a deliberate suicide had been planned and carried out under a mask of experiment. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe that the professor has met the fate which befell only too many of the early chemists and their predecessors the alchemists.

We know not what will happen to any experimentalist if he only dips blotting-paper in nitric acid, washes it, dries it, and then incautiously treads upon it. What happened to the man who is believed—for his record perished with him—to have first discovered fulminates of silver is a matter of scientific record. That he was engaged in researches upon the fulminates, and more especially upon the fulminates of the higher metals, was well known. How it precisely came about that he disappeared as he did will remain a matter of conjecture. There came one day a puff, a slight shock and a smart noise as if some one inflated a paper bag and then burst it between his hands. Of the professor himself, of his laboratory, of his apparatus, and of much less within a radius of some yards, not a vestige or trace was left.

So it used to be with the alchemists. The heritors of the hidden wisdom of Bohne and Roger Bacon and Albertus Magnus. They were always blowing themselves up, or asphyxiating themselves with some noxious vapor. For a man who knows nothing or next to nothing, of chemistry, it is a very dangerous game indeed to mix together a couple of substances of which he knows nothing, and then burn them in a mortar. Common sulphur is harmless stuff enough, so is charcoal, so is nitre; but let an ignorant man mix the three and apply a light to them, and the result will much astonish him.

When of old an alchemist was reduced to fragments in this fashion our ancestors had an easy explanation. He was a magician, they used to say, and the devil had come suddenly and had carried him off. There was a time, between the days of Roger Bacon and those of Davy, Black and Cavendish, when the foul fiend was thus always carrying off alchemists. We know not how it happened. If a man goes into a chemical laboratory and takes up a big beaker and pours into it the contents of the first two bottles that are ready at his hand, the probabilities that he will be reduced to atoms on the spot are sufficiently serious to call for his careful consideration.

Apart from the fact that a young man with a bright and brilliant future before him should be thus suddenly cut off, the death of Prof. Fischer has another moral. Chemistry—whatever Mr. Lowe may have to say in praise of civil engineering—is the science of the world and of the future. The bridge which takes the engineer years upon years to construct, the chemist can, in so many sixtieths of a second, reduce to atoms.

Chemistry has given us the balloon; it has put in our hands gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite and, above all fulminate of gold, an explosive so terrible that if an ounce of it be left in in a stoppered bottle, its grains falling among themselves by their own weight will create a convulsion sufficient to lay all London in ruins. It has given us poisons so subtle that, were we to employ such means of warfare, we could sail in a balloon over the camp of the enemy and drop upon it a shell, the bursting of which would kill every human being within a mile of its range.

Then, too, chemistry has given us disinfectants. To the chemists we owe corbolic acid, chloride of lime and permanganate of potash. Chemists have taught us to disinfect our sewers and drains, to ventilate our houses, to burn gas instead of oil, and to light our streets with what is more powerful than gas itsel—the electric light. It is to chemistry, indeed, that we owe almost all the comforts of every-day life.

But on the other hand, the possibilities of chemistry are almost too terrible to be contemplated. As the science at present stands, any student can, if he have access to a well-stored laboratory, carry away in a pill box, matter sufficient to lay London in ruins, or to poison tho whole community of its inhabitants. The chemist can, as every schoolboy knows convert water into ice in the centre of a red-hot crucible. He can construct a shell the size of a cricket-ball, which will explode the moment it touches the water and overwhelm in flames a hostile fleet. Indeed, the chemist reduces the world to its original and primal elements. For him even more than the engineer, nothing is impossible. And yet his power, vast as it is, is limited. He can more easily destroy than construct. He can take life, but he cannot give it. He can level the city with a plan, but he cannot build it again. He can create prussic acid, but he is ignorant of its antidote. He is like the fisherman who rashly opened the vessel sealed with the ring of Suleiman Ben Daud. The forces of his control are beyond his command, the powers he can evoke he cannot lay. It is the old story of Cornelius Agrippa—those who trifle with nature's secrets do so at their peril.—London Observer.

Proposed to His Grandmother.

Col. Thornton, of the East India service, tells thus the romance of his youth:

"One clear starlight evening in June, Helen and I were walking on the terrace among flower-beds that were cut in the soft, green turf. Inspired by the stillness and odorous influence of the air, I told her my heart's secret, with all its hopes and fears.

She looked up at me wonderingly, and tears glistened in her beautiful eyes as she said:

"'Ah, Capt. Thornton, are you sure? Do you—do you love me? It cannot be. No, never.'

"'Why,' I cried, impetuously pressing my suit and her, 'you love another?'

"'Sir,' she said, almost sharply, do you know who I am?'

"'The loveliest girl in England.'

"'No, sir, I am not; great heavens, Capt. Thornton, I am your grandmother,'

"My grandmother! Talk of sudden shocks after that, won't you? I tried to speak, but my voice failed me. I reached out my hand and touched her. Yes, she was there, real enough, and I was not dreaming.

"Tell me all!" I gasped.

"And standing there, by the broad stone coping, she told me all. How her parents had died when she was little more than an infant, and Sir John, her guardian and my grandfather, had watched over her with jealous care, always keeping her at school, however, until he brought her home—a young lady.

"Then, while I was in India, the poor old man fell suddenly ill, and on his dying bed persuaded his young ward to marry him, just in order to inherit his vast estate, which she had refused to take as a legacy.

"'And, believe me,' said Miss Helen, 'I did it only to keep it for you, the rightful heir, whose wildness had temporarily provoked the old gentleman.'"—Washington Capital.

President Taylor.

President Taylor was probably the only president to whom the presidency was an uncoveted and unsought for boon. Mrs. Taylor was so averse to public life that it was said she prayed every night during his candidacy for his defeat, and when told of his election said: "Why could they not let us alone? We are so happy here. Why do they want to drag us to Washington?" Who that ever saw General Taylor at a levee could forget him? He grasped every new comer cordially by the hand and saluted all, high and low, old maids, brides, young girls—all with the words: "Glad to see you. Glad to see you. How's your family? Hope the children all all well?" His greeting was almost equal to Rip's toast: "Heres to you and your family. May you live long and prosper." He hardly ever opened his mouth without making a mistake, and people laughed heartily. Still they loved him, trusted his judgment and knew his heart and hand were true as steel, and when he died the whole nation was a mourner at his grave. When Mayor D. returned from Europe he introduced him at a dinner party as "My friend, D., just from Berlin, Austria." During his candidacy Colonel W., state elector of ——, after discussing several public topics, asked him what were his views on the tariff. "The what, Jack," said General Tylor, who stuttered fearfully. "The tariff, general," said Colonel W. "Why, what's that?" "Its a sine qua non," said Colonel W., who was one of the greatest wags that ever lived, "that the people are much excited about now." "A sine qua non," said General Taylor slowly. "I believe, Jack, I saw one in Mexico, but I forget what it looked like, and I'll be blamed if I have any views on the tariff."—Wash. Letter to N. Y. Herald.

LAST DAYS.

BY ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

The long brown beach lies sleeping in the sun,
The hot, white noon leans lightly to the sky,
Cloud upon folded cloud, above my head,
Opens the blossoms of the perfect day.

There is a color like the living soul
Upon the half-revealed but half-veiled sky;
Glad to glad eyes, reclines the flushed, full tide,
Celestial body that shall never die.

My prayers look out like orphans through this tears;
My heart cries out, Oh, life! Oh, life! for thee.
But One across the water draweth nigh,
Too kind and so too dumb to answer me.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

NOTICE is hereby given that by virtue of an order of the Circuit Court of DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, the undersigned administrator of the estate of Enos Weaver, deceased, will offer for sale at auction on the premises, on the following real estate:

SATURDAY the 1st day of FEBRUARY, 1879,

Town lots number eighty-five [85] and one hundred and forty eight (148), in the original plat of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana. Also the north half of the north east quarter of section thirty [30], in township thirty-four [34], north, of range thirteen [13] east, in DeKalb county, Indiana; except a piece out of said tract of land heretofore set off to the widow of said decedent and bounded as follows: Commencing at the south-east corner of said tract of land and running thence west one hundred and twenty one and two fifths [121 2-5] rods, thence north twenty [20] rods, thence east to the east boundary line of said tract, thence south to the place of beginning, said piece excepted, containing fifteen and two-fifths [15 2-5] acres.

TERMS OF SALE One-third cash, the residue in equal payments at twelve and eighteen months, with notes at interest, waiving benefit of appraisement laws, and secured by mortgage on said premises.
1-4w WILLIAM LESSIG, Adm'r.

Agricultural Notes.

—Keep your tools sharp.

—Every farm should own a good farmer.

—Paint with crude petroleum your implements.

—Get rid of the runts. It does not pay to keep an inferior animal.

—Are the farm implements all under cover, well cleaned and oiled?

—Don't attempt to fatten hogs in cold weather. It will prove expensive.

—Collect fertilizing material upon every possible occasion. There can never be too much of it.

—Twenty-five gallons of water to twelve and a half gallons of sulphuric acid will dissolve bones.

—Neatness and cleanliness pay in farming—cost but little in time—pay is big in hard money.

—Any repairs to house, stable, or smaller outbuildings, can now be conveniently attended to. A good coat of paint is economical, but whitewash is infinitely better than nothing.

—Keep your stables clean. Scatter plaster over the floors—it helps the cattle and benefits the manure.

—Treat farm hands kindly. If they do honest work they should be commended and receive honest pay.

—Sheep fatten quicker when loose, in pens of half a dozen, than by any method of stalling or tying up each sheep.

—Discontinue the practice of breeding from scrub males. A thoroughbred increases value more than 50 per cent.

—Stock of all kinds need water in winter as well as in summer. The supply should be ample and the quality excellent.

—Pick up the odds and ends that are going to waste around you. Hides, horns, hoofs, bones, wax, moss and many other trifles have a cash value.

—President Hoffman says the milking machine is a miserable cheat and an unmitigated humbug. It shrinks the amount of milk and causes it to be lumpy and bloody.

Two quarts of wheat bran, one quart of corn meal; mix with tepid water, adding a teaspoonful of salt. Feed this to milch cows twice a day, and for results look in the milk pan the next day.

—Parsnips contain about twice as much dry matter or real food as turnips and this of a superior quality. Carrots, again, contain about as much dry substance as mangolds, but are richer in sugar and of better feeding quality.

—Do not attempt to take too many fowls together. One hundred in a single yard will not produce half the eggs they will if divided into four parts It will cost no more for feed, but it will be a little more trouble to attend to them.

—Sheep growers in England claim that a feed of cotton seed and turnips is not only the safest for fattening sheep, but will put on the most fat and make the best mutton at the least cost. It also produces the strongest manure.

—Don't mortgage the family home, no matter how promising the future may appear. There are too many slips "between the cup and the lip" to risk. Go hungry, even, before the power is given any one to turn your out of doors.

—Feed your land with the utmost liberality if you wish it to return the compliment. You cannot cheat nature, though you may succeed in obtaining small crops for a year or two without making a return thereof. It will not pay to attempt it.

—The manure made from a ton of cornmeal is estimated as worth $6.65 and as the meal is now worth only $20 per ton, the value for feeding would be reduced to $13.35 per ton, at which price it would almost pay to feed to hogs, even at the very low price of pork.

—The manure from a ton of clover hay is estimated to be worth $9.60, or about as much as the hay is worth in many places. It should be well understood that clover hay ought to be fed on the farm and never sold; if any hay is to be sold let it be the English meadow, the manure from which is worth only about half as much.

Serious Thoughts.

There is no funeral so sad to follow as the funeral of your own youth, which we have been pampering with fond desires and ambitious hopes, and all the bright berries that hang in poisonous clusters over the path of life.

Here are some exaggerated expressions: "I am tired to death!" So you have said very often, yet you are still alive and well. "I had not a wink of sleep all night!" Yet your bedfellow heard you snore many times. "I would not do it for the world!" And yet you have done many things equally bad for a penny. "We were up to our knees in mud!" You know very well that the dirt was not over your shoes.

Clean hands in matters of money among the young certainly ought to be the indispensable condition of gentlemanliness. No man who borrows and does not pay, and does not care whether he pays or not, is a gentleman, no matter how witty, or gay, or fine he may be. To speak in good plain English, the man who dresses himself at another's expense, not knowing how to pay, nor caring whether he pays, is a genteel scoundrel. And yet such things are done by good natured folk, by kind-harted people, by persons who never probe them morrally to acertain what their tendency is, and what they lead to.

Nothing makes a man so in love with purity as purity Many a man has been lifted out of debasing sins against which he has vainly struggled by coming to know and love a pure, sweet woman. It is the sight of embodiment goodness that makes us want to be good. Many a mother, by the quiet usefulness of her life, fills her children with a desire to be like her, that makes them in their turn unselfish. There are obscure men and women who hardly in their lives utter a word of conscious teaching, who by their example do more to make people around them gentle, and truthful and Christ-like than any preacher can do. It is not those who talk about goodness, but those who are good that are the light of the world.

If you really want to be liked, keep your egotism in the background. You can think as much of yourself as you like, and be just as vain as you please, but do not allow the fact to peep. If you are really anything or anybody people will find it out in time. Sounding your own praises will scarcely help you much.

Oliver Twist who had some very Hard Times in the Battle of Life, and having been saved from The Wreck of the Golden Mary by Our Mutual Friend, Nicholas Nickelby, had just finished reading A Tale of Two Cities to Martin Chuzzlewit, during which time The Cricket on the Hearth had been chirping merrily while The Chimes from an adjacent church were heard when Seven Poor Travelers from Mugby Junction commenced singing A Christmas Carol; Barnaby Rudge then arrived from The Old Curiosity Shop with some Pictures From Italy, and Sketches by Boz, to show to Little Dorrit, who was busy with the Pickwick Papers, when David Copperfield, who had been taking American Notes, entered and informed the comany that the Great Expectations of Dombey & Son regarding Mrs. Lirripur's Legacy had not been realized; and that he had seen Boots at the Inn taking Somebody's Luggage to Mrs. Lirripur's Lodgings in a street that had No Thoroughfare, opposite Bleak House; where the Haunted Man, who had just given one of Doctor Marigold's Prescriptions to an Uncommercial Traveler, was brooding over the Mystery of Edwin Drood.

Look on the Bright Side.

And yet how fortunate it is that we do not and cannot take to heart the sorrow and evil of the world, but can find the air sweet, the skies benignant, and the green earth beautiful, and can find pleasure in the speech of friendship and the eyes of beauty, the prattle of children and the high thoughts of poets and philosophers—despite our consciousness that crime revels, and, more painful still, that want pinches and poisons, it may be, scarce a stone's throw off. If this were not so, the hope that the world will ever be better would be vain. It is in natural happiness that does bless homes and workshops and the fields, that the opportunity and the disposition spring from the correction of wrongs and the elevation of life. The social reformer who begins with the desperate assurance that everything is going to the devil, will never rise himself or raise his followers to anything clearer than detruction and disorder. John Swinton in the slums and "blasting" every body and everything out of them, is not so potent a friend of labor as Emmerson casting "The Fortune of the Republic." The progress of freedom must follow the thinker's light, not the communist's darkness.

Good and Evil in the World.

There is good in the world, and there is evil. There is sunshine warming the earth into life, and ripening its kindly fruits; and there are torrid heats and blasting draughts, when "the earth lies parched, and the cattle die, and there is destruction and pestilence issuing as from the sun itself." There are genial showers and fructifying rains, that cause the trees to clap their hands, and the valleys to shout for joy; and there are torrents that uproot the forests, and lay waste the fields; floods that sweep away the harvest and desolate the homes of men; lightning, and hail, and tempest, that in one brief moment destry the work of years, and devour flocks and herds, and families. There is the joy of birth and the gloom and aching sorrow of death. There is the gush of gladsome life, the hum of insects, the song of birds, the mirth and music of unfettered hearts and there is pain and moaning in the chambers of disease—in the hovel of want, and there are stifled sobs around the closing coffin, and there are new-made graves wet with scalding tears. The stars sing out their perpetual rhythm of peace and joy; and the winds wail and howl as they scatter the leaves of summer, and bring up the clouds and chill of winter. And not the seasons only but the days as well mark this alternation. Is there not the night also? How weak, and in the hands of what unknown powers, does man feel himself to be, when, deprived of light, he looks or strives to look out into an infinite darkness. The night is around him, and death before him.—Thorndale.

A Merry Heart.

I'd rather be poor and merry than inherit the wealth of the Indies with a discontented spirit. A merry heart, a cheerful spirit, from which laughter wells up as naturally as bubble the springs of Saratoga, are worth all the money bags, stocks and mortgages of the city. The man who laughs is a doctor, with a diploma endorsed by the school of Nature; his face does more good in a sick room than a pound of powders or a gallon of bitter draughts. If things go right he laughs, because he is pleased; if they go wrong, he laughs because it is cheaper and better than crying. People are always glad to see him, their hands instinctively go half way to meet his grasp, while they turn involuntarily from the clammy touch of the dyspeptic, who speaks on the groaning key. He laughs you out of your faults, while you never dream of being offended with him; it seems as if sunshine came into the room with him, and you never knew what a pleasant world you are living in until he points out the sunny streaks on its pathway

Who can help loving the whole-souled, genial laugher? Not the buffoon, nor man who classes noise with mirth—but the cheery, contented man of sense and mind! A goodhumored laugh is the key to all breasts. The truth is that people like to be laughed at in a genial sort of way. If you are making yourself ridiculous, you want to be told of it in a pleasant manner, not sneered at. And it is astonishing how frankly the laughing population can talk without treading on the sensitive toes of their neighbors. Why will the people put on long faces, when it is so much easier and more comfortable to laugh? Tears come to us unsought and unbidden. The wisest art in life is to cultivate smiles, and to find the flowers where others shrink away for fear of thorns.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

What a Mule Can Do.

(Louisville Courier-Journal.)

This mule looked like he was 138 years old, and was dead standing upon his feet. He was hitched to a pine-bodied spring-wagon, with a high dash-board. The "team" was standing on the levee in mute silence, while the old darkey who "driv" it went aboard the wharf-boat. A tramp could make a barrel of money selling pictures of that mule, labelled "Patience." His long, flabby ears hung down each side of his head like window awnings with the rods out of them. His face wore a sober look, while out of his mouth hung a tongue eight inches long. His tail swung down from the rear end of his hurricane roof like a wet rope; while his whole body seemed as motionless as death itself. Presently a red-headed urchin, with an old boot in his hand, walked up in front of him, and looking into his face, saw that the mule was asleep. He walked around, climbed up into that wagon, leaned over the dash-board, lifted that mule's tail, and let it come down in time to snatch a death-grip on that boot leg. That mule woke up so quick that he kicked the boy and the dash-board twenty feet into the air. He didn't stop there. He changed the position of his ears, hauled in his tongue, planted his fore feet and his head between his knees, and from the fore shoulders to the tip of his trunk was in lively motion, and he didn't look like he was more than two years old, the way he was kicking that old wagon body into kindling wood with his heels He had it all to himself, and was doing fine, when the old darkey rushed up the hill, got in front of him and grabbing him by each ear, shouted. "Whoa! I tell you. Wat's de matter wid you? Whoa-up!" and looking around at the crowd, yelled, "Will some o' yer gemmen git dat er boot leg out wile I hold him? kase de waggin's mine an' I jes borrowed de mule" But no one ventured, and when we left his heels had almost reached the tail gate, and the old darkey was still yelling "Whoa!"

A Dog as a Newspaper Carrier.

[Poughkeepsie Eagle.]

Every day, on the arrival of Conductor Elmore's train from Hartford, over the Connecticut Western Railroad at Lakeville, a small dog can be seen on the platform, who immediately runs up to Mr. Elmore, keeping up a furious barking until the official hands out to him a Hartford paper, which the brute takes in his mouth, and, after wagging his tail a number of times, asmuch as to say "thank you," starts of with it to the residence of his master.

A Warning to Girls Who Chew Gum.

[St. Louis News.]

Late last Saturday evening an incident occurred on Portland avenue that may serve as a warning to hundreds of young persons who have entered upon a career of wax-chewing. A girl named Lyda Smith had been a chewer for nearly a year. She is about eleven years old, rather bright and intelligent, and chewed about the same quantity of the material that was used by neighboring girls along the avenue. On Saturday evening she took her wax from her mouth, stuck it under the edge of the mantle until she could go to the kitchen to get a swallow of water, and on her returning her parents were horrified to see her jaws moving rapidly. She was told to throw the wax from her mouth, and on investigation it was found that she was not chewing anything; still her jaws kept moving at a rapid rate. The parents sent for a physician, who came and attempted to hold the jaws in proper position, believing it to be only temporary, but he could not stop the regular movement. The child grew nervous, and the excitement only increased the action of her jaws. The physician put a tight bandage over her face, and this partially relieved the movement, but then the twitchings of the muscles extended all over the face. As a last resort a moderate dose of morphine was administered, and the little girl kept up incoherent mutterings, accompanied by a general disturbance of the muscles of the upper portion of the body during the early portion of the night, and toward morning the little sufferer was restored to her normal condition. The physician says he never heard of such a case before, and he thinks it was brought about by a spasmodic action of the muscles of the face, caused by overaction. The little girl, after enduring a night of suffering, is now restored, but nothing in the world could induce her to again chew wax.

We would call the attention of our state legislators to a most unjust and oppressive feature of our local jurisprudence, and which seems to be peculiar to our state, since most if not all of our neighboring states have provided a remedy for the evil by appropriate statutes. The evil in question is the permitting of irresponsible persons to institute actions in our courts to their own sweet will, against any one whom they might be disposed to annoy by involving them in litigation at once troublesome, and expensive, without themselves being made responsible in any way through the giving of security for the payment of costs in the action in case judgment should go against them. Nothing is easier, in fact, under our practice than for any impecunious vagabond to subject some reputable citizen, whom he might be disposed to annoy, to all the trouble and expense of a suit at law upon some fictitious claim or trumped up cause of action, which, even though judgment go against the plaintiff, proves a heavy expense to the innocent victim of the malice of an irresponsible scoundrel. In our neighboring state of Michigan the defendent in any suit at law can by motion in open court compel the plaintiff to give security for payment of the costs of the action including an attorney fee for the defendant, in case the suit fail. This feature of Michigan law seems to us eminently just and proper. Of course some suits might be brought which would be founded upon rights of worthy but poor persons. In such case the right accorded under the statute of sueing in forma pauperis, or as a poor person, under certain restrictions, would secure all just rights of the plaintiff—while protecting the defendent—as is done in Ohio and some other states. It is not right for persons in good standing in the community to be placed at the mercy of any maliciously inclined dead beat who might be disposed to annoy them by litigation based upon no just claim, and it seems to us that such a law as we have suggested would be but a fair protection for our citizens.—South Bend Herald.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

There are people, mostly young and gushing, who look upon newspaper life as about the pleasantest thing going—something that makes one feel good all the time excepting when the compositors and paper men have to be confronted, and cash comes in with cunctation rather than with celerity. Let such read the following tabular statement, setting forth with bold accuracy the experience of an able journalist of Texas, and determine whether that man had many leisure hours that he could give to the "cultivation" of poesy or the higher branches of art:

Solomon was a great experimenter on human life. He tried all ways of it. He tried what wealth, what wisdom, what mirth and music, building of houses, planting of vineyards, making of orchards and gardens, could do to make a man happy and keep him so. And he conducted each experiment of this kind upon the largest scale, and carried it to its furthest issue. His position gave him full command of all the means and instruments of human enjoyment, and he exercised that command without limitation or restraint. Whatsoever his eyes desired he kept it not from them: he withheld not his heart from any kind of joy. We are not to imagine that he did all this at the prompting of any higher motive, or for any religious end. He did it as multitudes in lesser spheres and to a more limited extent are doing it—to gratify the devices and desires of his own heart. But he was all the while, though unconsciously, fulfilling a high and benevolent purpose of the Supreme, and when afterwards he was brought to the love and service of God, he was directed to put on record, for the guidance and warning of all after generations, a history of earlier experience. It is in this light, regarding them as written for this purpose that the opening chapters of the Book of Ecclesiastes are to be read by us.

THE INDIANA STATE SENTINEL FOR 1879 HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO One Dollar Per Year.

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepared with special reference to the character of its circulation. And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana:

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

Portable Mulay Saw Mill,

With improvements recently made is unequaled as a neighborhood mill. It can be run by either steam or water power, and is especially adapted to the engines used for threshing.

It may be operated by either two or three men, and will cut as much lumber in proportion to the power and number of hands employed as mills of larger capacity.

It makes smooth and even lumber, leaves no stub-shot and will cut any sized log up to four feet in diameter. It may be removed from one locality to another and re-erected ready to run in from two to three days, and can be made profitable in localities where there is not sufficient timber to justify the erection of a permanent mill. WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

IN July last Benjamin Hunter was convicted of the murder of John M. Armstrong, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Philadelphia. It appeared that the deed was done by an employe of Hunter, named Graham, who was paid by the villain liberally to dog the steps of Armstrong and put him out of the way, the motive being a large policy of insurance in which Hunter was the beneficiary. On the 10th of this month the murderer paid the penalty of his awful crime by expiating his life on the gallows at Camden, N. J. The miserable man had attempted suicide by refusing to eat, but was kept alive by injections. He was completely prostrated and unable to walk, and had to be carried to the gallows. Four men held him up while the Sheriff placed the rope around his neck. A sickening scene then followed. The rope was too long, the culprit fell back and was caught in the arms of the Sheriff's assistants. The Sheriff then seized the rope and hoisted Hunter into the air, and he was thus hanged, a number of persons holding the rope and keeping him suspended in the air. He died slowly by strangulation, but apparently without pain. It is described as one of the most sickening scenes ever witnessed at an execution.

AN English woman, Mrs. Anderson, has just completed, at New York, a great task in pedestrianism, that of walking 2,700 quarter miles in 2,700 consecutive quarter hours. She was greatly exhausted at the end of the walk, but this was atoned for by a pocketful of greenbacks, the public paying liberally for a sight of the great woman walker.

TWO MORE Mollie Maguires, Charles Sharpe and James McDonnell, have just been hanged at Mauch Chunk, Pa., for a murder committed more than fifteen years ago, the victim being a mine owner. Both protested their innocence to the last. The Governor respited the doomed men, but the reprieve arrived just half a minute too late.

ONE of the finest business blocks on Broadway, New York, has been destroyed by fire. It was crammed from top to bottom with fancy goods and clothing, the occupants being Edwin Bates & Co., Naumberg, Kraus & Co., and Howard & Lauer. Several firemen were injured, one of them fatally, by falling walls. The total loss is estimated at $1,750,000.

ANOTHER Molly Maguire was hanged at Pottsville, Pa., on the 16th inst., making nineteen who have suffered the death penalty in that State. The last victim was Martin Bergin, who murdered Patrick Burns, a coal-mine clerk, in 1870.

THE WEST.

A FIRE in Cincinnati last week destroyed $140,000 worth of property on Main street.

THE reader has probably not forgotten the sensation created last summer by the revelation of the extraordinary crime of Troy Dye, of Sacramento, Cal. He was Public Administrator, and, the business of his office growing slack, he hit upon a scheme to increase it, and thereby put money in his purse. This plan was nothing less than to make away with some of the wealthy citizens of the county. The first victim of the diabolical wretch was one A. M. Tullis, a rich farmer. Detection speedily followed, and Dye was arrested. He has just been tried and found guilty of murder in the first degree....Marcus Kronberg, an old well-known Chicago jeweler, has failed for $200,000. ....A long-distance race between a horse and a professional pedestrian, in Chicago, resulted in a victory for the equine animal, which made the extraordinary time of 201 miles in 52 hours, the man meantime scoring 149 miles. The horse was on the track 27½ hours; average rate per mile, 8 minutes and 21 seconds....News comes from the far West that emissaries from Sitting Bull's camp have reached Cheyenne River Agency, who report that the hostiles, at a grand council, had decided to come in and submit to the agency rules, provided they are guaranteed protection by the Government.

A MILITARY court—consisting of Col. John N. King, Ninth Infantry; Col. Wesley Merritt, Fifth Cavalry, and Lieut. Col. W. B. Royal, Third Cavalry—met at the Palmer House, Chicago, last week, for the purpose of investigating the charges against Maj. Reno in connection with the Custer massacre.

THE Giant Powder works of Bandman, Nielson & Co., near San Francisco, Cal., exploded a few days ago, killing four white men and one Chinaman, wounding a number of others, and completely demolishing the works.

THE massacre of thirty or forty Cheyenne Indians at Fort Robinson, the recapture of fifty others, and the flight to the foot-hills of the remainder of the band, has been heretofore recorded in these columns. Those who were plucky enough to escape the bullets and sabers of the relentless soldiery took refuge in the bed of Indian creek, and strongly fortified themselves by throwing up breastworks. Here they were besieged for two days and nights, but on the third night they silently stole away, and their pursuers, decidedly crestfallen at the discovery that they had been outgeneraled by the dusky warriors, as silently stole back to Fort Robinson. The casualties during this campaign were five soldiers killed and eight wounded; thirty-two Indians killed and about a dozen wounded.

A FIRE at Atchison, Kan., last week, burned the round-house and machine-shops of the Atchison and Nebraska railroad. The loss is estimated at $100,000....S. D. Richards, the diabolical Nebraska murderer, has been tried, found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged on the 26th of April.

THE SOUTH.

THE heaviest snow-storm for twenty years has just visited Southwestern Kentucky. It fell to the depth of sixteen inches and drifted badly, delaying the railroad trains.

PROF. HENRY DIERK, attempting a balloon ascension at Jonesboro, Craighead county, Ark., fell from a trapeze a distance of 1,000 feet and was instantly killed.

ORDER reigns in Breathitt county, Ky., once more, and eighteen of the outlaws who were engaged in the recent emeute have been indicted for murder.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., and vicinity, experienced a severe earthquake the other day. Buildings were violently shaken, crockery rattled and doors thrown open.

WASHINGTON.

A DELEGATION of representative men from the civilized tribes of the Indian Territory called upon the President, last week, and had an interchange of views. The Indian chiefs made brief speeches, stating that their people were in a prosperous condition, and were opposed to the transfer of the Indians to the War Department.

A SUB-COMMITTEE of the House Judiciary Committee, consisting of Messrs. Knott, Lynde and Frye, has been sent to Chicago to investigate the charges against United States District Judge Blodgett....The Potter Committee has decided to go into an investigation of the cipher dispatches....Death has again invaded the halls of Congress, the victim this time being Hon. Gustavus Schleicher, of Texas, one of the ablest and most useful members from the South. His disease was pneumonia, which has been alarmingly prevalent at Washington this winter.

THE report of the Department of Agriculture for December says the corn crop of 1878 is 30,000,000 bushels in excess of 1878. Oats a somewhat larger crop than the heavy yield of 1877, constituting it the largest ever raised in this country. No material change in barley. Rye one-sixth larger than in 1877. Potatoes fall off 40,000,000 bushels. The cultivation of sorghum is receiving increased attention, and the results of the year's culture are satisfactory.

IT is reported that Justice Hunt, who recently received a bad stroke of paralysis, will shortly resign his seat on the Supreme bench, to be succeeded by Attorney General Devens, who in turn will be succeeded by Stanley Matthews.

CONFIRMATIONS by the Senate: Roger S. Green, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory; John P. Hoyt, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory; George Hand, Secretary of Dakota Territory; Lewis E. Payne, of Virginia, United States Attorney of Wyoming Territory.

POLITICAL.

A TELEGRAM from Washington to the Chicago Tribune states that "the Nationals in the next Congress propose to make the most that is possible out of their position. A call has been issued from the headquarters of the National party for a meeting of Greenback Congressmen elect for Feb. 22. Most of the gentlemen have responded. The subjects agreed upon to be discussed are the Eight-Hour law, the Speakership and specific greenback measures. The Nationals declare that they do not propose to go into the caucus of either party and will have their own caucus, but will have Democratic proclivities if sufficient inducements are made them by Democratic leaders."....Prof. Nathaniel P. Hill has been chosen by the Colorado Legislature to succeed Mr. Chaffee in the United States Senate from that State.

HON. JOHN P. JONES has been re-elected to the United States Senate from Nevada.

THE Democratic Senators held a caucus at Washington, the other day, to consider their course on the resolutions recently submitted by Mr. Edmunds, declaring that the last three constitutional amendments have been duly ratified; that the laws already enacted for their enforcement should be faithfully executed, and that Congress should further provide for their enforcement by additional legislation. After some discussion, the subject was referred to a committee of seven, headed by Judge Thurman, to report to a future caucus.

THE Democrats of the North Carolina Legislature, on the 15th inst., nominated Gov. Zebulon B. Vance as the successor of Mr. Merrimon in the United States Senate, which is equivalent to an election.

THE Democratic members of the Missouri Legislature met in caucus, Jan. 15, and nominated Gen. James Shields for the short Senatorial term, and George G. Vest for the long term.

THE Republicans of the Indiana Legislature met in joint caucus on the 16th inst., and nominated Godlove S. Orth for the short term, as United States Senator, and Gen. Ben Harrison for the long term.

GENERAL.

THE first vessel of Vanderbilt's new steamship line sailed from New York for Havre last week, with a cargo of grain and provisions direct from the West....Dun, Barlow & Co. report that the failures in the United States and Canada last year reached the unprecedented figure of 10,478, or 16 per cent. more than in 1877. The liabilities were $234,383,132, or about 19 per cent. more than the previous year....The death of two centenarians is announced—Mrs. Elizabeth Reutter, of Baltimore, aged 113, and Mrs. Lucy Nichols, of New Haven, aged 101.

FOREIGN.

IT is announced from Rome that Pope Leo has written an encyclical letter, in which he arrays the power of the Roman Catholic Church against Socialism, Communism, and Internationalism, and calls upon the Bishops to combat these dangerous doctrines....Advices from the Indian frontier report that the British troops had attacked a large force of the hill tribes in Afghanistan, and were completely victorious. It is significantly added that the victory is expected to have a great moral effect.... Gen. Grant bid adieu to Ireland on the 10th of January, and journeyed direct to London.

THE British continue to press their way forward into Afghanistan. The Viceroy of India telegraphs that Candahar has been occupied, the chief officials fleeing toward Herat....Bismark has prepared a bill for the punishment of members of the Reichstag who use "unbecoming expressions," and expects that body to pass it. The bill abolishes freedom of debate and allows the majority to silence or exclude any member, deprive him of the right to re-election, and turn him over to the courts for further punishment. The immediate object of the bill appears to be to suppress Socialistic speeches; but practically it may be used to exterminate any minority in the national Parliament.

A CALCUTTA dispatch reports that the British army invading Afghanistan has gone into winter quarters, and that the health of the troops is excellent....Prince Henry, of Holland, brother of King William, is dead.

ANOTHER great colliery disaster has occurred in Wales. By an explosion of fire damp, in a pit near Ponty-Pridd, forty-eight unfortunate miners lost their lives.

A CONVENTION between Austria and Turkey has been completed. It leaves Austria free to administer Bosnia and Herzegovina, continue the Turkish administration, and establish a mixed occupation of Novi-Bazar....Edward Matthew Ward, the eminent English painter, is dead....Yakoob Khan, son of the Ameer of Afghanistan, has followed his father in his flight to Russia.... A dispatch from Philippopolis states that a railway train fell into the river Arda in Turkey, and that a Russian General, several other officers, and 200 men were drowned. The accident was caused by the breaking down of a bridge.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

BEN. WILLIAMS and William Harper, of Caddo parish, testified on the 10th, corroborating the testimony of other witnesses as to violence and intimidation in the parish, and placing the polls at out-of-the-way places without due notice, thus preventing the colored men from voting. A. H. Leonard, District Attorney, testified to general acts of intimidation. Prior to the election was told by prominent Democrats that they meant to carry the election. Asked them how they would do it, in view of the fact that the negro voters were greatly in the majority. The reply was that the negroes would vote the Democratic ticket. Later, a fixed determination on the part of the Democrats to carry the election became evident. This determination finally was intensified into acts of intimidation. Witness then detailed various acts of violence, threats and fraud, such as placing ballot-boxes at inaccessible places, the organization of cavalry companies throughout the parish for the avowed purpose of carrying the election, not permitting the Republican Supervisor to discharge his duties, and refusal to allow negroes to vote who had registered, on the ground that their names were not on the books. H. C. Rogers, L. Templeman, G. A. Simpleman, and J. Shepherd, of Caddo, were called by Democratic members of the committee, and in substance denied the statements of previous witnesses of intimidation by the Democracy. They asserted that where were the greatest troubles the negroes were the aggressors.

THE Teller Committee, on the 11th inst., examined Judge L. V. Reeves, of Tensas parish, Chairman of the Democratic Committee, who testified that the troubles in that parish did not arise from political causes. He said that rumors spread abroad that the color line was to be drawn, that the whites became alarmed, that Capt. Peck, who went to Fairfax's house to persuade him to withhold from his purpose of arraying the blacks against the whites, was shot down, and that in the fight that ensued several negroes were wounded. This was the starting point of the troubles, and the question became no longer political, but a contest between the whites and blacks. The negroes at once massed in large numbers, and it became necessary to restore peace. Everything was peaceable and quiet on election day. George Norwood, of Caddo, the next witness, appeared with his head bandaged, and spoke with difficulty, having been shot in the face in the Caledonia affair. He testified that the first shot was fired by negroes at him. He did not fire a shot that day. He is a Republican and always worked for the negroes, and thought it hard they should be the first to shoot him. William A. Lacy, a lawyer and editor, and J. C. Moncure, Speaker of the Louisiana House of Representatives, both residents of Caddo parish, testified that the election in that parish was fair and peaceable; they stated that District Attorney Leonard was responsible for the troubles in that region. The negroes voted freely until Leonard, seeing no chance of carrying the election for the Republicans, ordered the negroes to go home. Witness thought some of Leonard's speeches incendiary, calculated to excite bad blood between the blacks and whites. A couple of colored witnesses testified that the bulldozers in Point Coupee parish committed great outrages, whipping and killing negroes.

BEFORE the Teller Committee at New Orleans, on the 13th, G. R. M. Newman (colored) of St. Mary's parish, testified concerning the destruction of ballot-boxes by the Democrats in that parish. W. B. McNeall, of Caddo, an ex-Federal soldier and Deputy Sheriff, testified regarding the trouble at Caledonia; that the first shots were fired by negroes upon an unarmed party of whites; in the fighting that followed about twenty negroes were killed. David Wise, of Tensas, testified that the election was peaceable and quiet. Live within one-fourth of a mile of Fairfax, but knew nothing until the affair was over. Did not see the men. Never heard the reason of the visit. My gin was burned by the negroes the following day. Saw armed colored men marching through Waterproof the day before my gin was burned; consequently, when it was burning, was afraid to go out to see about it. Think armed bodies of negroes came from Catahoula parish—some 200 of them. The next day another crowd of armed negroes came in town, made a great deal of fuss, and cried that they were going to burn the town. Fairfax was the leader of the negroes. H. Moss, of Tensas, testified that he saw armed negroes pass by the hundreds through the town of Waterproof. We were very much frightened. The negroes threatened to kill the children and outrage the women. Think they would have burned the town Tuesday if the Sheriff's posse had not arrived.

THE Teller Committee, on the 14th, examined T. S. Shaeffer, of St. Joseph parish, who testified to the killing of an Irish laborer by a negro constable, and the lynching and shooting of the constable by a band of armed whites. Gaspre de Cuir, of Pointe Coupe, a member of the Legislature, testified that he heard several negroes were whipped and beaten by the whites. Understood it was because the negroes had organized revolutionary bands endangering the lives and property of whites. Charles Deceng, of Caddo, Deputy Marshal, saw two dead negroes at Caledonia, the day after the election. Understood the negroes were killed on election day.

THE Teller Committee, on the 15th, examined Clement L. Walker, attorney, of New Orleans, who testified concerning the election there; that he believed the returns promulgated were not indicative of the true results, the votes polled for the Conservatives being counted for the Democrats. He charged generally that there were irregularities and frauds in the conduct of the election. C. W. Johnson, J. A. Johnson, David Young, Charles Lincoln, M. D. Randolph, all colored, of Concordia, testified to general charges of intimidation and fraud in the late election. G. W. Walton, of Concordia, a member of the Legislature, denied in effect the charges made by the previous witnesses. E. Kennell, colored, a Coroner of Concordia, said there were seven men killed, all colored. Five were hung and one shot.

A. J. BRYANT (colored), State Senator from Tensas parish, testified that he was forced, by threats of hanging, to vote the Democratic ticket at the last election. He said that no Republican ticket was nominated in that parish because the whites told the blacks that they would consider such action a declaration of war.

THE POTTER COMMITTEE.

Before the Potter Investigating Committee, holding its sessions at Washington, the counsel of Secretary Sherman offered as evidence the affidavit of one St. Martins, who was formerly a Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms for the committee, confessing that he had sworn falsely before the sub-committee last winter, and casting imputations upon Representative Stenger in that connection. The committee decided, by a strict party vote, to return the affidavit to counsel of Secretary Sherman, and that said counsel be instructed to inform Mr. Sherman that St. Martins would be examined touching the matters embraced in the affidavit, should Mr. Sherman or any member of the committee so desire. St. Martins' affidavit is, in substance, that his appointment as Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms was procured by Weber, on condition that he would perform certain service that would prove advantageous to the Democrats in the investigation. He says: "I was induced to leave my home in Donaldsonville, La., by Weber, and interview Democratic members of the committee and confidential agents of Samuel J. Tilden, A. M. Gibson, J. H. Maddox, and George W. Carter. At interviews with the agents (generally I saw each separately) I became convinced that they desired special service, and were interviewing me for the purpose of determining whether I was discreet and reliable, and that their plans might be safely intrusted to me for execution. Maddox revealed the service I was expected to perform: Firstly, the journey to St. James parish, to subpœna Armstead, Duncan, and Steward, but not to serve subpœnas until I had first ascertained that, when placed upon the stand before the committee, they could give the testimony desired by Tilden's agents. Secondly, to secure such testimony, I was authorized to offer a hope of reward, and the further assurance that they would be permitted to return to their homes in Feliciana parish (from which they had previously been driven), and a guarantee of immunity from molestation in future. Thirdly, the testimony desired from Armstead, Duncan and Steward was a retraction and denial of the material facts in their examination before the Returning Board as to outrages, intimidation, etc., in Feliciana parish. From conversations with Armstead and Steward I became convinced that they would prove pliant witnesses. I brought them to the city and took them to Weber's room. I then reported to Maddox and the committee that witnesses were in the city. Maddox wrote out an affidavit form of the evidence each was expected to give before the Potter Committee. I carried these affidavits from Maddox to Weber. These affidavits were read to witnesses, and they were promised, Duncan $50, Armstead $80, and Steward $80 for such testimony. Weber 'coached' witnesses by repeatedly reading to each the testimony expected, and he furnished Stenger with questions to be propounded to the witness and answers witnesses had agreed to give. I carried such lists from Weber to Stenger. In the performance of my duty as Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms I was placed in possession of the subpœnas, and in twelve of thirteen cases, where the names of witnesses had been furnished by Republican counsel I was instructed to report persons not found. I was instructed by Stenger, Chairman of the sub-committee, that in cases where witnesses would not furnish the evidence desired by the committee, or unfavorable to the Democracy, to return the subpœnas and report the persons not found. During the entire session of the committee in this city Maddox, Gibson and Carter were busy influencing witnesses by the use of and offers of money, and the Chairman of the committee had full knowledge of this fact. Maddox repeatedly told me Gibson was Tilden's outside agent, and he would secure all the money desired from Col. William T. Pelton, of New York."—Representative Stenger emphatically denies the allegations, says the affidavit was procured by corrupt means, and that affiant is a bigger liar than Jim Anderson. Messrs. Carter, Gibson and Maddox also make counter affidavits, pronouncing the statements of St. Martins false so far as relates to them.

J. HENRI BURCH (colored), a Presidential elector-at-large in Louisiana, testified before the Potter Committee that he signed a second set of certificates because he had been advised that there was an informality in the first set; he knew nothing of the forgery of certificates. Kelly (colored) was placed upon the stand, and testified that the name of Jeffrian, one of the electors, was forged by D. P. Blanchard, a clerk in Gov. Kellogg's office; in answer to a question as to the whereabouts of Blanchard, witness stated that he died last summer of yellow fever. Gen. Ben Butler, who conducted the greater part of the cross-examination, proceeded upon the theory that Kelly, the colored messenger, had himself committed the forgery. He asked Kelly to write his own signature upon a piece of paper. Kelly did so. Then Butler asked the witness, who wrote very readily, to write the name of Jeffrian. This the witness very positively refused to do. In answer to a question by Mr. Cox, as to whether anybody approached witness regarding the character of the evidence he should give before the Potter Committee, Kelly said he was visited by a man named Maddox, who stated that he was employed by high authority from the committee to ascertain what his (Kelly's) testimony would be. The object of the committee was, he said, to make political capital for Tilden against Thurman. As a further inducement to testify, Kelly was told he could go off a considerable distance, even as far as San Francisco, and could then be summoned back, profiting by the mileage.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, Jan. 10.—SENATE.—The Committee on Naval Affairs was directed to inquire into the expediency of providing that the Chiefs of the Bureaus of Steam Engineering, Provisions and Clothing, and Medicine and Surgery at the Navy Department be selected from officers whose relative rank is not below that of Captain.... The Indian Appropriation bill was passed.... Mr. Allison, at the request of Mr. Kirkwood, introduced a bill to provide for an additional bounty to soldiers of the War of the Rebellion. Referred.... The petition of Dr. Mary E. Walker for a pension was also referred.

HOUSE.—Mr. Gunter, Chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Myra Clark Gaines. Referred.... The William and Mary College bill was taken up, and after a long and lively debate was defeated—87 yeas to 127 nays.... Mr. Hatcher introduced a bill to declare forfeited the lands granted Missouri to aid in the construction of the Iron Mountain railroad.

SATURDAY, Jan. 11.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—After the reading of the journal, the death of Representative Schleicher was announced, and Messrs. Giddings, Shelley, McKenzie, Mueller, Loring, Brentano and Townsend were appointed a committee to accompany the remains to San Antonio. The House then adjourned as a further mark of respect.

MONDAY, Jan. 13.—SENATE.—A bill was passed without discussion appropriating $250,000 for a fire-proof building for a national museum....It was then voted to attend the funeral of Mr. Schleicher, and a recess was taken. Messrs. Coke, Bayard and Hamlin were appointed a committee to arrange for the funeral of Representative Schleicher, and to accompany his remains to Texas.

HOUSE.—The report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was unanimously adopted, recommending the payment of the remainder of the salary of the late Representative Schleicher, as member of the Forty-fifth Congress, to his bereaved family, and requesting the next Congress to make a similar appropriation of his salary as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress.

TUESDAY, Jan. 14.—SENATE.—Mr. Butler submitted a resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to inquire and report what railroad company, individual or individuals are building a railroad across the public domain in Arizona, and by what authority the road is being constructed. Agreed to....Mr. Davis (W. Va.) called up the resolution submitted by him early in the session to promote the agricultural interests of the country, and made a long speech upon the subject.... Mr. Matthews made a lengthy speech in opposition to the bill to amend the Patent laws.

HOUSE.—The House spent the entire day, in committee of the whole, in considering the bill for the payment of pensions to survivors of the Mexican war.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 15.—SENATE.—The House bill for the payment to officers and soldiers of the Mexican war of three months' extra pay, provided for by the act of July 19, 1848, led to a long discussion. Mr. Edmunds submitted an amendment to make the act apply to those who served in the late war for the preservation of the Union. The bill was laid aside without action..... Mr. Voorhees submitted a resolution instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into the circumstances which led to the recent escape of Cheyenne Indians from Fort Robinson, Neb., and their slaughter by United States forces. Agreed to. ....A communication was laid before the Senate in executive session from Secretary Sherman on the subject of the New York Custom House appointments, designed to show that the removal of Collector Arthur and Naval Officer Cornell was made for sufficient cause. At the conclusion of the reading of Secretary Sherman's communication, Senator Conkling made an earnest speech defending Arthur and Cornell from the charges of inefficiency, and denouncing the charges as pretenses and afterthoughts put forth by the administration in an effort to justify action that was wholly unwarranted on civil-service grounds, and prompted merely by personal or partisan considerations.

HOUSE.—Mr. Wood, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, reported back the bill authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of refunding the public debt. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue in exchange for lawful money United States certificates of deposit of the denomination of $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent., and convertible at any time, with accrued interest, into 4 per cent. bonds, authorized to be issued, and directs that the money so received shall be applied only to the payment of 5-20 bonds. The bill, after a somewhat protracted debate, was passed—yeas, 154; nays, 43. Mr. Wood also reported a bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange directly at par bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest for bonds commonly known as the 5-40s, outstanding and uncalled, and directs that whenever all such 5-20 bonds shall have been redeemed, the provision of this section and all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing 5 per cent., or a higher rate of interest which may be redeemable, and that, in any such change, interest shall be allowed on bonds redeemed for a period of three months....The main question being ordered, the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, Jan. 16.—SENATE.—Mr. Dorsey submitted a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of all the appropriations and expenditures from the national treasury for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Indian Department from July 1, 1790, to June 30, 1878. Agreed to....The bill providing for the payment of arrears of pensions was passed....Mr. Windom offered a resolution calling for a committee to inquire into the propriety of encouraging the migration of blacks from those States where they do not receive such treatment as might be accorded American citizens to States where their rights will be respected.

HOUSE.—The House passed, without division, the bill reported from the Ways and Means Committee to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.... The Mississippi Levee bill was taken up and the remainder of the day devoted to its discussion.... In the evening memorial services in honor of the late Prof. Joseph Henry were held in the presence of a vast audience.

The Youngers.

In the State Prison the report is that Bob Younger is in good health, but that Cole and Jim Younger are in the hospital. Cole is suffering from the ball that lodged under one of his eyes and has never been removed. In Jim's case some obstruction has formed in the roof of his mouth, caused by the passage of the ball which shattered his jaw. This interferes with his respiration, and at times he seems on the point of suffocation.—St. Paul Globe.

THE maid and grandson, 10 years old, of a lady residing at Panlin, near Paris, were found suffocated in their beds one morning recently. On examination it was found that the bad state of the flue, which was full of crevices, had allowed the smoke from an adjoining chimney, where charcoal was burned, to enter the room where the two persons slept.

MURDER AS AN ART.

The Two Bloodiest Scoundrels of Modern Times.

[From the Chicago Times.]

People who have read De Quincey's writings will remember his "Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts." In the sequel to this, entitled "Three Memorable Murders," there is given the case of Williams, who, in London, in 1812, threw all England into a frenzy of consternation, fear and horror by his bloody exploits. Somehow, there seems to be something in the case of Williams that suggests the crimes of Richards, the Nebraska murderer.

Attention was first called to Williams—that is to say, to the fact that a murderer was abroad, for his identity was not then known—by the fact that a young man named Marr, his wife, an infant 8 months old, and a journeyman artisan who boarded in the house, were all found with their skulls smashed in and their throats cut. A female servant had gone out for some oysters. When she left, Marr was about closing up for the night; when she returned, an hour later, the bloody work was done and the fiendish workman had made his escape. Twelve days later, in the same neighborhood, just round the corner from Marr's house, an old man of 70, named Williamson; his wife, some ten years younger, and a servant girl, at about the same hour of the night, were murdered. As in the case of the Marr family, the skull of each of the victims was beaten in and their throats were cut.

"Never," says De Quincey, "throughout the annals of universal Christendom, has there indeed been any act of one solitary, insulated individual armed with power so appalling over the hearts of men as that exterminating murder, by which, in one hour, John Williams smote two houses with emptiness, and asserted his own supremacy over all the children of Cain. It would be absolutely impossible adequately to describe the frenzy of feelings which throughout the next fortnight mastered the popular heart; the mere delirium of indignant horror in some, the mere delirium of panic in others. For twelve succeeding days, under some groundless notion that the unknown murderer had quitted London, the panic which had convulsed the mighty metropolis diffused itself all over the island." It is evident that murder is regarded as of less consequence here than there, for the reason that, although Richards, the Nebraska fiend, stands self-accused of nine murders, and his victims are all known to be dead, not one person in 500 or 5,000 of our population knew, until he made the confession, that the murders had been committed. It was known within a limited area that all these people had been assassinated; but the fact made no stir. The nation worked, ate, slept as calmly as if all these lives had been extinguished by nature's gentlest, most-kindly processes. There was here no "delirium of indignant horror" or of "indignant panic." The very fact that this people receives with so profound an apathy these sanguinary occurrences will go far toward accounting for their frequency.

While there is the broadest of contrasts in the feelings engendered among the two nations by the news of the acts of Williams and Richards, there are many points of resemblance between the two men. Both rank as wholesale butchers. In both the love of murder for its own sake is a predominant trait. In killing the Marr family there was not the slightest need of including the 8-months-old infant, because it could not have possibly become an agent for the detection of the assassin. Nor, after having crushed in the skulls of his victims, was there any necessity of cutting their throats; and yet this was done in every instance. This demonstrates that Williams was inspired by a passion for murder. It is true that, in both cases, he committed robberies, but this feature was simply incidental, as the smoking of a cigar supplements a good dinner, and yet forms no essential part of it. Richards has shown the same passionate longing for killing. To slay was to him what a love of music or of painting is in many people. He killed to gratify an instinct, as men eat when they are hungry. This is shown by his confessions. Had robbery been his sole purpose, he could have effected it in the case of the Swede, and in that of the woman and her three children, without a resort to murder. Moreover, in relating to the members of the Chicago press his diabolical crimes, he dilated upon them with the same pride exhibited by an artist in showing a superior painting, or a composer at the successful rendering of one of his works. He discussed them with an easy nonchalance which goes to prove that he looked upon them from the standpoint of an artist. He had no conscience; he repudiated any such weakness, and smilingly gave his listeners to understand that he occupied no such groveling position. Rosy, suave in manner, not unprepossessing in appearance, he again reminds one of Williams, of whom DeQuincey said: "It was in harmony with the general subtlety of his character, and his polished hatred of brutality, that, by universal agreement, his manners were distinguished for exquisite suavity; the tiger's heart was masked by the most insinuating and sneaking refinement."

Fortunately for the safety as well as the honor of mankind, the Williamses and Richardses are rare exceptions. We have desperadoes like Rande, who number their victims by dozens, but they constitute a distinct species. Rande killed his men in quarrels; he gave them a chance for their lives, and killed rather from a love of danger than from any murderous instinct. He and his type are generally unmistakable ruffians whom it is as easy to know and to avoid as rattlesnakes. Williams and Richards are of a kind who, to an insatiate desire for murder, add a disgusting cowardice. They gratify their passion by striking unawares, by murdering under the guise of friendship, their fiendish designs veiled by persuasive manners and gentle words. In many respects the American Richards is a more notable wretch than the English Williams. So possessed was the latter by his desire for murder that there was no room in his soul for the gentle emotions. Richards has all the tigerish love of blood that had the other, with a more capacious nature, in which dwell many of the feelings belonging to the best of men. He had appreciation of a beautiful woman. He could admire her, love her, make her the theme of tender compositions. To the other the gleam of a razor was more attractive than that of the brightest eye which ever shone in woman's head.

However, take them all in all, they are the two bloodiest scoundrels spawned by the viciousness of modern days.

Life on the Frontier.

Extract from a recent letter from Lincoln, Neb.: "The people of Nebraska are greatly pleased to learn that the men who were guilty of the inhuman crime of roasting alive Mitchell and Ketchum were arrested in Dawson county yesterday. They are John Baldwin, a hotel-keeper, Myron Brown, Barney Armstrong, J. P. Olive, John Fisher, the 'Kid,' John Gantlin and William Green. Olive was the ringleader of the dastardly roasting of Ketchum and Mitchell. The men were arrested one at a time, quietly, by a preconcerted arrangement, at the town of Plum Creek. Atty. Gen. Dilworth, together with three brothers of the murdered Ketchum, and other gentlemen, did the work. Learning that the men were at Plum Creek, they slipped down upon them from Kearney, and arrested them without firing a shot, notwithstanding Olive and others had boasted that there were not men enough in Nebraska to arrest them. Three men had been in hot pursuit of Gillian, the Sheriff who surrendered the unfortunate men, Ketchum and Mitchell, to the fiends who burned them. This afternoon they caught him. All the men are now in jail at Kearney, and are securely ironed. The whole city is acting as guard to prevent an incursion of cattlemen to the rescue. Nearly all the villains are from Texas, holding no citizenship here. The people of Nebraska rejoice at their capture.

"Yesterday a prisoner called 'Dutch Charley,' a road-agent, was being taken in charge of an officer from Laramie to Rawlins for trial, and, when the train reached Carbon, Wy., last night, a party of masked men entered the car where he was sitting and carried him out some little distance from the train. They halted at a telegraph-pole, and then informed him that his time had come, as they proposed to hang him, and, if he had anything to say, he had better say it quick. They succeeded in inducing him to confess that he was one of the murderers of Widdowfield and Vincent. A strong rope was then thrown over the cross-bar of the telegraph pole, and one end was securely fastened around the villain's neck. The men then took hold of the other end, and, at the signal, 'One, two, three, pull!' he shot up into the air and was launched into eternity. The end of the rope which they had hold of was then tied around the foot of the pole, and the body of 'Dutch Charley' was left dangling in the air. The affair created but little excitement."

THEODORE REED, Editor.

THE OHIO DEMOCRACY.

Letter from Senator Thurman—Remarks of Gen. Ewing.

At the grand banquet of the Young Men's Democratic Club, of Columbus, Ohio, on the 8th of January, the following letter from Hon. A. G. Thurman was read:

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 6, 1879.

Messrs. John D. Sullivan, A. D. Heffner, and others, Committee, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIRS—I fully expected to attend the banquet on the 8th inst. at Columbus, and to enjoy that reunion of political and personal friends on a day so memorable in the history of the republic, and so much cherished by its Democracy; but, at the last moment, and to my great regret, I find that it will not be in my power to enjoy that pleasure. I am just beginning to recover from a severe cold that has afflicted me for a week or more, and I cannot but recognize the fact that it would be imprudent for me, in such extremely cold weather, to make a trip requiring 800 miles travel and crossing the mountains twice.

Permit me to offer a few reflections upon the toast, "Jacksonian Democracy," the theme on which I was appointed to speak. Of course some other speaker will take my place, and do justice to the subject; but the privilege may be accorded to me of jotting down some very brief and pertinent observations. I wish to recall attention to some of the most marked characteristics of the Democracy of the time of Andrew Jackson. I refer to the time when he was a candidate for the Presidency, and when he filled the Presidential chair.

1. The Democracy were then eminently, if not pre-eminently, distinguished by their devotion to the Union or the United States. South and North, East and West, that sentiment was cherished by every true Democrat. Subsequent events chilled, and at length for a time suspended it in the South, but the happiest circumstances of our present condition (thanks to the influence of Democratic principles) is that the love of the Union is everywhere restored, and that its preservation is a fixed principle of the Democratic party in the South.

2. The party was equally distinguished by its love of the constitution. It sought to preserve it in all its vigor and beneficence by giving it a national and rational interpretation; and it battled, manfully and constantly, against those latitudinarian constructions that threatened to convert the Government into an unlimited centralized despotism; and, on the other hand, against all the views that menaced the existence of the Union. And, permit me to say, that the principles of Jacksonian Democracy, in this respect, are as important to-day as they ever were at any period of our history.

3. The Jacksonian Democracy were the determined foes of monopoly. They could not be otherwise, for the very foundation of the party was the doctrine of equal rights. By whatever names they may have been called, there have been, and perhaps ever will be, but two great parties in America—the Democratic party, asking nothing but equal rights, and an opposing party whose leaders have ever sought, and ever will seek, social privileges created by law. Who can forget the great battle fought by the Democracy, under the lead of Jackson, against the Bank of the United States, and who can fail to see that a desperate struggle against a far more powerful combination of capital and privilege than was presented by that institution is now impending? Will the Democracy of to-day follow the example set by their fathers, of inflexible opposition to special privilege, or will they prove recreant to the principles, the history and the traditions of their party? This is a question that must ere long be answered. My own belief is that it will be answered as it ought to be, and that the Democrats of to-day will prove themselves to be, what their fathers were, true men. They will be earnest, but not rash; determined, but not unreasonable; destructive of wrongs and abuses, and conservative of all that should exist in a free republic.

4. The "Jacksonian Democracy" were a party of economy. The ordinary annual expenses of Jackson's administration (that is, the expenses of the Government exclusive of payments in discharge of the public debt) were but fifteen millions, or thereabouts. Now, our ordinary annual expenses are nearly ten times that sum. What a contrast! While our population has increased but little more than three-fold, our expenses have increased nearly ten-fold. Is it not high time that we should return to the economical principles and practices of the Jacksonian Democracy?

These points, few in number but transcendent in importance, I have thought it proper to note for the consideration of our friends. Others might be stated, but these most suffice for to-day.

Gentlemen, I know that the banquet will be enjoyed by those who attend it; I trust that it will prove beneficial to others as well. I trust that its influence will be felt in reviving Jacksonian Democracy, and in combining the opponents of the Republican party in a grand effort to free the country from misrule and corruption. I have the honor to be yours truly,

A. G. THURMAN.

Gen. Thomas Ewing addressed the assemblage after the reading of the Thurman letter. We make the following extract:

Jackson meant to accomplish by his contest with the national bank just the purpose of the memorable declaration of Jefferson: "Bank paper must be suppressed, and the circulation restored to the nation, to whom it belongs."

Now a half century has passed, and the people are confronted with the same question, greatly magnified in dimensions and importance. We have now a confederation of 2,000 United States banks, instead of one, with a capital of over $500,000,000 instead of $35,000,000, and with loans of nearly $1,000,000,000. They are the arms of a Briarean money-power, reaching every quarter of our land, and holding every business man and business interest in their grasp. Instead of being the handmaids of the Government, they are its rulers. The representative of the Treasury Department timidly crouches in a seat in their Clearing House while they insolently nullify the laws. From 1865 until 1876 they fastened on us a series of finance measures which have doubled the burdens and woes of the war; spawned hundreds of millionaires and millions of paupers, and broken more hearts than would pave Broadway from Central Park to the Battery. To complete the work of degradation and subjugation of the masses, the man under whose Presidency this infamous legislation was accomplished—the worshiper and worshiped of the millionaires—is to come back to us in 1880, anointed with the benedictions of every crowned head of Europe, to give us a strong and profligate Government, such as become the transition from a real to a sham republic.

Let us meet him, or whoever else may be nominated by his party, with an opposition composed of all citizens who want to preserve a Government for the people and by the people, and who can unite on a few fundamental propositions in opposition to the aggressions of the money power—the substitution of greenbacks for bank notes, the unlimited coinage of the old silver dollar, and the prompt and absolute stoppage of all increase of the bonded debt for resumption purposes. Let us postpone further question about resumption until it shall have had its day of trial. The country has been forced through a sweat of blood to reach it; now let it give us back our stolen prosperity or be torn from the statute books. Postpone, too, the tariff—the mode of regulating the volume of the currency—and all other distracting questions not of instant and supreme importance. Let us settle them when, by a united and gigantic effort, we shall have broken the political scepter of the money power.

If there be Democrats who are devotees of bank money, who are hostile to unlimited coinage of the old silver dollar, and who would plunge the country yet deeper in bonded debt to fasten on it the slavery of gold prices and payment, let them go, and their desertion, emphasizing our sincerity, will draw to our ranks two where we lose one. If we should lose New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, which I do not believe, we will gain Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. And even if, after having secured a united and homogeneous Democracy, devoted to great and lasting principles and measures, we should lose the first battle, it were far better than to win it by a false union of discordant elements on a deceitful platform.

Who shall our leader be? No man who expects to win the Presidency by a suit in chancery, or an electoral commission, or by money. Let us have a pure and brave man, on a plain and candid platform, and resolved that the result shall be ascertained and declared according to the immemorial usages of the Government, no matter what powers of force or fraud may attempt to defeat the verdict. It is to be a fight for political supremacy between manhood and money—between the people who bore the heat and burden of the war and an aristocracy which grew and fattened on their sacrifices. Let our leader be one who is with the people, heart and soul—who has a backbone—and who, if duly elected, will be the President.

Gov. Bishop responded to the toast, "Our Governor." In closing, he said:

We may well claim Ohio as a Democratic State. The instincts of her people are true to the principles of the party, and, if we will but drop all differences between ourselves, lay aside all selfish and interested aims, and work hard, and work all together, for the interest of the party, totally ignoring and disregarding all things else, Ohio will certainly cast her lot with the great Democratic party, and poll such a vote as will place a true, sterling, Andrew Jackson Democrat in the White House in 1880.

REPUBLICAN BULLDOZERS.

Another Interesting Contribution from Senator Thurman.

Senator Thurman has addressed the following letter to Mr. Teller, Chairman of the Select Committee of Investigation:

U. S. SENATE CHAMBER, WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.

DEAR SIR: Again complying with the request of your committee for information, I have the honor to send you installment No. 3, to-wit:

1. An official certified copy from the office of the Secretary of State of Florida of the affidavit of James H. Paine, showing misconduct and violation of the law by Federal officials at the late elections in Duval county, that State.

2. A like-certified copy of the affidavit of James M. Whittaker relating to the same subject, and to intimidation of voters by armed Republicans.

3. A like-certified copy of an affidavit by S. C. Tucker, proving that at the late election at Precinct No. 12, Allachua county, the United States Supervisor of Elections, S. P. Gruelle, insisted that the ballots as they were cast should be numbered to correspond with the number of each voter's name that appeared on the registration-list, and that in compliance with his demand the larger part of the ballots were so numbered, and the secrecy of the ballot thus destroyed.

4. A like-certified affidavit of Robert M. Witherspoon, County Judge of Madison county, in said State, showing his illegal arrest and detention by the United States Commissioner and the Marshal in order to prevent the discharge of his duties as one of the Board of Canvassers at the late election in said county.

5. An affidavit of Edward S. Francis (colored), citizen of Duval county, Fla., and member of the Board of County Commissioners of said county, proving intimidation practiced in that State to prevent colored citizens from voting the Democratic ticket.

6. An affidavit of James C. Williamson (colored), a citizen of the same county, to the same effect.

7. A certificate of the Sheriff and County Judge of said county, and of the President of the City Council of Jacksonville, and of the City Clerk and City Marshal attesting the good character and standing of said Francis and Williamson.

8. A affidavit of John B. Marshall, of Madison county, Florida, showing misconduct on the part of the United States Deputy Marshals, and intimidation practiced by them at the last election in said county.

I have a number of letters from the North and West making specific charges of intimidation and bribery that it may be proper that I should lay before your committee, but I withhold them until the wishes of the writers in this respect can be ascertained. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. G. THURMAN.

Beheaded at Prayers.

Hamlet refrained from killing his mother's husband while the latter was on his knees, but Mrs. John S. Caldwell, of South Byfield, Mass., had no such scruples when she decapitated her husband with an ax. Mr. Caldwell was kneeling at a chair offering his morning devotions, the only other person in the house being his sister-in-law, who was in the same devout posture, when Mrs. Caldwell stealthily entered the room, and, snatching up an ax, which her husband had brought into the room the night before, dealt him a blow on the back of his neck, which nearly severed his head from his body. Death was instantaneous, and the soul of the suppliant followed the half-uttered prayer to the other world. The terrible deed done, the woman went to a neighbor's house and told him to go over, as she had struck her husband and might have killed him. He had threatened, she said, to kill her. Mrs. Caldwell exhibited not the least sign of emotion, and talked unconcernedly about the dreadful thing she had done. Mr. Caldwell was an intelligent farmer of about 45 years, in easy circumstances, and both he and his wife were respectable members of the Orthodox church. For the past two years the wife had been partially deranged, so much so that her sister had been sent for to keep watch of her movements. There was nothing but happiness in the relations of husband and wife, and the woman's devilish deed is universally attributed to insanity, pure and simple.

A Fishhook.

Mrs. Smith, of this city, found a fishhook among her husband's papers, and determined to destroy it. So she resolved to burn the fishhook up, and for this purpose cast it into the stove. The next morning Mr. Smith, in digging out the "clinkers," found the fishhook in the ball of his thumb. After the surgeon had removed it, he put it into his vest pocket, with an idea of showing it to his acquaintances. He sauntered down street, when an expeditious colored woman swept by him, and was suddenly brought to with "a round turn." The hook had worked its way partly out of the pocket, and its point caught in the bodice of her dress. The situation grew momentarily interesting to the bad boys who infest the thoroughfare, and they hailed Smith's efforts to liberate himself from Liberian custody with hoots of delight. Finally the dusky female swung clear, and went dashing down the street. A policeman attempted her arrest, but was arrested himself by a fishhook in the hollow of his hand. The hook is now in the station-house, waiting to have something done with it. Any person desiring a permanent situation to take care of a fishhook should make immediate application to the proper authorities.—New London (Ct.) Telegram.

THE gold mines of Georgia are said to produce not less than $1,000,000 bullion per annum.

SPEECH OF HON. D. W. VOORHEES.

Delivered in the United States Senate, Jan. 7, 1879.

Mr. Voorhees—Mr. President, on the first day of the present session I had the honor to introduce a resolution in regard to the trade dollar, which I ask may now be taken up for the purpose of submitting a few remarks upon it.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. Voorhees, Dec. 2, 1878:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the trade dollar authorized by section 15 of the act of Congress approved February, 1873, a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and providing for its recoinage into the standard dollar of 412½ grains.

Mr. Voorhees—Mr. President, among the many evils brought upon the industrial classes of this country by the bad financial legislation of the party in power, the silver coin, known as the trade dollar, is at this time peculiarly conspicuous, and will long be remembered. Its functions as money are fraudulent, and the people have a right to protection from its further abuses.

This real and vital objection to making the trade-dollar a legal tender and to recoining it into the lawful money of the country comes from that class which is interested in diminishing rather than increasing the volume of our currency. The money monopolists care not so much about the kind of money which is circulated; it is the amount which principally concerns them. The proposition, therefore, to add $35,000,000 to our lawful currency alarms their avarice and excites their envenomed hostility. Such an increase would make money plentier, the rate of interest lower; it would augment the value of property and labor, afford some relief to struggling debtors, and stimulate the prostrate business of the country. All this, however, is adverse to the interests of capital which is withdrawn from the channels of trade and is watching for investments at usurious rates of interest or in property at bankrupt prices.

From the holders of this kind of capital the toiling millions of the world need expect nothing but oppression. Hungry avarice never sleeps, and its stony heart never relents. The laboring masses of every description, and also all the merchants and traders engaged in active business, demand an amount of currency in circulation, whether it be of gold, silver or paper, which will measure the value of labor and property at fair and healthy rates, and not according to the standard of want and bankruptcy now prevailing. Money is the standard by which the value of every exchangeable commodity is measured. When the standard is shortened and contracted all values shrink in proportion, and the power of money over labor and the products of labor is correspondingly increased. A scarcity of money in circulation cheapens every acquisition of human toil, whether lands or houses, or the growth of the fields. It has at the present time reduced the price of the Western farmer's corn to from 18 to 25 cents per bushel, hauled and delivered; and the price of his hogs to from 2 to 2½ cents per pound. On the other hand the scarcity of money multiplies tenfold the burden of every debt, tightens the ligatures of every mortgage, and hastens the harvest of bankruptcy for speculators in ruined estates to reap.

The opposition, therefore, to legalizing the trade dollar, coming from the source it does, is not a matter of surprise. In fact, there is a deep-seated hostility to silver money of every kind coming from the same source and springing from the same motives. It is perfectly obvious that silver, as money, is not receiving fair play at the hands of the present administration and those who draw their inspiration from it. It will not be forgotten how faithfully the Secretary of the Treasury obeyed the behests and served the cause of those adhering to the gold basis. When the bill remonetizing silver was approved by the representatives of the people in both branches of Congress, Mr. Sherman staked his judgment against the measure by inducing the President to interpose his veto. Under these circumstances he cannot complain if he is suspected of aiming to vindicate the wisdom of the veto rather than of striving in good faith to make the law a success.

It is unfortunate that the execution of this great and popular law is in the hands of its most conspicuous and pronounced enemy, one who embodies in his policy all the fears and hostilities of the money monopolists against what they are pleased to term a silver-inflation. It happens, under a benign Providence, that the products of the silver mines of the United States are greater than all other countries in the world put together. It was the fear that the people would obtain too much money from this source which inspired the furious opposition to silver money a year ago, and which is now engaged in a conspiracy to practically demonetize it in defiance of law. Immediately upon the passage of the act restoring silver to coinage and circulation, a systematic effort was commenced by which to prepare the public mind for its failure. The leading newspaper organs in the great money-centers have, from that day to this, teemed in all their issues with dismal predictions, sneers and abuse aimed at the lawful silver currency of the Government. The hard specie dollar of the fathers has been denounced as a dishonest dollar and scandalized and slandered in the same terms and by the same tongues and pens which have labored so long to load the greenback dollar with disgrace.

That the Secretary of the Treasury has lent the influence of his great office to this flagitious conspiracy is proven by his answer to the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] at the present session. He admits that he allowed the bondholder to dictate which kind of coin he would receive in payment of interest on his bonds, thus ignoring the right of the people to pay their coin obligations as well in silver as in gold. By this bad faith the Secretary has made himself a party to the unlawful scheme of driving silver away from the higher uses of money, and of dishonoring it in the face of the world. It is in his option, not the creditors' option, whether he will pay our coin debts in gold or in silver, and as the servant and agent of the American people it is his plain duty to use both for that purpose in proportion to the amount of each which he has under his control.

Encouraged, however, by his policy and believing that public opinion was prepared for more open and aggressive hostilities, the associated national banks of New York, in the fore part of November last, proclaimed their rebellion against the constituted authorities of the Government and avowed their purpose to nullify its laws. In this lawless and insolent movement I believe the national banks of Boston concurred, and that the rebellion is spread no further than that point for the present. Sir, it is difficult to determine which is the more astounding in this action of the banks, their brazen audacity or their dense ignorance of the true temper of the American people on this subject. I have their proclamation at hand. It is addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury himself, and received by him without rebuke, if not with secret commendation. It is an elaborate argument against silver as money and an assertion of the right and duty of the banks to refuse to receive it as such. The following statements occur:

> Upon the banks greatly depend the introduction of these coins into commercial use. * * * They are at liberty to accept or to decline these deficient coins when offered them upon deposit, to refuse them as money in their commercial exchanges with each other, and to withhold their influence in fastening them upon the community, and it is their most obvious interest and duty to do so.

Among the rules laid down for the government of the banks of New York city after Jan. 1, 1879, are the following:

> 4. Decline silver dollars on deposit as money, but only receive them under special contract to withdraw the same in kind.
> 5. Prohibit payment of balances on the Clearing House in silver certificates or in silver dollars, excepting as subsidiary coins in small sums, say under $10.
> 6. Banks will hold the same attitude in respect to silver dollars that California banks have done respecting legal-tender-notes; that is, accept them only when legally compelled, and decline further commercial relations with the compelling party.

These are the details of the proposed nullification. A law of Congress, enacted by a two-thirds majority of both branches, is found by the associated banks of the cities of New York and of Boston to be obnoxious to their interests and prejudices, and they proceed at once to abrogate and defy its execution. The nullifiers of South Carolina failed in a somewhat similar undertaking in 1832, and upon a question of financial policy; but the money power of New York and Boston appears to have learned nothing from their fate.

In the rebellious proclamation to which I am calling attention the existence of Congress is graciously recognized in the following terms:

> It is confidently hoped that Congress, in view of the unexpected fluctuations of silver bullion since the law was passed, will reconsider and repeal it at an early day.

If, however, Congress should fail to be promptly overawed by the associated banks of New York, and their New England allies, and should refuse to register their haughty edict, they proceed to point out to the Secretary of the Treasury certain hostile measures for him to pursue against silver, in co-operation with their own conspiracy, by which they are entirely certain that within a year, at the most, the gold standard will be permanently restored, and the duty of Congress to again destroy silver money be made clear and unquestionable. But their overwhelming presumption does not stop at even this high pitch. Their scheme of nullification contemplates the control of the Legislature of New York, and the absolute demonetization of silver by that great State. I hold in my hand a bill already prepared and printed, which I am assured, on the highest authority, will be urged upon the approaching session of the New York Legislature by the associated banks.

If the Legislature of New York should join the associated banks in their conspiracy and rebellion, and should enact this bill into a law, it will present the question of a State attempting to nullify the authority of the Federal Government by interposing her own legislation on a subject of the deepest concern to the whole people. The constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power to coin money, and to regulate the value thereof; and Congress has exercised that power by declaring that the silver dollar of 412½ grains shall be a part of the lawful money of the Government, and that its legal-tender value shall be the same as a dollar of gold. Section 10 of article 1 of the constitution also declares that—

> No State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, or make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

It is very plain, from this provision, that neither the State of New York, nor any other State, has the power to prevent silver coin from circulating as money among its citizens on equal terms with gold.

But even the attempt to do so is full of danger to the rights of the people, proves the wide-spread and deep-seated conspiracy against silver currency, and is a bold threat of defiance to the Federal authority which will not be patiently borne by an already-sensitive public opinion.

It is not my purpose, however, to detain the Senate at length on the present occasion. I desired to point out the evils of the trade-dollar currency and the propriety of making it lawful money; and in that connection also to disclose to the country the bad faith and the determined hostility which the standard legal-tender silver dollar is encountering at the hands of this administration and its supporters. If silver money is quoted as inferior in value to gold and greenbacks, it is because its enemies are powerful and active and have combined to dishonor it. If it has failed to reach the hands of the people as extensively as was expected, it must be remembered that its coinage and circulation depend very largely on the action of a Secretary of the Treasury who does not believe it ought to be coined or circulated at all.

In spite of all these adverse influences, however, I predict the ultimate triumph of the standard silver dollar. We are essentially a silver-producing country, and the intelligent American people will not consent to be deprived of the aid of this great agent of wealth in their struggles to regain commercial and business prosperity. We have just entered upon the cruel experiment of a forced resumption of specie payments. We have just passed the 1st of January, 1879, leaving behind us five years of such bankruptcy and business ruin as never before darkened the lives of the American people. An appalling penalty has been paid in order to be able to proclaim even the theory of specie resumption. Nothing has ever appeared to my mind a greater crime against the welfare and happiness of the people than the law enforcing a resumption of specie payments.

I think I may say without presumption that I have labored as hard for its repeal as any other Senator, but the protracted struggles of the last session, and the repeated test votes on that subject, have demonstrated beyond question that a majority of this body, as at present constituted, is inflexibly determined that the harsh and destructive experiment of coercive resumption shall be tried. The advocates of this policy feel a still further security, for the present at least, in the fact that the Executive stands ready with his veto against the repeal of the Resumption act, and that a two-thirds majority of both houses of Congress cannot be obtained to pass a bill for that purpose over his objections. I earnestly hope and fondly believe that at no distant day the will of the people will be more faithfully reflected both in this body and in the Executive Department of the Government.

Sir, in my judgment, the results to flow from the so-called specie resumption provided for in the act of January, 1875, will be full of disasters and hardships to the business and labor of the country. In making preparation for it too much evil has been done for any good to follow. Our coin interest-bearing debt has been largely increased from year to year, and our non-interest-bearing currency, the staunch and reliable greenback, so much needed in the hands of the people, has been contracted and destroyed.

The policy of resumption has been to increase the burdens of debt to the present and future generations, while depriving them of the means of saving themselves from general bankruptcy. More than $2,000,000,000 of private, individual debts, based upon the highest considerations of value and of honor, have been wiped out by the bankrupt sponge, and thus repudiated under the pressure of this destructive policy during the last five years. I submit that the stigma of repudiation ought to be affixed to those who have caused widespread and general repudiation rather than to those who have at all times insisted on the strict fulfillment of every contract and obligation entered into by the Government with its own citizens as well as with all others.

In the meantime, however, the people whom I have the honor in part to represent, in order to enable them to meet the evils which are at present inevitable, with as little distress as possible, demand that resumption, whether a success or a failure, shall not rest on gold alone. They demand that all the resources of both the precious metals shall be brought to their assistance at this hard and trying period, and that if we are forced to have what is styled a specie basis it shall be as broad, as comprehensive, and as strong as the unlimited coinage of silver, as well as of gold, can make it. They make these demands in order that the volume of currency, supposed to rest on this basis, may be a full and ample one, equal to the wants of an active business throughout the country.

Nor is this in any sense a mere party issue. The producing classes of all parties and those engaged in the pursuits of trade think substantially alike upon it. It is in their behalf, whatever their party ties, that I have plead heretofore and plead now for financial reform, justice, relief, and honesty; and in their behalf I shall continue to struggle for these great ends as long as I take part in public affairs. Our financial system is the work of the Republican party, the result of nearly seventeen years of strictly partisan legislation, and to the leaders of that party, not to me, belongs its defense, if indeed any defense can ever be made for so much injustice and oppression inflicted on a long-suffering people.

Bayard Taylor's Real Name.

That Mr. Taylor's name was "James Bayard Taylor" was a statement printed in divers newspapers last spring. Mr. Taylor corrected it in a letter which has just been printed for the first time in the Wilmington Commercial. "I was named by my parents," he said, "simply 'Bayard,' after James A. Bayard, the grandfather of your Senator. As a boy of 16 or 17, I sometimes attached 'J.' (never James) to my name, foolishly thinking it would look better. When my first volume of poems came out, Rufus Griswold, my literary friend, put 'James Bayard Taylor' on the title page, and the small private edition was printed before I could correct it. The matter was an annoyance to me then, and has been ever since. I felt bound to retain the 'J.,' however, until I was 21 and became legally responsible for my signature. Then I dropped it instantly, and have never since used anything else than my original and only true name."

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THURSDAY, Jan. 9.—SENATE.—The Senate organized by resolution, declaring the following as the Senate's choice of officers: Daniel D. Dale (Democrat), Secretary; Charles W. Ward (National), Assistant Secretary; and Richard Hutcheson (Democrat), Doorkeeper. The Lieutenant Governor's vote was required to pass the resolution. Of three National Senators, Major voted with the Democrats, and Poindexter and Davis with the Republicans.... Bills were introduced fixing the rate of interest at 6 per cent.; making grave-robbery a felony instead of a misdemeanor; providing for a new system of keeping public accounts; for the abolition of the Superior Court in Wayne County; and for providing medical colleges with subjects for dissection.

HOUSE.—The House organized by electing Henry S. Cauthorne (Democrat), as Speaker; Webster Dixon (Democrat), Clerk; D. B. Wilson (Democrat), Doorkeeper.... A bill was introduced to fix the number of jurors at six instead of twelve.

FRIDAY, Jan. 10.—SENATE.—The Senate refused to ask the Attorney General for his opinion as to whether the sessions of the Legislature should or not extend over sixty-one working days.... Most of the session was occupied in discussing the resolution to provide Senators with the statutes, which was finally adopted.... After the Governor read his message, the contest of J. W. Lansberry for the seat of Senator Smith, of Delaware and Madison, was referred to the regular Committee on Elections. A motion to refer to a special committee was lost—30 to 18.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced: To abolish the office of Assessor in townships; for $1,000 homestead instead of $300; several to regulate the rate of interest, and one to apportion the State for Legislative and Congressional purposes.... When the Governor's message was read, a member attempted to have Washington's farewell address printed in connection with it, but, after an hour's humorous discussion, the motion was withdrawn.

MONDAY, Jan. 13.—SENATE.—Bills were introduced as follows: Providing for introduction as evidence of patents issued by the Governor on swamp lands; regulating the government of State prisons; providing for liability of married women on their contracts as merchants, and liens on their real estate for improvements; providing for loan of school fund at 6 per cent.; authorizing guardians to settle estates of deceased wards; to provide for voluntary assignments; to divide the State into Congressional districts; for regulation of fees and salaries of county officers; authorizing cities to charge a fee for the sale of liquor; to regulate the practice of medicine, and providing for the appointment of examiners in each county; authorizing the establishment of county workhouses, and authorizing the employment of prisoners on public highways.

HOUSE.—The following bills were introduced:—Abolishing the office of County Superintendent; changing highways; apportioning the State; enabling Clinton county to hold certain lands bought at Sheriff's sale; creating new judicial circuit; declaring agreement to pay attorneys' fees in notes void; regulating the annexation of contiguous territory to towns and cities; amending the law creating the Board of County Commissioners; regulating the issuing of orders on County Treasurers; codifying all laws relating to highway, road taxes, etc.... The contested election cases from the counties of Miami, Monroe and Blackford were referred to the Committee on Elections.

TUESDAY, Jan. 14.—SENATE.—The Governor's message was considered in committee of the whole, and appropriately referred.... Bills were introduced: Defining libel and describing the punishment therefor; allowing Judges of the Supreme Court to appoint clerks; organizing an asylum for feeble-minded children; regulating the working of coal mines; allowing aliens to acquire property by devise or descent; amending various sections of the code; to secure more efficient work and material in the execution of contracts for public improvements; abolishing the office of City Assessor; establishing Probate Courts; repealing the Savings Bank law; concerning the liabilities of married women; to suppress tippling-houses; reducing salaries of Circuit Judges to $1,500; to prevent grave-robbing; to prevent the clouding of titles to land. ....The special order being the consideration of constitutional amendments, they were read a first time and a further consideration postponed until to-morrow.

HOUSE.—The Auditor of the State was required to report the expenses of benevolent institutions for the past four years....A joint resolution was adopted instructing Indiana members of Congress to vote for a bill to put certain drugs on the free list....Bills were introduced: To tax the property of telegraph companies; creating a board of pardons; regulating appeals to the Supreme Court; defining contempts of court; limiting time of action against sureties to three years; giving county boards power to grant the privilege of carrying concealed weapons; regulating inquests of insanity; regulating the sale of bonds of cities and towns for the purpose of building school-houses; rendering any resident of a city or incorporated town eligible to the office of Township Trustee; providing for the election of three Special Judges; regulating contested elections; regulating the election of officers of the benevolent institutions; establishing judicial circuits and abolishing the office of County Commissioners; defining the duties of Coroner, and giving married women the same rights as unmarried women in certain cases.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 15.—SENATE.—A communication was received from the Governor recommending the establishment of a State Board of Health, and indorsing the report of the State Health Commission....The proposed constitutional amendments were read a second time, and made a special order for 10 o'clock to-morrow. They strike out the word "white" where it occurs; compel voters to live thirty days in a precinct before election, and in the township sixty; allow the passage of a Fee and Salary bill, according to the population of counties; put State elections in November instead of October; and restrict county taxation to 2 per centum.... The bill authorizing the appointment of separate clerks for the House and Senate Judiciary Committees was passed; also the House joint resolution to instruct our Representatives in Congress so vote for a bill to place certain medicines on the free list....Bills were introduced: repealing the act for organization of water-works companies; authorizing the organization of water-works companies; repealing the railroad aid law; requiring a mortgage to constitute a lien on real estate conveyed, and providing for appointment of school examiners....Resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Senator Beardsley were adopted.

HOUSE.—The Committee on Rights and Privileges were directed to prepare a bill establishing Probate Courts....Bills were introduced: To make the wife the head of the house when the husband is insane or unable to transact business; permitting married women to make contracts; changing the time when lien for city taxes takes effect; regulating the sale of liquor, and regulating the listing of property for taxation....The bill appropriating money to defray the expenses of the General Assembly was passed....Judge Osborn introduced a resolution instructing committees to strike the emergency clause from all bills. The consideration was postponed for the present....The remainder of the session was taken up by reading bills a second time and referring them to committees.

THURSDAY, Jan. 16.—SENATE.—The proposed constitutional amendments were adopted. They amend the constitution in substance as follows: Providing for a registration law; striking out the provision denying negroes the right of suffrage; fixing the time of holding all general elections in November, and providing a special election for Judges; to strike the word "white" from the constitution; grading fees and salaries according to population; vesting the judicial power of the State in the Supreme Court, Circuit Court, and such other courts as the General Assembly may establish; fixing the number of Supreme Judges at not less than five nor more than seven; limiting the indebtedness of municipal corporations to 2 per cent. of the value of its taxable property; limiting the length of regular sessions of the General Assembly to 121 days and special sessions to sixty days, and prohibiting the increase of salaries of members at a session at which a bill for such increase may be passed.

HOUSE.—A resolution was adopted instructing Senators and requesting Representatives in Congress to endeavor to have the salaries of Federal officers reduced....A committee was appointed to inquire into the practicability of codifying the criminal statutes.....The Committee on Education was directed to inquire if any children were deprived of school privileges on account of color....Bills were introduced: To abolish the office of Township Assessor; to protect wages of married women; to prevent the collection of toll on Sunday; relating to the relocation of county seats; enabling sureties of notes to file cross-complaints; appropriating $82,281.31 to pay Morgan-raid claims....Communications from the Governor in reference to the disposition of the Morgan-raid claims on file in his office, and concerning the transfer of the State's interest in the national cemetery at Antietam to the General Government, were read....A resolution approving Secretary Sherman's resumption policy was referred to the Committee on Federal Relations without debate.

BATTLEFORD, where the mercury indicated the polar temperature of 60 deg. below zero, is the capital of the British northwest territory, and is located not far from the confluence of the north and south branches of the Saskatchewan river. Noble county has three or four that we can just as well loan to our neighboring county as not. One of them at least is of no earthly use to any community.—Kendallville Standard.

Not any, thank you; DeKalb county Democrats will not be backward in asking for positions when they think the proper time has come.

In answer to the question, "Are you for Grant in 1880?" The LaGrange Standard, (republican) says: "No, not as things stand now. While we have great respect for his deeds of valor and wisdom in past administration, we prefer he should follow the precedent of the father of his country, and let two terms suffice. The republican party has a number of excellent men for the place. Any honest, able and true republican will suit us. We class Grant among that number, but we could name several others whom we would prefer."

Some people, ignorant of what good editing is, imagine the getting up of selected matter to be the easiest work in the world to do, whereas it is the nicest work that is done on a paper. If they find the editor with scissors in his hand, they are sure to say, "Eh! that's the way you get up original matter, eh?" accompanying their new and witty questions with an idiotic wink or smile. The facts are, that the interest, the morality, the variety and usefulness of, a paper depends, in no small degree, upon its selected matter, and few men are capable of the position who would not themselves be able to write many of the articles they select. A sensible editor desires considerable selected matter, because he knows that one mind cannot make so good a paper as five or six.

—QUERIES—If our Judge's health is so poor that he can not get into the court room until 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning, and then, can only sit on the bench five or six hours per day, would it not be right for his physician to advise him to cease "playing cards" just for the fun of the thing, after ten o'clock and not to continue such fun until 12 and 3 o'clock at night? If he must play cards for fun ought he not to resign his judgeship for the good of the people? Will his apologist—the COURIER please answer? *—Auburn Republican.

If Mr. * knows all about the Judge's health, and knows just how long he plays cards, and what he does when he don't play cards, it must be that he is an associate and is trying to give the Judge away, or else the Judge failed to "stand treat" and * wants revenge, one or the other, probably the latter. The Shreveport, (La) Times, gives the following account of the accident to the actress, Louise Pomeroy, which occurred recently on a southern railroad. "The coach was thrown violently over, when Miss Louise Pomeroy was precipitated across it and thrown through the window on the opposite side from where she was at the time sitting, or rather reclining. The coach was prevented from turning completely over by the bank against which the top of the coach rested. Miss Pomeroy's body was entirely out of the car in this position, with her head and face striking against the side of the embankment, she was dragged fifty or sixty feet. Her escape from instant death was almost miraculous. If it had not been for the embankment the coach would have crushed her, and if it had not been that she remained suspended from the window the wheels would almost certainly have run over her. As it is she received serious injury. Her head, throat and lip were cut by the glass, and one of her eyes is badly bruised. She also complains of a pain in the chest. Dr. Ford, who was called in, does not regard her injuries at all vital in themselves, but should pneumonia supervene the consequences would be serious."

DAN'S DAY.

Mr. Voorhees Elected to the Senate for Both Terms.

HE RECEIVES 26 VOTES IN THE SENATE AND 57 IN THE HOUSE.

The Result Hailed With Delight—The Jubilee at the Bates House Last Evening.

Indianapolis Sentinel.

The election of Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees as United States senator, to complete the unexpired term of and as successor to the late Senator Morton, was the most important event that occurred in this city yesterday. Hundreds of politicians and friends of the "Tall Sycamore" came from all parts of the State to join in the jubilee incident to the momentous occasion, and when the Senate and House of Representatives were called to order at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, there was scarcely an inch of standing room in either hall that was not occupied, and scores of people were disappointed in not being able to obtain admission. The progress of the vote was watched with almost breathless interest in each House. The result and the incidental proceedings are given in full in the regular report, which will be found on the third page of this morning's Sentinel but the enthusiasm awakened by the success of Mr. Voorhees can hardly be described. The announcement of the result in both Houses was received with earnest and prolonged applause. As will be seen by reference to the legislative report, Mr. Voorhees received 26 votes in the Senate and 57 in the House, or 83 in all, the majority of the Nationals giving him their support. Major Gordon, the Representative from this county, rose to the courage of his convictions and declined to vote for Orth, casting his ballot for Gen. Shackelford. The triumph of Mr. Voorhees was hailed by local and visiting Democrats with demonstrations of approval and delight.

THE JUBILEE AT THE BATES HOUSE

As soon as the result was ascertained the Hon. John Lamb of Terre Haute, rushed to the telegraph office and forwarded the following dispatch.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 21, 1879

Hon D. W. Voorhees, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

You have just been elected United States senator for both terms, by the concurrent vote of both houses.

You received 26 votes in the Senate and 57 in the House.

Governor Hendricks joins me in sending a hearty congratulation.

JOHN LAMB.

Last evening Mr. Lamb and various other members of the Terre Haute delegation entertained the Democracy at rooms 11 and 12 Bates House, where a general good time was had until near midnight. The following answer to Mr. Lamb's dispatch was received during the evening and was read to the assembled friends of Senator Voorhees:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 21, 1879.

Hon. John Lamb, Bates House, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Yours received.... The result exceeds my most sanguine expectation, and fills my heart with feelings of the profoundest gratitude to the people of Indiana, and to the faithful representatives of the people. I will labor to justify their great and generous confidence by increasing devotion to their interests and to the true vindication of the true principles of Democracy.

D. W. VOORHEES.

The reading of the dispatch was received with cheers. Brief, happy, pointed and jubilant speeches were made by Hon. Franklin Landers, Judge Turpie, Hon. Cyrus McNutt, Representative Faulkner of Ripley County, Hon. Charles Jewett of Scott County, Hon. John E. Lamb of Terre Haute, Secretary-of-State Shanklin and others. At the conclusion of the speaking three cheers were given for Senator Voorhees, and repeated again and again. The rooms were thronged by members of the Legislature and prominent Democrats throughout the evening, and the utmost good feeling prevailed over the glorious triumph of the popular will.

At noon to day Captain Fred. Fant will fire a salute of 83 guns at the State House yard, in honor of the votes given Mr. Voorhees, which will be a fitting conclusion to the general glorification

We are now about entering a golden age. For eighteen years we have been in the wilderness of "paper promises." With this golden age we are to have an immediate revival of business. All over the land manufactories that have been closed for years are at once to be opened to the laborer. The mills, shops, foundries and other establishments are again to give employment to the thousands who have been idle for years. The industrious people are soon to have employment, and peace, plenty and gladness are to fill the land. At least, we are told so by the organs of the Money Power. We sincerely hope this picture of good times will be realized, but we fear these promises are but delusions. The men who are to-day controlling both parties in the United States were but boys of ten and twelve years of age when the banks suspended specie payments in 1861, and the banks have only resumed this month. They have been in a state of suspension for eighteen long years. We want the readers of the Enquirer to be well informed on all subjects concerning their interest, and we, therefore, take this opportunity of showing them how often the banks of this country have suspended specie payments in fifty-two years, and they will thus be enabled to judge for themselves how long the golden period that we are now entering will last. The banks of the United States—banks of issue—have been compelled to suspend specie payments at various times since the beginning of the century, viz.:

In............1809 In............1837
In............1814 In............1841
In............1819 In............1857
In............1825 In............1861
In............1834

Making nine suspensions of specie payments in fifty-two years, and at each time they brought ruin and desolation on thousands upon thousands of the people of this country; and yet, with all the calamities they brought upon the people, their explosions cost the people less than if they had continued to exist. The best banks are the ones that break. As General Sheridan said. "The good Indian is the dead Indian."

—Cincinnati Enquirer

The Asiatic Plague.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

During the war the people of the North were shocked and horrified beyond expression, almost paralyzed, indeed, by a rumor wafted upon the wings of the Southern wind. This rumor was to the effect that a proposition had been made in the Southern Confederacy to disseminate disease throughout the North by the distribution of a large quantity of clothing infected with yellow fever. This rumor, happily, proved to be but the creation of a disordered fancy, but it served to arouse the indignation of the civilized world, and all Christendom held up its hands in holy horror that men could be so vile. Language was scarcely strong enough to denounce in terms sufficiently scathing the wretch so base as to conceive so heartless revenge upon a people with whom his people were yet at war. At the most, if the alleged diabolical plan had been carried to a successful execution, it could only have cost a few hundreds, mayhap thousands, of lives, and desolated as many hearthstones.

For twenty-five years the people of this country have witnessed, calmly and unmoved, the in-pour through the Golden Gate of a plague in comparison with which yellow fever is a blessing. It is a pestilence which carries in its train not only rapid physical decay and degradation, but moral disease and death. It has already converted California—the fairest of all the sisterhood of States—into the land of the Hoodlum and the Slough of Despond for the laboring people. It has desolated the homes of thousands of able and willing working men, and driven them into crime and poverty, into the Penitentiary or the Poor-houses. It has stolen their labor, robbed their pockets, plundered their households, destroyed their happiness, and is starving their wives and slaying their children. It has infected and depreciated property wherever it has made its appearance, rendering it unfit for human habitation. It has blighted towns and cities, made fields desolate, families homeless, barred progress, blasted prosperity, and the good name and fair fame of the sunny land of the West is mangled and disgraced. It has contaminated the youth, corrupted the old, poisoned all the sources of physical and moral health, and polluted the glorious atmosphere of the Pacific Coast. Under its blighting influence California is fast becoming in fact if not in name, a lesser Asia, with its deadly lethargy and its damnable slavery. It is a locomotive pestilence, against which ordinary quarantine restrictions are of no avail. It is attended by filth and famine, poverty and rags, want and woe, crime and despair. Lift the roof off the horrible hovels in which it makes its congenial home, and humanity would fain hide its eyes from the seething, festering mass of unutterable corruption which wriggles and writhes beneath.

The black pall of this Asiatic pestilence already hangs over half the homes of the otherwise happy, and prosperous people of the Pacific Coast. The gloomy shadow, portentous of coming evil, is slowly but surely advancing eastward. It has crossed the Sierra Nevadas, crossed the Rocky Mountains, and is steadily creeping across the great plains of the West. Ere many years, unless checked by an effective Congressional quarantine, it will hover like the black wing of death over the devoted homes of the beautiful Mississippi and Ohio Valleys. Wherever that shadow falls perpetual night ensues, and all things bright and lovely wither and die. It is a blacker night than that of death, for this darkness never lifts, no ray of light can struggle through, there is no rift in the cloud of gloom which envelopes all the living in its funereal folds. Will Congress and the people be warned and wise in time?

We heartily endorse the following from the Wabash Courier, in reference to the English apportionment bill. "The bills apportioning the state for legislative purposes seem to be based upon something like justice. If the State voted as in 1878 and all the Senators were to be elected the Senate would be likely to stand thirty Democrats to twenty republicans. On the basis of the last vote the House would contain sixty democrats to forty republicans. This would seem entirely fair in that the State is Democratic by 14,000 majority. But we unhesitatingly pronounce the English Congressional apportionment a gerrymander which lacks but little of being as wicked as that engineered through the Legislature by the late Senator Morton. The State is democratic by a large majority and a majority of the Congressmen should be Democrats. * * * * In the late campaign the Democratic press and speakers denounced with hot indignation the infamy of the present apportionment and promised the people that the wrong would be righted if the Democrats secured control of the Legislature. That control was secured, and these promises were not ineffective agents in bringing about the good result. And now shall the Democrats be so forgetful of their pledges as to enact a bill of this character? Let us hope not. It is by no means so great an outrage as the present apportionment, but yet is not founded upon exact justice and should not receive the sanction of the Democratic members of the Legislature. * * * * Perfidy, though it may give a present advantage, will in the end work out the ruin of the party. Nothing tended more to destroy the supremacy of the Republican party in Indiana than the infamous gerrymander saddled upon the State by Morton. Let the Democrats of the Legislature remember this; they can draw wisdom, if they will, from the downfall of the Republican party. But if they wish to sign the death warrant of the Democracy in Indiana, let them give their sanction to the English gerrymander. The Courier is desirous that the Democrats shall have every advantage which their 14,000 majority warrants, but not one jot or tittle more." It is a question whether the English apportionment bills originated in the mind of W. E. English. It is generally understood that the Indianapolis politicians all took a hand in the business, with a view to the accommodation of the congressional aspirants of Marion county, and other favorites formerly from the eastern section of the state. A little plain talk by the Democratic press of the rural districts, is in order just now.

John Carter, the Kosciusko county greenbacker, has commenced a second suit for damages, against Gen. Reub. Williams of the Indianan and several other gentleman of that county. It appears that Messrs. J. A. Piper, Wm. Thompson, Isaac Powell, J. W. Crabb and Denison Rapp, were induced by Carter to subscribe and pay for the ADVOCATE a greenback paper published in New York, which paper proved to be a fraud. These gentlemen signed a communication which was published in the Indianian, charging Carter with swindling them out of their money. That is the ground upon which the present suit for damages is based. The suit no doubt will terminate as nine out of ten of such suits do—in a verdict in favor of the defendants; yet the trouble and vexation incident to such proceedings over balance the worthless character of the plaintiff, and would seem to authorize a publisher to continue in the work of writing up the rotten transactions of that class of irresponsible dead beats whenever opportunity offers. Gen. Williams has the ability to take his own part, and we predict a lime-kiln temperature for Carter during the time he remains within range of the Indianian.

Jayhawker says W. E. English, of the Indiana House of Representatives, has introduced a bill to license the standing of horses and jacks. It may be that he has some ability in that line; if he has, it would be well enough for him to display it to a better advantage than he has his ability to form congressional districts. We advise him to look well to his jack bill, and have it so constituted as to meet his own wants as he will certainly be written down an ass if he urges the passage of his pet scheme to gerrymander the state in the interest of one or two congressional aspirants.

—MR. EDITOR:—Please give this room in your paper, I noticed a communication from Butler which I think needs a little explanation. In the first place the statement is true, but now why was the change made. It was made for two good reasons, the first is, because the trustee thought they having a large school, needed an old and experienced teacher. Second, to give Mr. McOscar a small school for his first. Now for law, the law says that school meetings are not authorized to designate or employ teachers. I think it would be well for the communicant to go around and explain the meaning of the law. As regards the former trustees, the first, Mr. Sewell, according to the record, hired 36 teachers, and only 12 on conditions, except the law. Mr. Ash hired 40 and only 23 conditionally. Those conditions were to quit the school when the daily attendance was less than ten unless sickness prevents. If such a contract is needed why does not our law makers so make it. I would not like to be a teacher if the parents could turn me out just because I am not good looking. The law says a teacher can be dismissed for incompetency, immorality, cruelty or general neglect. If those are not grounds sufficient, please send the communicant to Indianapolis to help make improvements in the law. Furthermore the communicant told in the trustees house that he had nothing against Mr. Thurstin, only the complaint of his neighbors and he went with them. Mr. J. Rohrbaugh told the trustee the same thing. Now I never kept my children out of school to please my neighbors, although I like to please. Further, it appears up to this time Mr. Thurstin was not so repugnant, when he would go there and teach their children at Sunday school. The trustee desires all, where they can, to choose their own teacher. More anon. *

Newville.

—Mr. Byron Woodcox is lying dangerously ill, is not expected to recover.

—Mr. Arrants is lying dangerously ill, and as he is a very old man it is not likely that he will recover.

—We are going to have another store in Newville in a few days. Mr. G. H. Munn and J. W. Miller, in the brick, once occupied by Mood & Rodarmer, and since by G. H. Munn.

—The ice harvest has stopped for a few days. We thought that Hicksville would remove the St. Joe river over there, but perhaps the saloons got scarce of funds since resumption took place and had to stop to recuperate.

Exquisite Odors.

The Unique Perfumes made by Dr. Price are the favorite perfumes for the handkerchief and toilet. His Floral Riches surpasses in rich, fresh, flowery fragrance, any other Cologne or Toilet Water. Dr. Price's Pet Rose, Alista Bouquet, and other extracts are ecstatic.

The New Store.

Nicholas Ensley has concluded to stock up the New Store with Miss Hogue, and has ordered a large stock of new goods which will be received and opened out the last of this week. Dress goods a speciality, and will be sold at Fort Wayne prices. Remember the place, east of the Public Square, Auburn, Ind.

Our Family Bread.

Truly, the most important adulterations to avoid are those which are calculated to injure the "staff of life." Merchants who supply their customers with pure articles like Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, retain better patrons, have a larger trade, and make more money than those who recommend cheap adulterated powders.

—Last week Toni. Biglow, of Hicksville, Defiance Co, well known to most of our citizens, was arrested on the charge of rape, preferred by Sarah A. Schooley. The charge is for three acts committed by said Biglow on the person of said Plaintiff. At the trial before F. M. Thompson, J. P. Biglow was bound over to court in the sum of $2,000. Biglow now languishes in jail awaiting his trial before Judge Owen, which will probably take place next week.—Edgerton Herald.

—Mr. Greelye's six words of advice to young men would be an appropriate motto for the biographical sketches of the Lieutenant-Governor of Colorado. Not long ago he was a stone-cutter in Augusta, Me., and when he went West he opened a miners' store in Leadville, Col. Now he is worth $5,000,000, owns two mines, from which he receives thousands a day, is president of a bank and proprietor of a large wholesale store, and has been Postmaster. Westward ho!

—A meteoric stone fell near Newton, Fountain county recently, going through the roof of a house, killing Leonidas Glover, a farmer, while asleep in his bed, passing through his body and the floor, and sinking deep into the earth beneath. The aerolite weighs 13 or 14 pounds, is of an irregular pyramidal shape, and in texture resembles a mass of fused iron ore. It is dotted here and there with blood stains. It is now on exhibition in the show window of an Indianapolis jewelry store.

—Coal stoves give promise of becoming valuable aids to the Coroner and undertaker, as already this winter a number of persons in various sections of the State have come within an ace of losing their lives by suffocation form the gas and smoke which sometimes escapes from them. At Greensburg, on the night of the 9th inst., Roger Sheely and family were nearly suffocated from the escaping gas of a coal stove in the room where they were sleeping. Great caution should be exercised by persons who sleep in rooms warmed by coal stoves, otherwise they may sleep the sleep that knows no waking.—Wabash Courier.

—Miss Irving Neilson, of New York, in a recent lecture shot at Bob. Ingersoll as follows: "Col. Robert Ingersoll is no puny, straggling weed in the current against Christianity, according to my idea, but a hardy plant. The devil is not the biggest fool alive. In view of what Ingersoll preaches, Satan was extraordinarily livelheaded in entering into contract with him. It is another illustration of how the gentleman in red tights can wield a man when he has a clutch on his coat collar and dominion over his brain."

—Mr. Westwood of Mount Auburn, Ohio, was worth $65,000 when his first wife died. Her industry and management had been to a great extent the cause of his prosperity, and he gratefully spent $1,400 in putting a monument over her grave. He soon married again, and his second wife rapidly wasted his fortune until he had no property left except the monument. According to the new Mrs. Westwood's advice, he had it removed to a marble yard, effaced the inscription, and offered it for sale at half its original cost.

"Stiff" Snatching—Waterloo has the Honor (?)

As we are informed, a young man by the name of Little, generally known in this community as "Jim Bootblack," died and was buried at Waterloo last Tuesday, some time during the night his body was taken up, placed in a large trunk and shipped to Fort Wayne, where it was handled rather roughly by the baggageman, and being of considerable weight the trunk burst and the body was exposed to view. Parties at Waterloo were notified, who proceeded to Fort Wayne, secured the body and took it back to Waterloo for re-interment yesterday evening. We have not learned whether the parties who done the stealing have been recognized or not.

How to Buy a Horse.

The Rural New Yorker says: "An intending purchaser should have the horse brought out before him, and watch the animal as he stands at rest. If the owner is continually starting the horse into motion, and urging him to 'show off,' something may be suspected, because it is when the horse is at perfect rest that his weak points are divulged. If the horse be sound, he will stand square on his limbs, without moving any of them, the feet being placed flat on the ground, and all his legs plumb and naturally poised. If one foot be thrown forward, and the toe pointing to the ground and the heel raised; or, if the foot be lifted from the ground, and the weight taken from it, disease or tenderness may be suspected."

A Happy Crowd.

On last Thursday evening about five o'clock Mr. D. K. Houghton appeared upon the street with his four-in-hand and the "Long John," ready to receive those invited to enjoy the pleasures of a sleighing party of the old fashioned sort. It was not long until the seats were all occupied and, standing room was at a premium, yet all seemed to realize that "there is always room for one more" and accordingly "doubled up" as each succeeding party got aboard. All being ready the team was headed toward Fairfield township, and it was not long until the human cargo was safely landed at the door of Mr. Jesse M. Brumback, where commodious quarters and comfortable fires were appreciated and enjoyed by all. Mrs. Brumback, the estimable lady of the house, was not long in preparing a most excellent supper which was relished by the entire party, consisting of Dr. and Mrs. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McIntyre Mr. and Mrs. Willis, Dr. and Mrs. Cowan, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Plumb, Mr. and Mrs. Coop Ralston, Mr. and Mrs. Wright, Mr. and Mrs. McQuiston, Mr. and Mrs. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. H. Weaver, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Elson, Mr. and Mrs John Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. A. Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. M. Houston, Mr. and Mrs. Coder, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Stamets, Mrs. Klotz, Mrs. Tefft, Miss Ida Wright, of Greenville, Mich., Mrs. Ryan, Miss Frankie Ryan, Miss Belle Tritch, Miss Lida Powers, Miss Lillie McTigh, Mrs. Kline, the writer hereof and his better-half. All agreed that the occasion was a happy one, that the evening had been pleasantly and sociably spent.

A cat-aplasm was unceremoniously applied to the face of Mrs. Kline, which somewhat relaxed the skin, and Dr. Ford was troubled with tooth-ache, caused by an unsolicited application of ice, otherwise nothing occurred to mar the pleasures of the evening.

While the sleighing party was enjoying the evening at the residence of Mr. J. M. Brumback, we stole away and took a lamp-light view of the fine herd of short-horns of which Mr. B. is the lucky and happy possessor. Of course the opportunity for judging qualities was not so favorable as if it had been day-light, yet we are satisfied that the stock shown is far ahead of anything we have yet seen in the county. We hope to be able during the coming season to visit that and others of the best farms in the county, and present to the public a description of the different kinds of stock raised by our enterprising farmers.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Catharine Gonser died at her residence near Hudson, Steuben county, Ind., January 17th, 1879, aged 83 years 3 months and 29 days.

She was born in Lancaster county, Pa., Sept. 19th, 1795. When but a girl her parents removed to the state of Virginia, and from thence to Tuscarawas county, Ohio. Here she was joined in marriage to Daniel Gonser in the year 1814. Soon after their marriage her husband was drafted into the United States service and served as a soldier in the war with Great Britian. She removed with her husband to DeKalb county, Ind., in the year 1848, where she resided until death. She was the mother of ten children, nine of whom are yet living—five are residents of DeKalb county. She united with the Lutheran church when but fifteen years of age, and lived a consistent christian until her death, a period of over sixty-eight years. Although a great sufferer, she bore her afflictions with christian fortitude and resignation, and possessed presence of mind to the last moments of life. She could say with the Apostle Paul, "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day." She fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle or murmer. For her to die was gain. Her funeral services took place at Fairfield Center, Sunday, Jan. 19th. My the Lord console and comfort the bereaved friends.

L. RICE.

[The deceased was the mother of Mr. Daniel Gonser, County Treasurer, and was perhaps the only person in DeKalb county who drew a pension for the war of 1812. ED.]

Our American Magazines.

The marvelous beauty of the illustrated magazines of this country is attracting attention throughout the world. The edition of Scribner in England has doubled within a few months. The London correspondent of the New-York Times says: "The whole lot of magazine annuals (English) put together, are not equal in pictorial art to a single number of Scribner's Monthly." In Children's Periodicals, too, America leads the world with St. Nicholas. Prof. Proctor, the astronomer, writes from London: "What a wonderful magazine it is for the young folks! Our children are quite as much delighted with it as American children can be. I will not say they are more delighted, as that may not be possible." At first glance one would say, literature, art, and cheapness can no further go—but in this country intelligence is so widespread, and artistic culture is so extended, that there is scarcely any end to the demand for such magazines as Scribner's for grown-ups and St. Nicholas for children, and, as the sale of these publications increases their conductors will no doubt continue to add new features of excellence and attraction.

Special Announcement.

On and after January 1st, 1879, the publishers or any book-seller or newsdealer will supply the numbers of St. Nicholas for Nov. and Dec. 1878, free (i. e., fourteen numbers for the subscription price, $3.00) to any new subscriber for 1879. The November number, the first of the volume, contains the opening chapters of a Serial for Boys—"A Jolly Fellowship," by Frank R. Stockton, to run through the year; and a Serial for Girls, by Susan Coolidge, begins in February, while the entire volume will be crowded with good things by the best writers and artists. Price, $3.00 a year. Scribner & Co., 743 Broadway, N. Y.

Harper's Magazine for February, 1879

Harper's Magazine for February, while making a marked impression by the extraordinary beauty of its illustrations, is even more remarkable for the temptations by which it solicits a reading, and for the satisfaction it gives the reader. The exquisite illustrations of Mr. Beard's article, "The Treasures of the Deep," do not sugar-coat a pill: the letter-press is as entertaining as the pictures. Mr. Benjamin's second paper on Southern France presents some very novel illustrations, but he tells a story of what he saw in a recent trip in a way so interesting that we could even ignore the pencillings of the artist. Phebe Earle Gibbons writes about "French Farmers," without the accompaniment of engravings, but her portraiture is so close and faithful that every paragraph is a picture. Probably the most popular thing in the Number is Will Carleton's humorous and pathetic poem, "Our Travelled Parson," with three exceedingly happy illustrations by Abbey.

THE DEAD AND THE NEW YEAR.

With solemn stroke and slow,
The great clock strikes the blow
That seals the closing year!

And while the hollow sound
Sweeps all the city round,
Falls many a sigh and tear.

Tears for some precious dead,
Sighs o'er some treasures fled,
Both from the breaking heart!

"Oh thou relentless year,
To what far-distant sphere
Dost thou from earth depart?"

I spake, and thought to trace
The dying year's wild race,
By modern lore or art.

The dead year answered not—
[illegible]
To pierce me like a dart.

But at my side I see
The young year's majesty.
Flushed with the morning's dawn.

"Tell me thou year," I cry,
"How dost thou prophesy?
What lot for me hast drawn?"

To my low cry he said:
"Lift up thy drooping head.
Nor let wild fear dismay.

"For while I may not tell
What in my months may dwell,
This I may kindly say:

"Howe'er thy life may run,
With prizes lost or won,
Peace give I thee to-day."

Then from the far-off sky
Fell forth some angel's cry,
In falling Christmas lay:

"Glory to the King new born,
Glory to the New Year's morn,
Peace to the world to-day."

"To-day, but how to-morrow?
Has that its cup of sorrow?"
But all the year would say,

Lifting his young wings to soar:
"I can tell no more, no more—
Peace be to thee to-day."

Bethune Duffield.

LOCKED INTO A TOMB.

"Well, what's the news, Colby?" said I, getting down from the stage at the D—— House, in one of the pretty little villages on the Androscoggin, "and how goes the old place?"

"Oh, the town is behaving itself as well as usual. It isn't a place for news, you know," said Colby, leading the way to the register. "Only," lowering his voice—"only Burt Slater, you remember Burt?"

"Yes, indeed! What of him?"

"He's got the 'jim-jams' again!"

"Again! I'm sorry for that!"

"Well, he has; awful, too! There are two men with him in his room over the L. Both of them can hardly hold him."

I felt sorry, indeed, for the poor fellow, for I had known and respected him for his manly qualities. He kept a neat and well-ordered livery-stable near the hotel, and even now he was scarcely 19 years old. But, though a boy in years, Burt was every inch a man, genial, handsome, obliging.

He was a fellow, too, who always had his business at his fingers' ends. He could tell you, days ahead, just what horses were engaged, and what he could do for you if you wished to engage a team, and, when the time came, you could rely on him to the hour and minute.

Yet he never used an order-book. His memory was so tenacious and accurate that he could safely rely upon it for his ordinary business, and but for this one failing—drink—he would have been a favorite with every man in the village.

In Burt's case there was this excuse for him. His grandfather and father (now dead) had been tavern-keepers in New Hampshire, where rum, in their day, was used as freely as water.

Burt had been brought up in the odor of a bar-room, so to speak, and his father had been a drinking man. I am sure that poor Burt had inherited an appetite for alcohol.

Much as I condemned and lamented his bad habit, I was pleased with him, and liked to be in his company. It was a pleasure to spend an hour in his room, he was so good natured and cheerful. I was very often saddened, too. For, though ordinarily bright and witty, there was always, when we chanced to speak of personal matters, a certain hopelessness in his way of alluding to himself, as of one "booked" for a premature grave.

Burt did not drink habitually. About once in three or four months, an ungovernable desire for alcohol came over him, and he would drink incessantly for three or four days. These excesses could not fail to result in delirium tremens.

When Colby told me of this second attack of this fearful disease, my heart sunk, for it seemed that Burt must now be utterly lost. And as there are thousands of similar cases, the country over, I should hardly deem this one likely to interest the reader, but for a strange incident that led Burt Slater to rise from a condition that is ordinarily as hopeless as death itself.

I did not see Burt that week. He kept, or rather was kept, to his room, and I did not care to see him. In the course of a fortnight, however, he was once more at his work; and, during all the rest of the summer and fall, up to November, he did not indulge in intoxicating drink. One bleak, windy November morning, however, the insane appetite again rose up within him. He wandered round with parched lips and blood-shot eyes, suffering almost unendurable torment from his raging thirst. At last, he harnessed one of his horses and rode down to L——, twelve miles distant, hoping, as he afterward told me, that the piercing cold would help him to overcome his raging thirst.

Having arrived at L——, he put up his horse at a stable where he was known, and began to walk the streets, still hoping to overcome the burning desire for alcohol.

But the appetite was more than h could control, and, yielding to it at last, he went into a saloon, and, after taking one glass, he gave himself up to utter indulgence.

At night, when he again went to the stable, he could scarcely stand, and seemed so unconscious of what he was about that the men would not let him have his horse, and tried to have him go into the hotel and stay until morning.

It was already late in the afternoon, and the weather was bitterly cold, but he would not heed their good counsel, and, instead of going back into the hotel, he started to walk home, twelve miles distant.

About half a mile out of the town, the road forks, the right branch leading out toward the river into a grove, where there is a large cemetery. By this time Burt did not know one road from another, and, taking the wrong one, he got into the cemetery, where he staggered round hopelessly lost.

It happened that there had been a funeral that afternoon, and a coffin had been deposited in one of the tombs, the door of which had not yet been closed. It was late when the funeral procession left the cemetery, and the gate still stood open, otherwise Burt would not have entered it.

The wind was piercingly cold, and, though hardly conscious of it, Burt, to escape it, reeled through the open door into the tomb, and tumbled down in one corner.

He either fell asleep or became utterly insensible from the liquor he had drank, for what followed till toward morning is a blank to him. He must have been very quiet, too, for the sexton, on his late rounds, closed and locked the door of the tomb without seeing or hearing anything of him.

It was not until some hours had passed Burt came to himself, somewhat, and began to wonder where he was. He lay for some time, trying, in a dull, heavy way, to solve this difficult problem. The air felt cold and damp. He was in darkness. He put out his hand. It touched a cold stone. Upon this, he started, with a shudder, to his feet, though he was so benumbed that he staggered and fell back against the wall of the tomb.

Was he in prison? Had he committed murder or some other criminal offense while he was drunk?

The thought so appalled him that it cleared his brain to some extent of the effects of the alcohol. For the one thing which Burt had always feared more than anything else was that on one of his "sprees" he should kill some person.

He felt in his pockets, found a match, and lighted it. By its dim light, he made the horrible discovery that he was in a tomb along with the dead.

As yet, he could recall little or nothing of last evening's doings. How he had got there, or who had put him there, or for what purpose, was more than he could divine. At first, he thought that he must have been taken for dead, and put in there to wait for a post-mortem examination, or something of that sort.

But this idea was too improbable for him to entertain long; and there was even less probability that he had been put there for a joke.

Then he lighted more matches, and tried the door. It was a heavy iron door, and securely bolted; for he could not move it.

Then he shouted for help till he made himself hoarse; but the echo of his own voice, as it resounded through the pent-up resting-place of the dead, was his only reply.

Now Burt was not a person to be alarmed without good cause; so, with more composure than might be supposed, he sat down on a coffin and took account of his chances. They were not flattering. The only thing that he could be sure of was the fact that he was in a tomb, with the door locked, and with a very poor prospect, so far as he could see, of getting out. The place was close and noisome to the last degree; and, even if not suffocated, he might have to remain there till he would be starved or frozen to death.

He had a loaded revolver in his under-coat pocket. He took it out, thinking whether it would not be better to use it and end his life. For, even if he should live to get out of this horrible place, his fate, with his present habit, was only a question of time. That bullet would in one instant end it all.

"For a moment," so he afterward told me, "it was a toss-up which I should do, die then and there, or live on, if I could, and face temptation again."

Then there came better thoughts. He thought of his business; thought of what he might make it if it were not for his bad habits. He thought, too, of a dear lady friend who had never quite lost faith in him; and then, by contrast, of what he was, and where he was at that moment; his life, too, and his duty to other people, as well as to himself, came to his mind in new lights. "What a fool I've been!" he said. "Worse than that, a weakling and a coward!"

There was ample scope here for thought, certainly, and Burt did more serious thinking then than he had ever done in his life before. The result was that he put his pistol in his pocket, and, in a better frame of mind, looked higher than his own rash arm for aid.

"I had never prayed, nor been taught to pray," he said to me, "but I honestly said aloud, that if God would give me one chance more I would try to be a better man, and lead a decent and honorable life."

And the Great Father of all, hearing Burt Slater say these words, knew that he meant them.

Having done this, he sat back and waited his fate with a certain fortitude and stoicism which those who know his character would understand better than a stranger. Morning came, but no cheery light found its way into the tomb where he sat. The day dragged on. The place was stifling and unutterably noxious. Benumbed and faint, and poisoned by the unhealthy gases, Burt at last fell asleep—a sleep, perhaps, from which he might never have waked on earth.

Meantime Colby, at the D—— House, was anxious about him; he had watched him drive off the previous morning, and feared it was not for a good purpose. After dinner that day, as Burt did not come back, he took Burt's hostler with him and drove down to L——. The watch-dog at the stable, "Old Beave," went along with them.

They went to the boarding-stable where Burt had put up his horse. They found the animal still there, and learned what they could regarding him.

The hostler took Burt's driving-gloves out of the carriage and threw them down to the dog, then told him to "find Burt."

Beave ran about the stable, then up to the hotel, and after a while he ran off along the D—— road.

Colby and the hostler followed as fast as they could run, and saw the dog go into the cemetery. When they came up he was at the tomb snuffing at the door.

"Oh, come away from there, you fool!" exclaimed Colby.

"Not too fast, now," said the hostler. "That dog is nobody's fool!"

They went up to the tomb door.

"Burt!" Colby shouted, incredulously.

There was no answer, though the call had partly roused Burt from his sleep.

"Burt, you ain't in there, are ye?"

"Yes, I am," came faintly through the heavy door.

Both men uttered an exclamation of surprise, Colby a very forcible one. The hostler tried the door, and then ran to find the sexton, and in a short time they had Burt out of the tomb.

"Well, how'd ye get in there?" asked Colby.

"I don't now quite recollect," replied Burt, gravely.

The two men looked steadily but expressively at each other a moment; then Colby said:

"Burt, I wouldn't drink any more if I were you."

"I'm not going to," said Burt, quietly.

The hostler grinned. The astonished sexton locked the tomb again, and the three young men returned to their homes.

These events occurred more than three years ago. Young Slater has kept his word thus far, and has proved himself a capable, honest business man. His craving for stimulants is not yet wholly quenched. At times he experiences it; but it is less strong, and is slowly but surely growing weaker.

If this man can reform, I believe it is in the power of every drunkard cursed by an appetite for intoxicating liquor to throw it off and become master of himself.—Youth's Companion.

Beecher and Moulton.

How splendid Beecher's people stand by him! He received 1,300 calls yesterday—300 more than last year, whose New Year fell on a much pleasanter day. It speaks volumes for the affectionate fidelity of the human heart that so many good men and women have followed him up and down the ragged edge of remorse and despair, lived with him in the cave of gloom, seen him on his knees before Theodore Tilton, and read his passionate self-accusation without losing confidence in him. But Frank Moulton is popular with his friends, too. I saw him a moment yesterday, making calls, red-headed, breezy, agreeable as ever, and he is getting rich; and Mrs. Moulton that, "slice of the day of judgment," is the center of a large and admiring social circle; and Tilton lectures to big audiences; and Bowen's Independent stands at the head of religious newspapers; and Leonard Bacon, the Mephistopheles of the whole affair, flourishes in New Haven. So, hurrah for everybody!—ah, everybody, if you please, except the poor woman, who, whatever the facts, was the victim of the tragedy; who lives in the depths of woe, deserted by Mr. Beecher, and repudiated by Plymouth Church, which at first supported her, fed by the contemptuous hand of charity extended by him who was once her husband! It is pitiful!

While I was writing the above paragraph Frank Carpenter came in.

I asked him who it was that Beecher alluded to last week before a Sunday-school, when he said that he had recently rode in the cars near a man who had once been his friend, and they did not see each other all day.

"Why," said Carpenter, "that was Moulton. I dined with Frank the other day and he told me about it. They meet repeatedly, but never speak, of course. The worst of it was that, during the ride, Frank's overcoat got into Beecher's seat somehow, and the old fellow was going to carry it off by mistake, when Frank sent the conductor and recovered it. Then, when they got to Utica, where Beecher was to lecture in the evening, and the Mutual Friend was to address the Dairy Convention the next day, they were seated, by the ingenious dining-room Mogul, face to face at the table. Frank told friends seated with him a story of a Frenchman who sold, for $2 apiece, macaw eggs that hatched ducks, and, when the purchaser of the eggs wanted his money back, the Frenchman said: 'Non! non! By no meence! I can gif no moneys back. I cannot be responsible for de morals of my micaw!' Beecher smothered a five-gallon laugh in his napkin, and the apoplectic effort sent the blood clear up to the top of his head."—New York Cor. Indianapolis Journal.

Wonderful Spider's Web.

Across the "sunny paths" of Ceylon, where the forest meets the open country, and which constitute the bridle-roads of the island, an enormous spider stretches his web at the height of from four to eight feet from the ground. The cordage of these webs is fastened on either side to protecting shoots of trees or shrubs, and is so strong as to hurt the traveler's face, and even lift off his hat, if he is so unlucky as not to see the line. The nest in the center is sometimes as large as a man's head, and is continually growing larger, as it is formed of successive layers of old webs rolled over each other, sheet after sheet, into a ball. These successive envelopes contain the wings and limbs of insects of all descriptions, which have been the prey of the spider and his family who occupy the den formed in their midst. There seems to be no doubt that the spider casts the web loose and rolls it round the nucleus in the center, when it becomes overcharged with carcasses, and proceeds to construct a fresh one, which in its turn is destined to be folded up with the rest.

In St. Joseph, Mo., a city of 30,000 inhabitants, a big gray wolf came out from its den under a slaughter house, one day last week, and attacked a boy, who beat it off, got a gun and killed it.

Felt bonnets embroidered with gold are among the novelties.

BODY-BURNING.

Cremation Growing in Favor in Europe and America—Twenty-seven Bodies Burned at Milan—The Furnace at Gotha.

[From the New York World.]

During the year that has just closed the cause of cremation made not a little progress in Europe and at least held its own here. The subject is very widely and earnestly discussed, and that is a sufficient proof of vitality. Italy has taken the lead in introducing this new—or, rather, in reviving this old—system of disposing of the bodies of the dead, and Milan continues to avail herself most generously of the advantages of the crematorium. Until some two years ago cremation could not be practiced in Italy without a special permission from the Minister of the Interior, but now all that is needed is the sanction of the Prefect of the province, which is given where the relatives and the cremation society make a joint petition to dispose of the body by burning. The methods of burial in many Italian cities leave much to be desired, even leaving out of consideration the expense. A decent funeral in the cemetery of San Miniato costs at least 1,000 francs, and the nailing down of a corpse in a white deal box, afterward wedged into a hole in a wall and bricked up, can scarcely be said to be more solemn and decorous than the pushing of a coffin into a furnace door. When it comes to interring, as is frequently done in the public cemeteries of Italy, four or five uncoffined bodies in the same grave, the advocates of cremation have decidedly the best of the question. At Milan cremation is no longer an experiment, nor even a sight for the curious. In 1877 there were sixteen bodies burned there, the municipal and sanitary authorities attending on each occasion, and finding nothing to criticise; and Dr. Prosper de Pietra Santa, editor-in-chief of a Milanese hygienic journal, vouches that in 1878 practice continued to make perfect, for in describing the twenty-seventh successful burning he says: "La famiglia si mostro saddisfatissima del modo col quale venne esequita"—the family was exceedingly satisfied with the manner in which it was carried out.

In Germany the Siemans pattern of apparatus was selected by the authorities. That furnace is now of world-wide celebrity and its adaptability for cremation purposes has been well described by Sir Henry Thompson and others. On the 1st of October, 1878, cremation became optional in Gotha. A cremation chapel has been built in the new cemetery at Gotha, where, on the 10th of December, the body of a civil engineer, Herr Stier, was burned, this being the first public cremation in Germany. Herr Stier had died some weeks before, leaving a request that his remains be burned. The ecclesiastical authorities have framed a ritual for use on such occasions. The ceremony begins with an anthem; then the pastor preaches the funeral sermon; next, after the singing of a hymn by a choir of boys, the coffin disappears through the trap-door on which it is placed, the pastor giving his benediction, with which the service concludes. Friends are permitted to deliver the addresses on giving notice to the clergyman of their preference to do so. On this occasion the Protestant clergy conducted the service, and in the funeral sermon the Rev. Dr. Seyded said there could be no objection on the part of the Protestant church to return to cremation, though it was quite true that that custom ceased, and burial came in, about 1,000 years ago, when Christianity began to prevail. When the coffin disappeared it was conveyed by machinery into the cremation vault, a long and narrow vault heated to an extraordinary degree by burning gas. In one hour and a half the coffin and body were consumed; and two hours later the vault had sufficiently cooled to allow of the mourners entering and collecting the ashes in an urn, which was deposited in an adjoining columbarium.

In other parts of Germany cremation is permissive, depending on the consent of the local authorities; in still other districts, and in France, Holland, Austria, and Russia the formality of the governmental sanction has yet to be obtained. In Switzerland cremation has been legalized.

The English Cremation Society, which is strong both in the number and consequence of its members, will soon begin active operations, for Prof. Gorini is now in London superintending the erection on a suburban site, purchased by the society, of a crematory.

In the United States there was one cremation last year, the body of Mrs. Benn Pitman, wife of the famous phonographer of Cincinnati, being burned Feb. 15, 1878, in Dr. Le Moyne's furnace, at Washington, Pa., where, on the 8th of December, 1876, the remains of Baron von Palm were incinerated.

The recent epidemics at the South, and the sensational developments in body-snatching cases at the North, may be expected to quicken the interest in cremation in the United States. I certainly has in Indiana, for it is only a month ago since a cremation society was formed at a meeting in Indianapolis, at which some 300 men and women were present.

A Mule's Reserved Power.

This mule looked like he was 138 years old, and was dead standing upon his feet. He was hitched to a pine-bodied spring-wagon, with a high dash-board. The "team" was standing on the levee in mute silence, while the old darkey who "driv" it went aboard the wharfboat A tramp could make a barrel of money selling pictures of that mule, labeled "Patience." His long, flabby ears hung down each side of his head like window-awnings with the rods out of them. His face wore a sober look, while out of his mouth hung a tongue eight inches long. His tail swung down from the rear end of his hurricane roof like a wet rope, while his whole body seemed as motionless as death itself. Presently a red-headed urchin, with an old boot in his hand, walked up in front of him, and, looking into his face, saw that the mule was asleep. He walked around, climbed up into that wagon leaned over the dashboard, lifted that mule's tail, and let it come down in time to catch a death-grip on that boot-leg. That mule woke up so quick that he kicked the boy and the dashboard twenty feet into the air. He didn't stop there. He changed the positions of his ears, hauled in his tongue, planted his fore feet, and his head between his knees, and from the fore shoulders to the tip of his trunk was in lively motion, and he didn't look like he was more than 2 years old, the way he was kicking that old wagon-body into kindling-wood with his heels. He had it all to himself, and was doing fine, when the old darkey rushed up the hill, got in front of him, and, grabbing him by each ear, shouted, "Whoa! I tell you. Wat's de matter wid you? Whoa up?" and, looking around at the crowd, yelled, "Will some o' yer gemmen git dat er boot-leg out wile I hole him? case de waggin's mine, an' I jes borrowed de mule." But no one ventured, and when we left his heels had almost reached the tail-gate, and the old darkey was still yelling "Whoa!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Club Life in New York.

In the vestibule of the Union Club, says the New York Times, sits installed a porter, who opens and shuts the doors, receives all letters for the various members except those brought by the postman, and sees that no improper person enters the sacred edifice; from the interior of the vestibule a small waiting-room branches off to the right, devoted to the reception of visitors. On the first or ground floor are spacious reading and smoking rooms, the bar, the office, and the cloak-room. On the second floor, the billiard-room, card-room, and library. On the third floor, the public and private dining-rooms, all luxuriously fitted up with a single eye to comfort, and without any attempt at elaborate embellishment. The kitchen is above the dining-room on the fourth floor. This arrangement does away with the unpleasant odor of cooking, which so often permeates houses where the kitchen is in the basement. An elevator running from the ground floor to the dining-room is constantly in operation. The card-room is frequented by but a small portion, even of those members who take all their meals at the club and make it their home. Whist, euchre, all fours, ecarte, bezique, cribbage and picquet only can be played. Bets are strictly limited. Members must not have at stake, directly or indirectly, more than the following amounts on any of the above-mentioned games. Any violation of this rule renders the offender liable to expulsion: Whist, twenty dollars a game, or five dollars a point, when playing what is known as the "English" game; euchre, five dollars a game (a "slam" to count as two games) with privilege of betting in addition ten dollars on the usual rubber of either three or four games; all fours, five dollars a game; ecarte, five dollars a game; bezique, two cents a point—two hundred additional points on each hand. Betting up to these limits is rather the exception than the rule. The games chiefly played are short whist at five dollars a game, and euchre at one dollar a game.

Bayard Taylor and His Habits.

Bayard Taylor wrote a beautiful hand. He detested blind and slovenly writing, and used to say that any man could write plainly who would make an effort. His manuscript was the delight of printers. Mr. Taylor wrote quietly and steadily, and produced a great deal more "copy" in a given time than any one would suppose him capable of who observed his apparent ease and absence of hurry. He was rather careless in his dress, but not, like Horace Greeley, enough so to be conspicuous. He liked a stout, plain suit of clothes that could be worn a long time, a loose-fitting gray overcoat and a broad-brimmed slouch hat. He was a hearty eater, and was fond of the German national beverage, which he habitually drank at dinner. In religion he might have been classed as a Unitarian or a Deist, though he had great reverence for the faith of his Quaker ancestors. In his later years the desire for travel wore off, and he used to set out on a journey with much reluctance. After seeing and knowing well all the great cities of the world his preference was New York. He often said he had rather live there than in any European capital. Taylor's wife was the daughter of the celebrated German astronomer, Prof. Hansen. She is a lady of fine culture and considerable literary talent. A school history of Germany, written by her husband for use in American schools, was recently translated by her into German. Their daughter, Lilian, closely resembles her father as he appeared in his youthful days. Taylor built the house near Kennett square where his parents still live, and where they celebrated their golden wedding nearly ten years ago. He called the place Cedarcroft, and hoped to pass his old age there.—G. W. Smalley, in Cleveland Herald.

Numbering the Heart-Beats.

A French medical journal states that Dr. Guyor, after consulting the best authorities on the subject, and making the necessary calculations, has determined that the number of pulsations during the different ages of life is as follows: During the first year, 63,000,000, in round numbers; during the first two years, 120,000,000; the first eight years, 435,000,000; the first twelve years, 614,000,000; the first fourteen years, 698,000,000; the first thirty-six years, giving the figures in full, 1,229,904,900; during a lifetime of fifty years, 1,928,160,000; of sixty years, 2,269,800,000, and of eighty years, 3,007,040,000.

Suffering in England.

Great distress prevails among the laboring poor throughout England and Scotland—indeed, throughout the whole of Great Britain. The large manufacturing towns are the chief centers of suffering, thousands of unemployed men and starving women and children being dependent upon charity. Measures of relief have been taken, but as yet the distress is great. Many of the middle-class poor, who will not appeal to charity, suffer keenly.

India contains 240,000,000 inhabitants, and 20,000 priests.

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM.

STROPHE.

A young man woke with the kiss of morn—
Carol and sing, light-hearted boy!
On the woodland echoes his song is borne—
What is the world but love and joy?
Singing, he twines for his dear love's breast
Bluebell and violet, daintily pressed,
Tenderly fondled, lightly caressed—
Carol and sing, Oh dreaming boy!

ANTISTROPHE.

A wasp got up at the break of day—
Tenderly spread the plaster on!
And he opened the session the good old way—
Pour on the arnica till it is gone!
[illegible]
He whetted its edges keen and bare,
Till it gleamed like steel in the morning air—
Ring for the arnica! Pour it on!

CATASTROPHE.

Run for the doctor? Run like sin—
Put on some mud till the doctor comes!
This is the hole where the probe went in;
How it burns and throbs like a hundred drums
Yell like a madman; mutter and growl;
Trample the violets; rave and howl;
Scatter the bluebells—love may scowl!
Shriek for the arnica! Here it comes!

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Aberglaube.

I know of a noble lady
Who has never lifted her veil;
Her hand, on the aching temples,
Is tender, and cool, and pale;

Her raiment is black and crimson,
Her voice, which is seldom loud,
Is drowned by a lover's whisper,
But not by a surging crowd;

And her speech, which is heard within us,
Soundeth as if from far
And she calleth the things that are not,
[illegible] the things that are.

Therefore her word is the pillar
Of whatsoever standeth on earth,
And if aught on earth be precious,
Her sentences give it worth.

She is very staid in her going,
And if she knew that haste
Would scatter the manna, hidden,
For wayfarers to taste.

Yet whithersoever we hasten,
We find her waiting there;
And she walks where the ways are foulest,
As if she trod upon air.

I have told of her speech and her going;
Of her deeds there is this to tell,
She lifteth up to heaven,
She casteth down to hell.

On earth she layeth foundations,
And others build thereupon;
When they set the headstone with shoutings
She is far away and gone.

For her road is with them that labor,
Her rest is with them that grieve;
Her name is Faith, while you serve her;
When you lose her Make Believe.

Lacing.

If all the women insane upon this subject were in the asylums, the accommodations would have to be largely increased. The habit is a general one, and is very injurious. A good authority says: "It has been found that the liver, the lungs and the powers of the stomach have been brought into a diseased state by this most pernicious habit; and fixed redness of the nose and eruptions of the skin are among its sad effects. If prolonged, there is no knowing to what malady lacing may not lead. Its most apparent effect is an injured digestion and a consequent loss of appetite. Of this, however, it is often difficult to convince the practiced tight lacer, for vanity is generally obstinate. But looking at tight lacing, without consideration of its effect on health, and merely as regards its tendency to improve or to injure the appearance, nothing can be more absurd than to believe that it is advantageous to the figure. A small waist is rather a deformity than a beauty. To see the shoulders cramped and squeezed together is anything but agreeable. The figure should be easy, well developed and supple. If nature has not made the waist small, compression cannot mend her work."

Entertaining.

The perfect entertainer, says a writer in the Home Journal, will never confide her worries or her sorrows to an abiding guests, and much less will she mention them to one whose visit is to be brief, or is only casual. It would be laying a burden upon another at a moment when the sacredness of hospitality should protect them from every unpleasant thought. The hostess, in sending invitations to her chosen guests, mentions the time when she will expect their arrival, and the length of the visit, and it must be a most unequivocally-worded and cordially-pressed invitations that can induce a guest to remain beyond the period fixed at the moment of the first acceptance of the proffered hospitality. There are not many occasions when it is agreeable to visitors to disarrange first plans, and by a longer stay confuse their further projects, and it is as cordially friendly for the entertainer to speed the parting guest, as it is to heartily welcome the coming one. At an evening visit or an entertainment, if the invited person departs before the usual or specified hour, he and she should omit formal adieus, if possible, to avoid putting the thoughts of an unusually early departure into the minds of other guests, but, if an unnoticed departure is impossible, the leave-taking should be quietly done, the hostess expressing her regret at the early departure, but on no account can she request a delay that some necessity has demanded. It would be as unkind as it would be indelicate to urge a guest to inconvenience himself for the sake of keeping a crowd intact at a fashionable crush, or even at a small party. As was said before, the fine spirit of hospitality inspires one to bestow pleasure rather than seek it.

How to Select a Husband.

It has been profoundly remarked, that the true way of telling a toadstool from a mushroom is to eat it. If you die it was a toadstool, if you live it was a mushroom. A similar method is employed in the selection of a husband; marry him, if he kills you he was a bad husband; if he makes you happy he is a good one. There is really no other criterion. As Dr. Samuel Johnson remarked, the proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof. Some young men that seem unexceptionable, indeed very desirable, when they are single, are perfectly horrid as soon as they get married. All the latent brute there is in the heart comes out as soon as a sensitive and delicate being seeks her happiness in his companionship. The honeymoon lasts a very short time, the receptions and the round of parties are soon over, and then the two sit down to make home happy. If she has married a society man, he will soon begin to get bored; he will yawn and go to sleep on the sofa. Then he will take his hat and go down to the club to see the boys, and perhaps not come home till morning. If she has married a man engrossed in business he will be fagged out when he comes home. He may be a sickly man that she must nurse, and a morose man that she must seek to cheer, a drunken man that she must sit up for, a violent man that she fears, a fool whom she soon learns to despise, a vulgar man for whom she must apologize—in short, there are thousands of ways of being bad husbands, and very few ways of being good ones. And the worst of it is, that, that the poor silly women are apt to admire in single men the very traits that make bad husbands, and look with contempt or ridicule upon those quiet virtues which make home happy. Men with very little personal beauty or style, often make the wife happy—and sometimes quite the reverse. The number of ways of being a bad husband is almost as great as the number of ways of being ugly. No one can tell from the demeanor of a single man what sort of a husband he will be. Meantime she must marry somebody. Eat it; if you die it was a sort of a toadstool, if you live it was a sort of a mushroom.—Baltimore Every Saturday Night.

"Queen of Spades Bounty."

A lady of rank in Paris died three week ago, in the fashionable quarter of the Arc de Triumphe, of whom an interesting story is told:

She was a famous card-player, and was credited with knowing every game there was to know. When traveling in a foreign land she met, one day, in a hotel, a Russian lady with that passion for gambling said to be inherent in the Russian nation. Anxious to play with the lady from Paris, she wrote requesting a few games. Her request was granted, and the ladies played all night, the Russian losing at every hand, until her opponent had won from her more money than the mines in the Ural had produced for her revenue in twenty-five years. At last the Russian lady made a despairing effort to regain her fortune, but without avail. Rising from the table, she told the French lady how she had lost more than she possessed, but that in her desire to pay a debt of honor she would instruct her steward to convey to her the title deeds of all the mines and estates she owned. At this the victorious antagonist smiled and requested that she might have her own way in the matter, since she had won. A priest and a lawyer were sent for. When they arrived, the Russian lady was asked to bind herself by a solemn oath never again to touch a card or risk money at any game of chance. She did so, and then signed an engagement to pay her antagonist the sum of $2,000. The vow never to play cards for money again she faithfully kept, and the $2,000 was punctually paid every year, the French lady giving it the name of the "Queen of Spades Bounty," and invariably giving it to the poor of Paris.

A Lesson in Cooking.

A half-dozen girls, wrapped up in red shawls and with cheeks glowing from their walk in the keen air, filed into the area under the rooms of the New York Cooking school, near Union square. They had come from above Fortieth street and represented half of the cooking class of the Forty-second Street Mission school, attached to the Rev. Dr. Vincent's (Park avenue) Church.

"Come right into the kitchen, girls," Miss Corson said, leading the way to the front room at No. 35. Within an arm's length of the front row of chairs, which had been reserved for the class, was a long counter, with a pair of scales, some spice boxes, and plates of beef, sausage, bacon and vegetables. There was a range at one side of the room behind the counter and two small eating tables at the other side. Six hoods were untied and six white aprons were immediately put on.

"Now, if three of you will come behind the counter with me, we will make some beef and vegetable soup," Miss Corson said, "with one pound of beef meat, one-quarter pound of rice, picked over and washed, one-quarter each of turnips and carrots, well sliced, an ounce of soup celery, and two table-spoonfuls of tomatoes—if you have them."

"Is that only a pound of meat?" one of the visitors asked, as the square cut bits grew into a heap under the knives of two of the girls.

"That is all, and Third avenue weight, too," Miss Corson replied, with a tinge of sarcasm; "it is the neck, and, as you see, is nearly all lean meat; it costs only six cents.'

"Oh, my," exclaimed a practical young lady, "that's too much; you can get it at my store for three cents a pound. They sell the best roasts there for fourteen cents."

"That is very valuable information," Miss Corson said, regardless of car-fares; "we must certainly buy there in future."

Within a few minutes the soup mixture was steaming under four quarts of water, and Miss Carson directed the attention of the class to "liver rolls." A pound of liver, previously scalded to remove the bitter taste, was cut up into three-inch slices, and a quarter a pound of bacan was similarly cut. Then came the serious part part of the business. "I will leave the seasoning to you," Miss Corson said, filling a teaspoon with salt, another with pepper and nodding approvingly at a blue-eyed girl who had just pared a turnip so that it was as smooth as a billiard ball. The girl undertook the task, and before Miss Corson had fairly turned around salt and pepper were sprinkled thickly on six pieces of liver. Then two other girls we called to help roll the liver and bacon into colinders, to be tied with twine before they were cooked. Some of the slices of bacon were as large as the liver, and as they had to be rolled inside and would not compress, it was obvious that a great deal of strategy was needed. Blue-eyes was the first to appreciate the situation. Except in the item of excessive seasoning, over which nobody had done anything more than smile, her reputation as a cook was thus far unsullied. Yet here disaster confronted her in the shape of a slice of bacon to be rolled out of sight in a slice of liver smaller than itself.

She double the bacon, turned in the edges and stretched the liver, but to no purpose. The bacon would assert itself. There was but one way to obviate the difficulty. As if by accident the slices dropped out of her hands to the counter, among three or four other pairs of slices. The pair that she picked up rolled together as easily as though the slices bad been previously fitted to each other. In turn, the other girls grappled with the non-fitting slices, and in turn, after clenching their teeth and knitting their brows over them, permitted them to drop through their fingers to the table.

"Are these slices hard to roll?" asked Miss Corson. The three girls looked surprised, as though they hadn't seen them, but said nothing. Then Miss Corson poured over them for a while, and finally tied them together, with bunches of bacon sticking out at each end and a lump in the middle. The rolls thus completed were placed in a sauce-pan to simmer for a half hour. Some half-baked potatoes which had been in the oven were next removed, stuffed with sausage meat, closed again, and returned to the oven to finish in fifteen minutes.

"Coffee loses its flavor by boiling," Miss Corson went on, "and it is somewhat expensive to use eggs to clarify or enrich it. I will show you how to make good coffee, at little expense. Not even a coffee-pot is necessary. I have used an earthen pitcher many a time, and it does just as well.

Three tablespoonfuls of coffee were warmed dry in a tin-pail and a half-pint of boiling water was added, the mixture being stirred with a wooden ladle for three minutes without boiling.

"You see, coffee as well as other beverages can be improved with a stick," Miss Corson said, pleasantly. Then a pint and a half of boiling water was added, and the whole was set back on the stove to steep for ten minutes.

One of the girls was then taught to set the table, the others looking on, and the lesson ended. During the week the class will practice this lesson at a private house, doing their own marketing. The course includes twelve lessons, and comprises all the details of a housekeeper's work in the culinary line. This afternoon the ladies' class for 1879 will receive its first lesson. "We mean through this school," said Mrs. Judge Daly, who is one of the officers, "to establish a system of cooking thoroughly American. The English system has been a failure here, for it ignores our pumpkins and corn, two of our best dishes. As for the French—well, when we are fairly started we shall be quite willing to lend them some of our ideas, but we want none of theirs." Miss Corson has recently established a school in Montreal.—New York World.

Fashion Notes.

BLACK stain opera cloaks are fashionable.

SILVERED flowers interspersed with colored bows are worn on white dresses.

IT is never correct to send in a card when you find the lady called upon at home.

IN wedding invitations the cards admitting guests to the church are made in the shape of a horseshoe.

ALSATIAN bows for the hair or bonnet are now made of bias velvet or other materials, instead of ribbon.

NEW bows for the throat are made of long loops of narrow Persian ribbon hung on one side of a sort of jabot of Breton lace.

SQUARE-CUT waist, low and trimmed with standing ruches of lace, somewhat in the Marie de Medicis shape, are used for young girls' dresses; nearly all are low neck with short sleeves.

THE long gloves extending half way to the elbow are creamy white undressed kid, either plain or with lace insertions and frills, or else the long lace mitts are worn in white, black, or a color to match the dress.

BUTTONED boots or French heeled slippers for dancing are made of the material of the dress or its trimming. Those of satin or of brocade are considered the most stylish. The silk stockings are of the same color, or else white with colored embroidery.

SCARFS to wear around the neck outside of fur-lined cloaks, seal-skin sacques or velvet mantles, are made of the soft white India mull, trimmed all around with pleated Breton lace, and having three or four rows pleated straight across each end. These scarfs are so wide that when gathered up around the neck they are almost as warm as a fur boa, and are used to take the place of furs.

THE newest calicoes are striped in twilled lines imitating the Cheviot patterns. Chintz patterns of palm leaves, or else of Pompadour colors in rosebuds, daisies, and other small flowers, are shown on black, brown, and maroon grounds in good calicoes of domestic manufacture. The bordered calicoes are also much used, as they trim overskirts, basques and pleated flounces very prettily, and, moreover, they wash well when neatly sewed on without drawing.

THE jabot overskirt is merely a long, deep, round apron front with very wide side gores that meet in the back underneath the jabot fall. The pleated part low down on the apron is formed by pleats in the side form sewed there permanently; but if, owing to the stiffness of the fabric, or for any other reason, they do not arrange themselves nicely by the use of these pleats, it is well to aid them by backing the pleats also on the seams joining the front gore to the sides.

WHITE bonnets trimmed with pleatings of Breton lace are the novelty for reception and dress hats. The entire bonnet may be of white net, or else it is of ribbed silk, velvet, felt, or, more elegant still, of white satin put smoothly on the frame. The Breton lace of trimming width—between two and three inches broad—is then pleated as finely as if crimped, and put is several rows across the crown, or else there are only two rows around the brim of the front and edging the curtain band below the crown.

The Mysterious Sixth Sense.

It is often claimed that besides the five well-known senses of sight, taste, smell, hearing, and feeling, there is another, unnamed and undefined, which reveals to us the presence of persons or things whose proximity is not made known by any of the senses named. How often we say "something tells us" this or that, when we cannot define what that "something" is.

During the war, a sailing vessel, loaded with miscellaneous supplies, went ashore near Hilton Head. It was desirable to get her cargo out as soon as possible, and a party of blue jackets were detailed to go on board and "break her out." The officer in charge was particular to enquire whether there was any liquor on board, but was reassured on learning that what little there was was in a cask in the lower hold, underneath the rest of the cargo, and that his men would not come to it for two days at least. Work began, and in two hours the blue-jackets, every man of them, were in a state of the most hopeless intoxication, had to be hoisted over the side, and taken back to the ship whence they came.

Investigation showed that Jack's unerring instinct had led him straight to the grog. He had literally sunk a well through the cargo until he struck a cask of whisky, knocked in its head, and imbibed its contents by the dipperful. That it knocked him off his pins is not surprising, but how did he know it was on the ship? or knowing that, how did he know how to begin his mining operations? Something told him. What was it?—Boston Transcript.

MAGAZINE EDITING.

Curious Stories Told at a Lotus Club Banquet.

I was at a Lotus club dinner recently, and a pretty well known journalist, being called on for "a speech! a speech!" after the uproarious habit of that intellectual circus, rose and told a story: "It might be called," said he, with a sly look at the head of the table, where sat, in presidential majesty, a rather corpulent, slightly bald, middle-aged man, "It might be called 'How I got into a magazine.'" Then he changed to the other foot, blushed slightly, leaned on his fork, and said:

"I had an article once which I thought would make six pages in a magazine—if it got a chance. I concluded to give the Atlantic Monthly the benefit of it, because that was a superb creation of the human intellect, and ought to be encouraged. [Smiles and raps on the table.] I sent it to that periodical, saying that it was my maiden effort, and asking the editor to send me the $100 by draft or money order. In three weeks it came back, to my utter amazement, with the printed notice that it was excellent, but not exactly adapted, etc. I saw that the editor of the Atlantic was a fool. [Cheers around the table and cries of satirical approval.] I sent it to another well-known magazine, offering it for $50. It came back in two months, just when I was looking for it to appear. That magazine, too, was evidently a failure! I then sent it (price $15) to a first-class weekly, that printed just such things as my sketch, 'Mary Wanley's Guide,' but not half as well written. [Cheers and remarks.] Again it was sent back. [Laughter.] I could not understand it. I could not believe that our periodical literature was decaying so fast. I offered it to another journalist for nothing, telling him that I was a beginner, that this was the first effort of the sort I had ever offered to anybody, and I watched his face as he examined it suspiciously, and finally returned it to me, saying that the style was faulty; the idea was good, though it might have been used heretofore; but with study and careful practice I would make, perhaps, in time, etc. [Laughter.]

"I was mad, gentlemen!" said the speaker, amid the roars of the company, and, leaning on the chair with his other hand, he went on: "Something heroic must be done? Two years had passed. It was now 1871. I resolved to storm the citadel. I borrowed my brother's sealskin overcoat, so as to look as imposing as possible, and struck for an illustrated magazine I had not tried—one of the finest works of art in the world. The doorkeeper stood briskly aside as I went in and asked for the editor, whose name I did not then know. I was speedily ushered into the presence of a young man, who asked me to be seated, and inquired my business. 'To see the editor.' He would examine my manuscript. 'Very well,' I said, standing, I must have an answer in fifteen minutes, as I leave on the next train for Boston.' He parleyed, but I was severe and taciturn, and reached for the manuscript which he had taken. 'I will see Mr. ——,' said he, naming the editor himself. The latter appeared. 'We will send this to you by mail,' said he, 'if it is not used.' 'I can leave it with you only 15 minutes,' I replied. He looked surprised and glanced at the title. 'You can surely leave it for one night,' he expostulated. 'No,' I rejoined, resolutely, 'I have other uses for it.' In that I suppose he scented the opposition house, for he took off his overcoat (he was just going home), and said: 'I will look it over now.' [Cheers around the table.]

"He was a fine-looking man as he sat there in the dying twilight—[cries of 'Oh!' 'Ah!']—a rather corpulent, slightly bald, middle-aged man (at this the company turned toward the presiding officer, who was as red as a boiled lobster, and then they roared with glee), and he looked up in about ten minutes, and said: 'I will take this ——; Mr. Oliver, please make out a check for $50.' 'What?' I asked, '$50? my price is $125.' 'Ah!' said he, passing the manuscript to me, 'it is more than we ever pay anybody, except famous writers.' I delivered a stately bow, took the roll of paper, and turned out of the door. 'Well,' said he, calling to me, 'we'll take it at $125;' and Mr. Oliver made out my check. [Cheers and roars of laughter. The man at the head of the table had turned a sort of indigo blue.]

"The worst of it is, or the best of it," said the narrator, "that I have not seen or heard of that sketch during all these seven years."

The Lotus club hall rang with cheers and laughter, for his manner of telling the story was indiscribably droll, and then all parties turned toward the presiding officer, who was recognized as the hero of the narrative.

He rose slowly to his feet; the blue went out of his face, and even the scarlet turned to the rosy flush which is habitual to it, and he smiled cheerfully by the time the cheers and guffaws which greeted him had died away.

"The fact is," he began, deprecatingly, and then there was another great roar of laughter; "yes, I well remember the circumstance. I accepted the sketch to keep its writer from inflicting it on some weaker magazine. [Loud laughter.] Our house is rich. I can afford to stand in the breach. If it were not for the work we do in buying articles capable of injury, the mortality among magazines would be incalculable. [Laughter and cheers.] Yes, gentlemen, when a person with a flighty temperament comes in—[laughter]—we exert every nerve to get possession of his manuscript, to prevent the desolation that might otherwise ensue. [Cheers and jingling of glasses.] Such an article might fall into the hands of men who would inadvertently print it. [Cheers and cries of 'Hear! hear!'] We lock it up in a strong safe."

The company, led by the journalist, who blushed again at his awkward position, then drank to the sagacious magazine, while the editor went on seriously to say that he had eight immense fire-proof safes full of stories and other manuscripts that had been bought and paid for, some of the matter extending back many years. "If nobody should write a word for the body of our magazine for the next ten years," he said, "it would appear regularly every month, and I doubt if its quality would be at all impaired." Then Julius Henri Brown told amusing stories of his magazine experience, and alleged that the Harpers still had unpublished stories of his paid for eight years ago.—New York Letter.

Cushing and Choate.

On one occasion Cushing and Rufus Choate were pitted against each other, and Mr. Gerrish, Cushing's old partner, relates how they were both afraid to try the case:

To the amazement of judge, jury and spectators, both Cushing and Choate were somewhat anxious for a "continuance"—in other words, for a postponement of trial. As a usual thing, both gentlemen were always anxious to force a case to trial, being in a state of 'chronic preparation,' as Webster once said in speaking of Choate. In going out of court I met Choate, and said: "How is it that you were ready for a continuance to-day? It is a little odd of you."

Choate replied: "Oh, I am a little pressed with business, and can afford to let this case stand over."

Said I: "Choate, this is sheer nonsense. I'll tell you what the matter is. You are afraid of Cushing."

"So I am," was the reply, "and I am not ashamed to own it, either."

"Well, well," said I; "this is pretty good. The idea of Rufus Choate being frightened. What on earth do you fear in Cushing?"

"Mr. Gerrish, I will tell you. I am afraid of his overwhelming knowledge of the law."

In the afternoon Cushing came into the office. I went for him at once. "Caleb, what was the matter to-day? Why didn't you insist on trying that case?"

"Oh!" he replied, "the weather is warm, and we have much to attend to, and I didn't care to hurry matters."

"Now, Cushing, be honest; were you not a little afraid of Choate?"

"Well, Gerrish, to be candid about it, I was. Are you satisfied now?"

I then inquired what he feared Choate for. "Do you think," said I, "that he knows any more law than you do?"

"No, sir, I don't," was the answer; "but I'm afraid of the man's influence with a jury, right or wrong."

A Hint For Bores.

Some time ago there lived a gentleman of indolent habits in Sussex, who made it a business in winter season to visit his friends extensively. After wearing out his welcome in his immediate vicinity, he thought he would visit an old Quaker friend, some twenty miles away, who had been an old school-fellow of his. On his arrival he was cordially received by the Quaker, he thinking his visitor had taken much pains to come so far to see him. He treated his friend with great attention and politeness for several days, and as he did not see any signs of his leaving, he became uneasy, but he bore it with patience till the morning of the next day, when he said to him:

"My friend, I'm afraid thee will never visit me again."

"Oh, yes, I shall," said the visitor, "I have enjoyed my visit very much. I shall certainly come again."

"Nay," said the Quaker, "I think thee will never visit me again."

"What makes you think I will never come again?" asked the visitor.

"If thee does not never leave," said the Quker, "how canst thee come again?"

The visitor left.—English Paper.

Don't You Try It.

Here is a yarn from one of the London papers. We would not advise any of our readers to put its accuracy to a practical test:

Of the Prince of Wales and Dr. Playfair, it is told that they were standing near a caldron containing lead, which was boiling at white heat. "Has your Royal Highness any faith in science?" said the Doctor. "Certainly," replied the Prince. "Will you, then, place your hand in the boiling metal and ladle out a portion of it?" "Do you tell me to do this?" asked the Prince. "I do," replied the Doctor. The Prince then ladled out some of the boiling lead with his hand, without sustaining any injury. It is a well-known scientific fact that the human hand may be placed uninjured in lead boiling at white heat, being protected from any harm by the moisture of the skin. Should the lead be at a perceptibly lower temperature, the effect need not be described. After this let no one undertake the courage of the Prince of Wales.

Remarkably Deformed.

An Evansville, Ind., dispatch of the 9th inst. says: "Jim Porter, a remarkable negro dwarf, who died at the poorhouse on Monday and left his body to the medical college for scientific purposes, was partially dissected to-day. his head measures in 25½ inches, the disproportion being all in the back part of the head. His neck was short and thick, with a gallon and a half swallowing capacity. From the tip of his fingers to the point of his shoulder was 24 inches; from the bottom of the foot to the middle of the knee-cap was 12 inches, and from there to the hip bone another 12. His liver was just twice as large as the ordinary, and his entire length was 4 feet 4 inches; his trunk was the usual length. His thigh-bone, usually the largest bone in the human body, was no larger than a man's hand. there was a full attendance of all city physicians at the dissection, and all regarded the specimen as the most remarkable they ever saw.

Beware of Kerosene in Diphtheria.

Those sanguine people who imagine they have found an effective remedy in kerosene oil for diphtheria are respectfully invited to pause. An Illinois physician says that kerosene is an exceedingly harsh prescription and when taken internally in cases of genuine diphtheria destroys what little chance the patient has of recovery. His theory is that diphtheria can only be overcome by vitality and that kerosene so deranges the stomach as to further impair its already overtaxed energies to supply necessary nourishment and strength to the enfeebled system. Another physician at the east maintains that the disease was never know until after the oil wells in Pennsylvania were discovered; that the cases are more severe in houses where kerosene is used, and in short, that kerosene may be the cause of the disease.

A ROUGH GUESS.

BY ROSE HAWTHORNE LATHROP.

O what if the world were empty,
Would the bells toll all alone
And the bats flit over the dancing-halls
To the owl's and the north wind's moan?

O how would the ghost fright each other!
And the sun stand staring alway,
And the flowers reach to the tree-top,
And the fishes drink seas in a day!—

Nay, man might be wholly missing
From earth, and the many years
Would no doubt do much more business,
Than when constantly drying our tears.

ONE day at the Cafe de Foy one of the leading notaries of Paris was criticising severely the conduct of Marshal Marmont, when a gentleman at an adjoining table, with a moustache like a shoe-brush, arose and cried: "Sir-r, you shall account to me for those words!" "You are Marshal Marmont?" "I have not that honor, but I am his senior aide-de-camp." "Very well, sir; my head clerk will meet you when and where you please."

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS

THEY ARE WORTH THEIR

WEIGHT in GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Billious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Collc, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates the adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

STYLES.

For the Ladies to Read.

—Boas are worn mostly by young girls.

—Cheviot patterns appear in the new calicoes.

—Opera cloaks of plush are handsome and stylish.

—Ball-dresses are now made very short in front.

—Cherry red is a favorite color for evening costumes.

—Velvet striped materials are popular fabrics for dresses.

—Black monkey muffs and collarettes are a fancy of the season.

—The French twist of the back hair is among the fashions of the past.

—Small Swiss-wood easels, for photographs, are preferred to frames.

—Breakfast caps of Breton lace are all the rage, and are very pretty.

—Undressed kids are worn for full-dress occasions by many of our fashionable ladies.

—It is rare at present to find a bonnet made of one material only or of one shade.

—For full dress the more the hair is tortured out of place the more stylish is the coiffure.

—Floral garniture is in the ascendency for evening dresses, and nothing can be more effective.

—Belt-bows of lace and ribbon are taking the place of the belt-bouquets worn for so long a time.

—Novelty pins are bouquet holders to fasten on the corsage, with a ring at the back in which the flowers are held.

—Bouquet brooches are in all sorts of fantastic forms, such as those of lizards, serpents, bees, beetles and other insects.

—Some of the new evening dresses are so elaborate, both in color and design, that they are fitly termed rainbow costumes.

—Kid gloves for full dress have nine buttons, and reach to the elbow; the top of the glove is finished with a frill of lace.

—Scotch plaids have found favor with gentlemen as well as ladies, and are worn by them in neckties and handkerchiefs.

—Imitation feather trimmings, made of white, blue or pink muslin, are used to trim inexpensive organdy ball dresses.

—Many young ladies continue to wear the thick clustering Montague locks of cresent shape on the forehead and temples.

—New and becoming opera-scarfs for winding around the head and throat are made of Spanish lace and are three yards long.

—Pale drab or beige-colored cloth suits are worn by young ladies as late as the present season, and with fur trimmings will be used all winter.

—Brocades for bridal robes are of satin ground, in elegant patterns of holly-leaves, passion-flowers, lilies, roses, and other distinctive floriations.

—Parlor tables are covered entirely in garnet silk-plush, not a particle of wood being visible, and are trimmed with brass mouldings and silk fringe.

—Mother of pearl buttons in tints of rose, green, blue, smoke, and opaline effects are much used on dressy street suits of silk and camel's hair, or cashmere.

—Much attention is paid to the "bouquet de corsage" this winter, and the little breast knot of violet or pansies is a positive requirement of fashion.

—The handsomest bonnets for mid-winter are made entirely of feathers; for a maroon costume a bonnet composed of maroon ostrich-tips is the most elegant.

—The fashionable muff is finished without tassels or bows at the ends. New clasps for cloaks are of silver with a number of small chains with coins attached.

—Skating suits are made of dark blue cloth, trimmed with bands of fur. A fur hat turned up at one side, and held by a bright feather, completes the costume.

—Ladies with high foreheads are advised to continue the short Josephine curls, or the frizette over the forehead with the bandoline rings peeping out from underneath.

—Guipure lace is again coming in favor. This will interest many ladies who have had this lace on hand since the time it was very fashionable; it bids fair to become so again.

—Exquisite little breakfast and opera caps, or turbans, are made of damasse silk handkerchiefs, garnished with a bit of fine lace, a rosebud or other blossoms and a jeweled ornament.

—Black lace is worn but little, while white lace is used prodigiously in all widths for flounces and revers, that is to say, set on plain and producing the effect of embroidery on the material.

—Tortoise-shell, ivory, silver, and gold combs are all worn, and are the finish of every elegant coiffure—the style of comb decided by the hour of the day, and the nature and occasion of the toilet.

—For the evening coiffure loops, assisted when needed by finger puffs, with two or three moderately long curls at the back, are still worn. The arrangement is immediately on the crown of the head.

—At present ball shoes are always made of the same color as the dress. They are trimmed with buckles or buttons of Rhine quartz (Strass), or else with a very small bunch of flowers to match those of the toilet.

—Spun-silk hose are very much worn on account of their warmth and the perfection of their fit. The favorite colors are mulberry and dragon's green. The "Jessica" ribbed hose are among the latest styles for children.

—Keys and snakes are just now the favorite designs for jewelry—it would be rather hard to tell why. A fan chatelaine is a snake which coils around the waist, and, being pliable, hangs down at the side in very unpleasant suggestive twists, while earings of plain dull gold represents a lock with the tiny key of gold. When once locked they are evidently more secure than some bank safes.

—Oils and pomades are not used on the hair. Frequent shampooings are advised by the hair-dressers, and a great deal of brushing done by strong, swift strokes to bring out the natural oil of the hair, and thus make it look glossy without looking greased.

—Admirable toilets are composed of brocaded goods and plain satin, the satin being employed for the front of the skirt, the vest, and the trimming. The brocaded material forms the long skirt with majestic train, which opens over the satin skirt in front and the vest.

—Scarfs of muslin and Breton lace, or of Breton lace alone, are used to wear outside of fur-lined garments around the neck. The scarfs are very wide, and have several rows of Breton lace plaited on each end. When doubled up around the throat they are almost as warm as a boa.

—When the toilet is designed for a dinner or for a soiree without dancing, the shoes are of black kid, as soft and glossy as that employed for gloves, and the upper part is cut in bands on the front, which are trimmed with flowers of Rhine quartz. In this case silk stocking are de rigueur, and should always match the colors of the toilet.

—Long, square, kilt-plaited jabots of sheer muslin and Breton lace are ornamented with loops of ribbon on one side, only running through circular gold slides. A ribbon running through a double of the muslin plaiting at the top ties the jabot like a pendant around the neck. The linen or lace collar is worn below the neck ribbon which fastens the jabot.

WHAT WAS IN ANDRE'S BOOTS.

Exact Copies of the Documentary Evidence of His Being a Spy.

To the Editor of the Sun:—

As a controversy is existing as to the propriety of erecting a monument to Major Andre upon American soil, it may be of interest to the readers of the Sun to know exactly what was found upon Andre to justify his execution. The accompanying papers are copies of the originals made by me in 1852 while they were in the custody of my father, then the Secretary of State of this State. The orthography, &c., is the same as the originals parts of which are obscure. They are now, I believe, in the State Library at Albany:

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

OUR DEAD.

Nothing is our own; We hold our pleasures
 Just a little while, ere they are fled;
One by one life robs us of our treasures;
 Nothing is our own, except our dead.

They are ours, and hold in faithful keeping
 Safe forever, all they took away;
Cruel life can never stir that sleeping,
 Cruel time can never seize that prey.

Justice pales, truth fades; stars fall from heaven;
 Human are the great whom we revere,
No true crown of honor can be given,
 Till the wreath lies on a funeral bier.

When our joy is lost, and life will take it,
 Then no memory of the past remains;
Save with some strange cruel sting to make it
 Bitterness beyond all present pains.

Death, more tender-hearted, leaves to sorrow
 Still the radiant shadow—fond regret:
We shall find in some far, bright to-morrow,
 Joy that he has taken, living yet.

Is love ours, and do we dream we know it,
 Bound with all our heart-strings, all our own?
Any cold and cruel dawn may show it,
 Shattered, desecrated, overthrown.

Only the dead hearts forsake us never;
 Love, that to death's loyal care has fled
Is thus consecrated ours forever,
 And no change can rob us of our dead.

So when fate comes to besiege our city,
 Dim our gold, or make our flowers fall,
Death, the angel, comes in love and pity,
 And to save our treasures, claims them all.

Uncle Jimmy's Experience and Confession.

MR. EDITOR:—I thought with your permission I would lay before the readers of the COURIER the evil example of patronizing shows and especially traveling shows, by relating a circumstance that happened in my own experience. The greater part of my life has been one of a pioneer, have been raised in the woods and although I have seen all kinds of snakes, I had never seen the BIG snake. By this time I had become a young man of about 66 years of age, and had seen but little of the outside world, so I resolved that I would see a little more of the world and the things that are therein, in this enlightened and progressive age. With this determination I set out to see a traveling show in the town of Butler in this county. When I arrived there I found a man on the outside of the canvas of the side show, that was filled with eloquence and refinement(?) he pictured in glowing and fascinating language, the things that were to be seen, until I thought there was nothing on earth worth seeing after what was there displayed, and that it was only a prelude into paradise, so I paid my entrace, passed within the canvas, looked around, saw nothing worth seeing, soon another accomplished and refined man of this refined age, had the politeness to come and touch me on the shoulder, and told me that the big snake was in another department. I followed the polite gentleman into a back alley where we were about to pass a large box containing envelopes with packages within. The polite man remarked that there was something worthy of my attention, I told him that was not what I wanted, it was the big snake that I was after, he told me that it was a free thing that there was no harm in it and wanted me to pull out a package just for fun and try my luck, and to accomodate the polite man I drew out a package, and on examination was told that I was a lucky man, that I had drawn a prize of forty dollars, I told him that I never earned my money in that way and wanted to see the big snake, and turned to go away, he catched me by the collar and pulled me back and told me to take my money, that it was mine and rightfully belonged to me, and without taking time to think turned around and picked up the money when he told me that there was 50 cents on the dollar that belonged to him and the rest was mine, and while making change another polite man behind me remarked to his comrade, that he was mistaken that I didn't draw a prize, 'you are right' he says, 'it is a mistake,' well you are unfortunate this time I hope you will do better the next, speak a good word for me in your neighborhood, and when I remonstrated against such a swindle he damned me for an old gray headed cuss, to get out of that, that I had no business there. Then my eyes were opened to see that I had been bitten, and also that I had been gambling, and I was filled with remorse, confusion and shame, just as our old mother was when she was bitten by that creature six thousand years before, but mother had the advantage of me, for she found fig leaves to hide her shame, but I could not find a fig leaf between Butler and Newville to hide mine, but had to make my way home from that paradise with my shame and confusion upon me, the worst snakebitten creature in all that crowd, and all the consolation and hope I had was that I might get home ahead of the intelligence of that event and hide myself in some secluded spot until the first impulses of my shame would have time to wear away, but in this I was mistaken, news outspeed the wind, and when I got to Newville, they were all well posted and ready to point the finger of scorn at the newly initiated gambler. But the worst of the tale is yet to relate, how could I go home and look my innocent wife in the face? (she is death on gamblers.) However I had the good fortune to first break the news to her myself, and give my own version of it which I did by giving the unvarnished truth, and was received with a great deal more favor than I had any reason to expect, but she did make a few home thrusts that I thought would rake the guilty soul out of me, but I promised God and her that if they would forgive me I would never gamble any more, and I have kept my word pretty well.

After my Butler snake bite I kept away from shows, until there was one gotten up by enlightened citizens and christians last fall in our neighboring town on the east, and certainly there was no harm in attending an exhibition where all christians could go, and I believe it was the best show that I was ever at, of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and poultry, and especially the ladies department which was excellent, and also the mechanics' work, and implements of husbandry. I never saw a better display of fruit and vegetables of all kinds which were all brought there and put on the wheel of fortune to see who would draw prizes Wife and I were there with our list of articles on the wheel of fortune with thousands of others and it was the happiest throng that I ever saw, if there were any that were low spirited and despondent, they had a kind of spiritual fluid, a glass of which whirled down the throat would whirl them into perfect felicity. All classes and characters were there, and all had their places of enjoyment. The preacher of the gospel with the people of his charge were there, the elder, the deacon, the class leader, and steward, sabbath school superintendent with class leaders and scholars, the statesman and the judge, the eloquent orator, the lawyer and his client, the doctor and his patient, the sportsman and the gamester with his wheel of fortune, the gamblers with their chuckluck banks, the fidler and the dancer. There was nothing to hurt or to devour in all that happy throng, it was a respite from all the cares, perplexities and sorrows of this stricken life. Delight sparkled in every eye and pleasure flashed from every countenance, I had to pause and ask myself the question, whether or not we hadn't progressed so fast in this age that we had already got into paradise, it was a glorious type of a univeral salvation, all tears were wiped away from the eyes, and there was no weeping there. Although heaven seemed very near, hell was not a great way off, for it would not have been long before those discordant, conflicting, and jarring interests would have brought on confusion, war, and perhaps bloodshed and engulfed the whole of that mass of human beings into one common hell. But the show passed off without any disastrous results, the prizes being awarded according to merit by the best of judges, and wife and I returned home with first and second prizes on all that we put on the wheel of fortune, and I thought that it was a high compliment for old pioneers that were born and tutored in an ignorant age, but I got to thinking how easy I might have got 5 or 6 dollars more prize money by going outside of the floral hall and venturing a few shillings on the other wheel, and there would be no gambling in that.

At the conclusion of the last show, I pastout into a great deal larger enclosure. It imbraces the entire American Republic and I believe it is the largest show on earth and all the time I have kept my eye on that big snake, that old serpent which is the Devil: I have been trying to watch him in all his wanderings up and down the earth. I have gone back to the commencement of 1861, I have traced him into every nook and corner of our American Republic until he became prime minister and counselor to the Republican party in the government, since which time we have progressed faster in religion and universal freedom than any Nation on earth and to it be all the glory for I don't think that god had any hand in it. That party has enlarged our constitutional liberties so that they embrace free conscience, free speech, free press, free suffrage, free negro, and free love. No nation on earth can boast of as much freedom as that, and the church appears to be about as free as the government. Such religion may do for this age but in the dark and benighted age in which I was born and tutored, it would have been called religion enough to make angels weep and devils laugh, it would have been called American freedom enough to make the goddess of liberty veil her face and weep, the American eagle to drop its stately head, to droop its majestic wings, and hide itself in some cliff beneath some overhanging rock. But the stars and stripes, that inanemate and unconscious rag, that old 'flaunting lie' may still be unfurled to the breeze, and wave in graceful folds over the land of the free and the home of the brave. But I must return to the snake, I have traced him round through the country until I have got him to the city of Washington, and into the executive mansion, where he has coiled himself up in the executive chair, and has proclaimed himself President of these United States, where he has been lashing the people with his tail and lacerating them with his fangs until they have become the greatest cowards on the face of god's footstool, and even uncle Sammy Tilden dare not go within 40 miles of that mansion to which he was elected by an overwhelming majority. And now fellow citizens of my beloved country and especially of DeKalb county, you have got my experience and confession of my Butler snake bite and of the disastrous results that it has had on me and the effects of the snake upon the whole country and unless you will awaken from your stupidity shake off your lethargy and rise up to the full hight of your patriotism and manhood and drive that monster out of Uncle Sammy's seat, you will bring down the gray hairs of Uncle Jimmy with sorrow to the grave.

UNCLE JIMMY.

In presenting the name of Hon. D. W. Voorhees for election to the United States Senate, Mr. Willard a member of the Indiana House of Representatives said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to nominate the next Senator from this State. As the representatives of the people of Indiana, it is our duty to reflect their desires and demands in the election of a citizen to this high official position The people of Indiana demand that their next Senator shall be a parliamentarian—the peer and superior of his adversaries on the floor of the Senate. They ask for a champion of the rights of the West, who is amply able to meet and defeat the representatives of the gigantic money power of Wall street. They want a financier whose heart is as cold as the eternal glaciers on the summit of Mount Blanc to the seductive flatteries of capital. They desire a leader ("Sans peur et sans reproche") fearless in defence, resistless in attack, and whose name shall carry terror into the ranks of our opponents—the party of wrong. They wish a statesman whose character is the apothesis of political honesty, and whose integrity is as immaculate as the plumage of the dove that descended from the bosom of the Father at the baptism of the Jordan. The people of Indiana demand that we shall elect as our Senator a man who shall recall our great leaders of the past, one who is a supporter of the grandest political principles ever enunciated by mortal lips, "Equal and exact justice toward all men; exclusive privileges to none." That principle forms the basis of our institutions, the impelling force of our progress, the crowning glory of our nation, and its supporters in the past are associated with all that is noble in our history. Beneath the encircling elms of Monticello rests in peace the great author of that principle, Thomas Jefferson. Where roll in endless summer the bright blue waves of the Chesapeake, in their own loved Virginia lie buried its great defenders, Madison and Monroe. The plumed palmetto nods in tropical beauty above the tomb of Carolina's gifted orator, John C. Calhoun. The birds that carol in the groves of the Hermitage sing their songs above the mortal remains of the lion hearted Tennessean, Andrew Jackson. "By the flow of the inland river" Missouri's greatest statesman, Thomas Hart Benton, "Sleeps the sleep that knows no waking." That river of poetry and romance, the Susquehanna, as it laps the banks of Lancaster, lulls with its murmur the ashes of Pennsylvania's great diplomist, James Buchanan. By the shore of the mighty lakes, a magnificent mausoleum and a marble cenotaph pointing heavenward record the virtues of the greatest political leader of them all—the little giant, Stephen A. Douglass. Though these great supporters of this principle have passed into the illuminations of history, though political contests have shaken the country, though wars and revolutions have convulsed our Government, the principle, "Equal and exact justice toward all men, exclusive privileges to none," fresh as on its natal morn, still remains an eternal bulwark to a nation's liberties, ground into the hearts of the people, and to-day finds its grandest champion and defender in the idol of Indiana, the next senator from this State. There is only one citizen of Indiana who, in his high character and lofty talents and abilities, fulfills the wants, desires, requirements and demands of this people in their choice for senator—that great leader who is inspired with all the fiery energy of the young Democracy, and imbued with the sage counsel of the old; that champion of the rights of the people who, on the floor of the Senate, dared to strike one powerful blow to wrest the rights of labor from the iron grasp of financial despotism; that statesman who has not only the ability to appreciate the wants of the people, but the manhood and fearless courage to right their wrongs; that clearest headed financier the West has ever produced, for he has never been deceived by the financial sophistries of Wall street; that noblest son of Indiana, who belongs not only to this State, not only to our own loved West, not to the Democratic party alone, but is the representative of all the oppressed toiled millions of America; that guide to whom an impoverished people are looking as their political Moses to lead them out of the Egypt of financial bondage over to the glorious promised land of better times.

Mr. Speaker, in behalf not of the Democracy on this floor, but in the name of the people of Indiana by fifty thousand majority, I place in nomination as the next senator from this State the grandest parliamentarian of the latter half of the nineteenth century, the truest friend of the people in this whole broad land, the brilliant orator who has thrilled a continent with his eloquence, Daniel W. Voorhees.

Boys and Pistols.

"I never could understand," the Deacon said, "why a boy should carry a pistol. A pistol is a very peculiar firearm; it is made for a very peculiar purpose. It is quite natural for some boys to want rifles or shot-guns, with which they may kill game; but a pistol is intended to kill human beings, and this is about all it is good for. There are very few boys in this country who could shoot a bird or a rabbit with a pistol, and any one who should go out hunting with a pistol would be laughed at. This being the case, why should a boy want a pistol? What human beings would he like to kill?

"It is usless to say that he may need his pistol for purposes of defense. Not one boy in a thousand is ever placed in such a position that he need defend himself with a pistol. But it often has happened that boys who carried loaded pistols thought that it would be a manly thing, under certain circumstances, to use them, and yet, when the time came and they killed somebody, they only brought down misery on themselves and their families. And this, too, in many a case where, if no one present had had a pistol, the affair would have passed off harmlessly, and been soon forgotten.

"But the way in which boys generally take human life with pistols is some accidental way. They do not kill highwaymen and robbers, but they kill their school-mates, or their brothers, or their sisters, or, in many cases, themselves. There is no school where boys are taught to properly handle and carry loaded pistols, so they usually have to learn these things by long practice. And, while they are learning, it is very likely that some one will be shot. I saw in a newspaper, not long ago, accounts of three fatal accidents, all of which happened on the same day, from careless use of fire-arms. And one of these dreadful mishaps was occasioned by a lad who carried a loaded pistol in his overcoat pocket, and who carelessly threw down the coat.

"And then, again, a boy ought to be ashamed to carry a pistol, especially a loaded one. The possession of such a thing is a proof that he expects to go among vicious people. If he goes into good society, and has honest, manly fellows for his companions, he will not need a pistol. A loaded pistol in a boy's pocket is not only useless and dangerous, but also it almost always stamps him as a bad boy, or one who wishes to associate with bad boys and vicious men."—St. Nicholas for February.

INDIANA STATE SENTINEL

FOR 1879

HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO

One Dollar Per Year

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 14,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepaired with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 30,000 new subscribers.

Portable Mulay Saw Mill,

With improvements recently made is unequaled as a neighborhood mill. It can be run by either steam or water power, and is especially adapted to the engines used for threshing.

It may be operated by either two or three men, and will cut as much lumber in proportion to the power and number of hands employed as mills of larger capacity.

It makes smooth and even lumber, leaves no [illegible] and will cut any sized log up to four feet in diameter. It may be transported from one locality to another and re-erected ready for sawing in from two to three days, and can be made profitable in localities where there is not sufficient timber to justify the erection of a large mill. WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE trial of Mrs. Kate Cobb, of Norwich, Ct., for the murder of her husband, by poisoning, has excited a good deal of attention at the East. The jury found her guilty of murder, and the Judge sentenced her to a life term of imprisonment. Her paramour will be tried in March.

A FIRE in Worth street, New York, on he 17th inst., burned out several large dry goods importers and inflicted a pecuniary loss of over $3,000,000. Following are the estimated losses: Van Valkenburg & Leavitt, $1,000,000; Walkingshaw & Voight, $500,000; Schnabel Bros., $150,000; John Slade & Co., $150,000; Henry W. T. Malloy & Co., $100,000; William Simpson, Sons & Co, $50,000; Nonotuck Silk Company, $50,000; B. S. Smith, $150,000; Forstman & Co., $250,000.

TWO NOTORIOUS counterfeiters, Henry C. Cole and Charles Ulrich, have just been arrested in New York. To them are traced the counterfeits upon several national banks in this country, and the many counterfeit bonds and notes so extensively circulated in Germany and brought to this country by emigrants.

MATTHEW T. BRENNAN, late Sheriff of New York city, and one of the leading Tammanyites, is dead.

IT is asserted by the "knowing ones" in New York that the body of the late A. T. Stewart was long since recovered, that it was fully identified by the family and friends of the deceased, and that $50,000 was paid for the delivery of the remains.

THE Arcade block, one of the finest in Elizabeth, N. J., containing the Opera House, Postoffice and Masonic Hall, has been burned. Loss estimated at $250,000....Hon. George S. Hilliard, one of the most distinguished citizens of Massachusetts, died the other day at his home in Boston. He was 70 years old.

THE WEST.

THE Grand Jury at St. Louis has indicted the officers of the defunct National Bank of Missouri, and they have all been held for trial in bonds of $10,000 each.

RELIABLE advices from the Northwest are to the effect that Sitting Bull's band of 5,000 lodges had crossed the line, and were camped on American soil with their faces southward. Sitting Bull, however, does not accompany them. He sends word to the Great Father that the expedition is eminently pacific. No hostility is intended. Sitting Bull represents that his people were starving and freezing in British America; that there were no buffalo, and that it was reduced to a question of life and death—hence he advised his followers to return to the United States and take their chances.

THE last chapter in the bloody Indian drama which began at Camp Robinson, Neb., three or four weeks ago was enacted some forty miles northwest of that post on the 21st of January, and resulted in the almost total extermination of the remnant of the Cheyenne band that escaped slaughter at the outset. A correspondent at Fort Robinson furnishes the following brief account of the affair: "The trail of the Cheyennes was followed from the bluffs, where the savages succeeded in killing Barber, by B and D companies of the Third Cavalry, commanded by Col. Evans, to a range of hills, where he found them intrenched, as usual, in a very strong position. Col. Evans comprehended the situation at a glance and made a charge, driving them from their stronghold, but not until his horse had been shot from under him, he having ridden at the head of his command. The Indians broke and ran, greatly deceiving Col. Evans, who thought they had moved but a few rods and were still in the bluffs, while they had made for the prairie in the direction of Chadron creek with a view of reaching their old rifle-pits, where they held the troops at bay in October. In the meantime Capt. Wessells was not idle, having had scouts out with a view of forming a communication with Col. Evans, who spied the escaping Cheyennes. The discovery was immediately conveyed to Capt. Wessells, who, with companies A, E, F and H of the Third Cavalry, started in pursuit of the fleeing reds. After riding all night, he was rewarded by discovering the savages in a small creek making rifle-pits. Without waiting a moment he gave the order for a charge, Wessells riding at the head of the first column. As the troops got within fifty yards of the savages, the latter opened fire with deadly effect, killing Sergt. Taggert, Farrier Brown and Private Nelson, of Company L, Third Cavalry, and wounding Sergt. Ambrose, of Company E, and the Indian scout, Woman's Dress, who voluntarily accompanied Wessells, when last starting from this post, as scout and trailer. Capt. Wessells was also slightly wounded. Only nine Cheyennes, all of them wounded, were captured. The remainder of the party, twenty-three in number, were killed. Seventeen are still unaccounted for. It is supposed that some died from wounds and that others escaped."

THE SOUTH.

LIEUT. GOV. HULL, of Florida, has been indicted by the United States Grand Jury, at Jacksonville, in that State, on a charge of conspiracy with others in obtaining returns of elections in Brevard county.

INFORMATION has been received at Washington of the arrest by a warrant of the State or municipal authorities of Alabama of United States District Attorney Mayer and United States Marshal Turner, the latter being now in jail, and the former having been released on a writ of habeas corpus issued by United States District Judge Bruce. These officers were commanded by a State court to deliver before it certain ballot-boxes and ballots used at the November election, they being at the time in question used by the Grand Jury of the United States Court, sitting at Montgomery, as evidence in certain cases therein pending on indictments for violation of the election laws of the United States. Mayer and Turner refused to obey the mandate; hence their arrest.

IN the United States Court at Jacksonville, Fla., last week, State Senator-elect Lee, Sheriff Wright and Justice Johns, members of the Brevard County Canvassing Board at the late election, were convicted of making false returns, and sentenced by Judge Settle to the penitentiary—Lee to a term of three years and the other two to one year each.

WASHINGTON.

THE President has nominated Wm. G. Thompson, of Iowa, for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Idaho.

A STATEMENT prepared for Secretary Sherman shows that the total receipts of gold at the various sub-treasuries since resumption day, is largely in excess of the amount paid out in exchange for greenbacks. In future the interest coupons of Government bonds will be paid either in gold or greenbacks, at the option of the holders, at any sub-treasury.

A CONTRACT was recently completed between the Secretary of the Treasury and N. M. Rothschild & Sons, J. S. Morgan & Co., Seligman Bros., and Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and A. Belmont & Co., Drexel, Morgan & Co., J. and W. Seligman & Co., and Morton, Bliss & Co., New York, for the sale and delivery in Europe of not less than $5,000,000 per month of the 4 per cent. bonds upon the same terms and conditions as the popular loan is now being offered in the United States. The contract is to continue until the 1st of July, the proceeds to be applied to refunding the 6 per cent. bonds. The contract was made to provide the exchange of 4 per cent. bonds for 6 per cent. 5-20 bonds held in Europe.

MR. SPRINGER, of Illinois, has introduced in Congress "a bill to secure to the people of every State equal and just representation." It provides that, after the next census, the Legislature of each State shall apportion the State under the census of 1880, so as to provide that when more than two members of Congress are elected in a State the State shall be divided into districts of three members each, as far as possible, and when there are two odd Representatives, that is, over three, or six, or nine, etc., there shall be one district consisting of five members. In districts consisting of three members every elector shall vote for only two members of Congress, and in districts entitled to five members every elector shall vote for three members.

POLITICAL.

TUESDAY, Jan. 21, might appropriately be termed "Senatorial day," on account of the number of United States Senators chosen by State Legislatures. In Illinois John A Logan was elected to succeed Richard J. Oglesby. The vote stood: Logan, Republican, 106; J. C. Black, Democrat, 84; Alexander Campbell, National, 10; John McAuliff, Socialist, 3.—In New York, Roscoe Conkling, Republican, was elected as his own successor, he receiving 115 votes, to 35 for William Dorsheimer, the Democratic caucus nominee, and 2 for Peter Cooper, National. The Indiana Legislature chose Daniel W. Voorhees, Democrat, to succeed himself, the vote standing: Voorhees, 83; Ben Harrison, the Republican caucus nominee, 60; James Buchanan, National, 3. Mr. Voorhees was also elected for the short term, expiring March 4, the Republicans voting for G. S. Orth. In Pennsylvania, J. Donald Cameron, Republican, was chosen as his own successor, by a vote of 135, to 78 for Heister Clymer, the Democratic nominee; 16 for Daniel Agnew, National, and 5 scattering. The Missouri Legislature elected George G. Vest, Democrat, as the successor of David H. Armstrong, Democrat, for the long term, and James Shields, Democrat, for the short term intervening between now and March 4. In North Carolina, Zebulon B. Vance, Democrat, was successful in securing the seat now occupied by A. S. Merrimon, Democrat. The Connecticut Legislature elected Orville H. Platt, Republican, as the successor of Mr. Barnum, Democrat. The Florida Legislature chose Wilkinson Call, Democrat, to succeed Mr. Conover, Republican. The Legislatures of Wisconsin, Louisiana and Arkansas balloted for Senator, but failed to reach a choice.

MATT H. CARPENTER has been elected to the United States Senate from Wisconsin. He will take the seat occupied by Senator Howe, who retires on the 4th of March, after eighteen years' continuous service....Samuel J. Tilden is said to be seeking the Governorship of New York next fall as the stepping-stone to the renomination for the Presidency in 1880.

AT a meeting of the Potter Committee, the other day, Gen. Butler related his connection with the cipher dispatches. He said he found them, to the number of 640, upon his private table last spring, but did not know who placed them there. He had nothing to do with their publication, as they had been furnished to the New York Tribune before they came into his hands. During the summer they were missed for several weeks, and subsequently they were found again, when he had them numbered and stamped and put in a place of safety. He was willing to place them at the service of the committee. It was decided by the committee to at once go into an investigation of the telegrams.

GENERAL.

CREMATIONS: Thomas Johnson's dwelling, at Kingston, Ontario, was burned, and his two little daughters perished in the flames; Mrs. Davis and her baby were burned to death by the explosion of kerosene at Hyde Park, Pa.; William O'Brien and two sons were burned to death in their logging camp at Milbury Brook, N. B.

FOREIGN.

A STREET rumpus opposite the Bank of London attracted a large crowd, which led depositors to believe that there was a run on the bank. Then there was a run in reality, that came near draining the institution of all its cash.

WESTON, the American pedestrian, has started from London to walk over the highways of England, 2,000 miles in 1,000 hours.

A SERIOUS Ministerial crisis has been averted in France by a compromise between the Republicans and Conservatives of the Chamber of Deputies, and a resolution passed expressing confidence in the Government.

A BERLIN dispatch states that Bismarck has decided to withdraw the Parliamentary Discipline bill, leaving the matter to the Reichstag.

THE steamship Oberon, bound from New Orleans for Liverpool, was caught in a severe gale off the southwest coast of England, broke her propeller, ran ashore, and became a total wreck. All the crew were saved.

IT is reported from Berlin that a superior officer of the German army has betrayed to a foreign power the most momentous military secrets, including the all-important plan of mobilizing the army. The suspected person is a Baronet and a Major of artillery. He is under arrest....By the capsizing of a boat at Antwerp, Belgium, eight men were drowned.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

ABRAHAM THOMAS (colored), of Tensas parish, testified before the Teller Committee, on the 17th, that, during the late election, he met a body of armed whites, who chased witness. That night the same men came and took Charley Bethel, a colored man, out of his house, shot him, and cut his throat. Ross Stewart, a prominent colored politician, of Tensas, a member of the Legislature, testified that threats of violence prevented the Republicans from nominating a ticket. Witness testified to several acts of bulldozing, and gave the names of fifteen negroes alleged to have been murdered.

THE Teller Committee, on Jan. 18th, examined W. B. Merchant, District Attorney of St. Mary's parish, who testified concerning the attack on Newman's house, but nothing new was developed. It was ordered that United States Commissioner Lane take testimony of witnesses not examined for Natchitoches, Tensas and Catahoula parishes; that Morris Marks represent the majority and B. F. Jonas the minority. The testimony so taken will be transmitted to Mr. Teller and treated as if taken by the committee. The committee then left for Charleston, S. C.

THE Teller Committee, consisting of Senators Teller, Kirkwood, Cameron, Randolph and McDonald, began their investigation of the late general election in South Carolina, at Charleston, on the 21st of January. All the witnesses examined were from Charleston county, and it was admitted by both Democrats and Republicans that all the election officers, excepting clerks, were appointed upon the recommendation of the Democratic committee; that one of the three Commissioners of Election for the county was a Republican; that the managers of election at the different precincts were exclusively Democrats, and the United States Supervisors at the different polls were not allowed to have a clerk, there being no provision of law for such person. It was also testified that the Democratic Supervisors had no clerks, and that the clerks of Republican Supervisors were excluded from the polling places by order of the Democratic committee. The Republican witnesses, of whom three or four were examined, testified that there were numerous tissue ballots found in the boxes at various precincts in Charleston county, in some instances these tissue ballots exceeding the number of actual voters. The Democratic witnesses admitted the printing of tissue ballots by the Democratic committee, and said the object in issuing them was to enable the colored people to vote secretly for the Democratic candidates without risk of molestation.

FIVE witnesses were examined by the Teller Committee, at Charleston, on Jan. 22—three of them colored Republicans, and two white Democrats. It is scarcely necessary to state that their statements did not agree. The colored witnesses maintained that bulldozing, intimidation, fraud and general deviltry characterized the late election in that city; the whites, on the other hand, maintaining that the election was fair and peaceable, and that every colored man was allowed to vote for whom he pleased.

THE Teller Committee examined four witnesses at Charleston, on the 23d of January—three colored men and one white man, all Republicans. They all testified to acts of bulldozing and intimidation, and also to the finding of tissue ballots in some of the boxes.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, Jan. 17.—SENATE.—A resolution was offered by Mr. Saulsbury calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information in regard to the refunding of the national debt. It was laid over. ....The balance of the day was spent in considering the bill to amend the Patent laws.... Messrs. McDonald and Randolph were appointed to serve as members of the Teller Committee, in place of Messrs. Wallace and Bayard, who were excused at their own request.... Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the day, in committee of the whole, to the private calendar.... After laying aside several bills to report to the House, the bill was reached for the payment of $100,000 to the Trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Seminary and High School in Virginia for rent of buildings during the war. Quite a lengthy discussion followed, the opponents of the bill asserting it was a war claim, and the friends of the measure stating it was a just bill for rent of property, and the Government was as much bound to pay rent for this building as for any other building occupied by it. Without reaching a vote the committee rose, and the House adjourned.

SATURDAY, Jan. 18.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The House took up and passed the Geneva Award bill. It revives and continues the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims; fixes the number of Judges at three; requires the court to convene and organize as soon as practicable in Washington, and limits its existence to eighteen months. It provides that no claim by or in behalf of any insurance company shall be admitted or allowed by the Court of Claims unless such claimant shall show that the sum of its losses in respect to war risks exceeded the premiums or gains, and then the allowance shall not be greater than such excess. No claim is to be admissible in favor of any insurance company that was not lawfully existing at the time of the loss under the law of the United States.

MONDAY, Jan. 20.—SENATE.—Mr. Cockrell introduced a bill to provide a uniform national currency....Mr. Morgan submitted a substitute agreed upon in the Democratic caucus for Mr. Edmunds' resolution concerning suffrage and the later constitutional amendments. Laid on the table. The following are the resolutions: "1. It is the judgment of the Senate that the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States are as valid and binding as any other parts of the constitution; that the people of the United States have a common interest in the enforcement of the whole constitution in every State and Territory in the United States, so far as power has been delegated to them, to enforce said amendments, and to protect every citizen in the exercise of all rights thereby secured. 2. That the Government of the United States and the Governments of the several States are distinct, and each has citizens of its own who owe it allegiance, and whose rights within its jurisdiction it must protect; that the Government of the United States is one of delegated powers alone; its authority is defined and limited by the constitution; all powers not granted it by that instrument, not prohibited to it by the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people, and that no right can be acquired under the constitution, or secured through the laws of the United States, except such as the Government of the United States has authority to grant or secure. 3. That the constitution of the United States has not conferred the right of suffrage upon any one, and the United States have no voters of their own creation in the States, but the Fifteenth amendment of the constitution has invested citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right, which is an exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and it is within the jurisdiction of the United States, which Congress may exert by appropriate legislation, to prevent the denial or abridgement by a State of the right of a citizen to vote, when such denial or abridgement is on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the voter. 4. That, when such right to vote is denied or abridged by the conduct of a person who is not acting by authority and obedience to the laws of the State, the jurisdiction to punish such conduct is in the State Government, and is not in the Government of the United States."

HOUSE.—The day was a dull one in the House, the time being consumed in the introduction of bills, and those offered were of little importance.

TUESDAY, Jan. 21.—SENATE.—Mr. Morrill, from the Committee on Finance, reported, without amendment, the House bill passed by the House on the 16th inst., to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. Placed on the calendar....Mr. Matthews presented a bill to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases in the United States, and to establish a Bureau of Public Health. Referred.... Mr. Chaffee introduced a joint resolution directing the cancellation of $1 and $2 United States notes. Laid on the table, to be called up by Mr. Chaffee hereafter....The Senate bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds held by him as trustee for the Indian tribes in the treasury of the United States in lieu of investment, led to a long discussion, without action.

HOUSE.—Mr. Potter offered a resolution authorizing an investigation into the cipher dispatches, which led to a protracted debate. Mr. Potter alluded to the history connected with the formation of the Potter Committee, and his refusal at that time to allow an amendment to the resolution so that the Oregon dispatches should be inquired into. He denied that he had ever been controlled by Tilden in any way. Mr. Butler opposed the resolution. He thought the House had no jurisdiction over the subject, and said it would be better to give the $10,000 asked for to the families of poor men, instead of wasting it in investigating private dispatches. Mr. Hale followed in a brief speech, earnestly advocating the investigation. He thought it was due to the simple old man in New York who was dragged out as a Democratic candidate, and whose good name was imperiled by his trusted friends. Mr. Conger said that the Republicans came here in December, expecting the Democracy to rush forward with a resolution for investigating, but he had been amazed at the long silence. The Republicans kept quiet, but it was hard work, and he was glad now, at this late hour, that Mr. Potter had been moved. Mr. Hewitt favored the resolution, saying that, as Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, he had never sent a dispatch which would not bear the light. He never heard of these cipher dispatches until they were in print. The investigation was demanded by justice to an outraged leader of the Democratic party, and by the party itself. An investigation would vindicate Tilden from calumny heaped upon him by the Republicans. The resolution was then adopted by a vote of 191 yeas to 120 nays.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 22.—SENATE.—Mr. Garland, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted a minority report on the claim of Mr. McGarrahan, together with a bill placing all claimants to the Rancho Panoche Grand, in California, in the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. Laid on the table, the bill and report to be printed....The House bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt was passed unanimously. The bill now goes to the President....Mr. Davis (Ill.) introduced a bill to prevent and punish counterfeiting, within the United States, of notes, bonds, and other securities of foreign Governments. Referred.

HOUSE.—The bill was passed appropriating $60,000 for the transportation of coin and bullion, and $40,000 for the miscellaneous expenses of the House....The Senate amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were non-concurred in....Mr. Stephens introduced a bill defining and describing the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury in certain cases. Referred....Quite a stormy debate arose in regard to the Southern Claim bill, in the course of which Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, stated that, if the South was solid for the Democratic party simply for the purpose of getting money out of the treasury, it would be well for the Northern Democracy if the Southern Democrats went over to the Republican party, and he hoped they would do so. Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, replied to Mr. Bragg. He said the Southern people were as true to the Democratic party as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Bragg), and if was in obedience to Democratic teachings, as the Southern people had understood them, that they had gone into the war.

THURSDAY, Jan. 23.—SENATE.—Mr. Morrill, from the special committee in regard to taking the census, reported a bill, which was placed on the calendar....Mr. Burnside reported favorably the House bill to promote the education of the blind....The report of the conference committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was agreed to, and the bill passed. The total amount appropriated is $1,0[illegible],025....The bill to amend the Patent laws was discussed.

HOUSE.—The conference report on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was agreed to.....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was then reported....The House, in committee of the whole, debated at length the bill to apply the proceeds of the sale of public lands to the education of the people....Mr. Cox (N. Y.), Chairman of the Committee on Census, reported a bill for taking the Federal census. Ordered printed and recommitted. Mr. Ryan, from the same committee, submitted the views of the minority. Ordered printed and recommitted....An evening session was held for the consideration of the bill for the classification of mail matter, and to regulate the rate of postage thereon. It divides the mail matter into four classes: First, written matter; second, periodical publications under registration; third, miscellaneous printed matter; and fourth, merchandise; and makes the rates of postage uniform on all periodicals, whether daily, weekly, monthly or quarterly. The bill was satisfactory to the publishers of the country. A number of amendments were offered, and, after debate, rejected, when Mr. Waddell, Chairman of the committee, remarked that the bill had the approval of all the legitimate publishers of the country, and that it was being "talked to death by filli-music," and he therefore moved to adjourn. Agreed to.

Cleanliness.

That cleanliness is essential to health is a fact that cannot be questioned; nor is it to be wondered at when we remember that the skin of an ordinary-sized man has been calculated to contain about twenty-eight miles of perspiratory tubes continually exuding more or less moisture, and relieving the body of a large amount of waste matter. The mischief which must follow the obstruction of this immense drain by dirt and other causes must be obvious. The skin is also a great breathing surface, which is proved by the fact that if an animal is coated with an impermeable varnish it is suffocated in a short time just as effectually as if it had been strangled with a cord. Lastly, the skin is a great absorbent of various matters coming in contact with it, and in this way lead, arsenic and other poisons may enter the body. Cleanliness is, therefore, absolutely necessary in (1) promoting a healthy perspiration, and through this a uniform temperature of the body; (2) in largely assisting the lungs in the performance of the function of respiration; (3) in preventing the absorption of poisonous matter. To clean the skin thoroughly from the scurf and oily matter, soft water will be found more effectual than hard, its solvent power for saline matter being greater, and, when soap is added, the oily matter is at once saponified and the cleansing is complete. Soap and water should be used at least twice in the twenty-four hours on the exposed parts, the face and hands, and the whole body should be sponged daily with cold or lukewarm water or soap. Warm water or the Turkish bath (in suitable cases) should be used about once a week, and will be found conducive to health. Cleanliness in the matter of clothing is also very important, as through this channel germs of disease are carried about which not only infect the person carrying them, but likewise those with whom they come in contact.

Richards Sentenced to Death.

The special term of court for the trial of S. D. Richards, the Kearney county murderer, occupied only one day. Three indictments were found by the Grand Jury. The first charged Richards with the murder of Peter Anderson on the 9th day of last December. The second was for the murder of Mrs. Harleson and three children on the 2d day of November, and the third for the murder of an unknown man near the Platte river in the spring of 1878. He was arraigned for the murder of Peter Anderson, and pleaded not guilty of murder in the first degree. The prisoner's statement under oath was as follows: "On the 9th day of December I had a quarrel with Peter Anderson in his house. He told me that I lied. I knocked him down. He got up, and I knocked him down again. I then asked him if he would give it up. He said he would not, and I told him that if he did not take back what he had said one of us must die right there. He turned toward a part of the room where an ax was standing, and I seized a hammer which lay upon the window-sill and struck him two or three blows upon the head. He fell and never got up again. I carried his body down cellar." The evidence on the part of the State was almost the same as the accounts already published. The attorney for the defense asked for a verdict of manslaughter. After being out two hours the jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, and the prisoner was immediately sentenced by Judge Gaslin to be hanged on the 26th day of April. This is just the 101 days allowed by law. The prisoner preserved his indifference throughout, and was apparently the happiest man in the house. There is now danger of his being lynched.—Kearney (Neb.) Cor. Chicago Times.

Some Pork.

The whole number of hogs packed during the season of 1877-8 amounted to 9,965,000. The aggregate quantity of pork and pork products for the year is about 1,800,000,000 pounds, of which more than half was exported to foreign countries. With such an enormous production, prices have, of course, been greatly reduced; but, on the whole, the amount of money which has found its way into farmers' pockets from this business is over $50,000,000. As compared with the prices of other things, these $50,000,000 represent as much value as the larger amounts in other years when prices were higher. It is not the money itself, but what the money can effect in exchanges, which fixes the valued and profit from it, and on this basis there is not much to complain of in the last season's pork business.

Not Sorry.

You will not be sorry for hearing before judging.
For thinking before speaking.
For holding an angry tongue.
For stopping the ear to a tale-bearer.
For disbelieving most of the ill reports.
For being kind to the distressed.
For being patient toward everybody.
For doing good to all men.
For asking pardon for all wrongs.
For speaking evil of no one.
For being courteous to all.

A TARDY REPRIEVE.

Sixty Seconds Too Late—An Extraordinary Scene at the Hanging of McDonnell and Sharpe, in Mauch Chunk, Pa.

While the noose was being adjusted McDonnell trembled violently several times and was as pale as a ghost, but he still kept repeating his prayers. Sharpe, on the contrary, was the picture of coolness, and manifested no more concern than if he was taking part in an ordinary every-day event. All being in readiness, the Sheriff and assistant descended from the scaffold. The supports were withdrawn, and at 10:42 o'clock McDonnell and Sharpe were swinging in mid-air.

Scarcely had the drop fallen when a most extraordinary scene took place. The bell at the prison door was rung so violently as to cause the sound to reverberate throughout the building. The Sheriff was so annoyed that he sent a deputy outside with orders to arrest the person who committed the outrage. Scarcely had the deputy opened the door when Sharpe and McDonnell's brothers rushed in, one of them flourishing a dispatch, in the highest state of excitement. Hardly had they entered the corridor before they saw that the sentence of the law had been executed. Both rushed forward to the foot of the scaffold, when McDonnell's brother, an old, white-haired man, screamed at the top of his voice, "Oh, you murderers! Here you are all around them now. Pontius Pilate sentenced Jesus Christ and you have murdered my brother." The priests immediately rushed forward to quiet the men, but for a long time all their efforts were unavailing. Being confronted by the Sheriff, they said the reprieve had been there before the rope was around their necks. While the clergymen were trying to quiet the excited men the Sheriff obtained possession of the dispatch, and read that the men had been granted a reprieve by the Governor until Monday, Jan. 20. The brothers accused the Sheriff of desiring to hang them while anticipating a reprieve. The priests denied this statement, and said that the Sheriff had told them he was willing to postpone the execution until 2 o'clock, if necessary, but they had told him to proceed when everything was prepared. The men were quieted, but not entirely satisfied. Another brother of McDonnell, who knelt at the foot of the scaffold while the execution was in progress, also took part in the altercation, and for a time a most disgraceful scene ensued. Meanwhile Mrs. McDonnell, who had been telegraphed for by the Sheriff, had reached the jail too late to see her husband again in life, and, accompanied with her daughter and the friends of both men, was screaming at the top of her voice. The spectacle was one to touch the heart of the most sordid, and the poor women received sympathy on all sides. At length, after much difficulty, the policemen succeeded in clearing the room of all except the officials and the friends of the dead men. The bodies, which had been forgotten by all except the physicians during the exciting altercation, were cut down. Both men had died from strangulation.

Though the statement of the priests partially acquits the Sheriff of undue haste in the execution, the fact has been learned that Sheriff Raudenbush telegraphed to Mrs. McDonnell last night to come to Mauch Chunk if she wanted to see her husband alive for the last time, and, well knowing that the train arrived at 10:20 a. m., and that the poor woman could not have had time to reach the jail, which is a mile from the depot, he swung her husband into eternity just as she reached the jail door panting for breath. This instance subjects the Sheriff to much censure, and people of all nationalities are loud in their denunciations.

Eccentric Noah Barker.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal prints brief biographical sketches of the members of the new Legislature of the State. Third in the list of Senators appears the following:

Barker, Noah, Corinth (Penobscot county); Independent; no isms in religion; "do right and risk the consequences;" land surveyor and farmer, or "own my farm and farming tools;" married; age 71. Born in Exeter, then a plantation called "Blaisdelltown." Educated in the common schools and at Hampden and Foxcroft academies, but mainly at the family fireside. For many years a member of the Superintending School Committee; Town Clerk; Selectman; County Commissioner and State Land Agent. Member of Maine House of Representatives in 1838, 1840, and 1856. Was a Democrat till the party leaders were for extending slavery into our free territories; then a Republican till a still worse bondage ensued. In regard to other events in his life—

WHAT DOES IT MATTER?

It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank at the cold world's scorn,
Or walked in the pride of wealth secure;
But whether I live an honest man,
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, brother, plain as I can,
It matters much!

It matters little how long I stay
In a world of sorrow, sin, and care;
Whether in youth I am called away,
Or live till my bones and pate are bare;
But whether I do the best I can
To soften the weight of adversity's touch
On the faded cheek of my fellow-man,
It matters much!

It matters little where be my grave,
Or on the land or on the sea;
By purling brook or 'neath stormy wave,
It matters little or naught to me;
But whether the angel Death comes down
And marks my brow with his loving touch,
As one that shall wear the victor's crown,
It matters much!

Going Back to Farms.

Just after the war, when inflated prices painted pictures of fortunes in all kinds of city and town vocations—when banking, insurance and the agency business were supposed to yield wealth almost without limit, and when it was believed that fortunes could be made by merely organizing some kind of stock company and putting the shares on the market, there was a general flocking of young men from farms to cities and towns, to get rich without labor. But that delusion has ended in bitterness and disappointment to thousands all over the land, and proved that the game of living by the wits is one that very few can thrive at. We are beginning to realize that farming possesses one pre-eminent merit—it will yield a living, if nothing more, and that is more than can be said of many city pursuits. It is generally esteemed a plodding, unromantic business; but this is offset by its exemption from the harassments and tragic features that too often mark the painful and exhausting struggle for the maintenance of credit and social position in city life. It requires but a small capital to go to farming. This offers a simple solution to the livelihood problem to all who are willing to work, and it is gratifying to find that the fact is beginning to be realized by many weary of prolonged idleness in cities.—St. Louis Republican.

A Fast Boy.

Apropos of an incident that recently happened in the streets of this city, a well-known railroad man tells the following romantic story, which, if the accounts are to be relied on, occurred about the same time:

A few nights since, while the Kansas Pacific train was making lightning time across the plains in the direction of Denver, the emigrant car was occupied by a solitary woman and three little tow-headed children. Occasionally passing through, the conductor had observed that the passenger was apparently very uneasy, and frequently inquired how long it would be before they reached their destination; but he gave the matter little attention, naturally supposing it was merely the outgrowth of female impatience. What was his surprise, then, when, on going back into the car a few hours afterward, to have his ears assailed by the loud shrieks of a new-born infant, and to see the mother evidently equal to the situation, and giving to this addition to her family the attention which the circumstances required.

"Why, great heavens!" exclaimed the conductor, "what's the matter here?"

"Nothing at all—the matter's all over," replied the woman, a wintry smile playing around her pale lips.

"You don't mean to tell me that child has just been born?"

"Well, not exactly; it's something like an hour old," and the happy mother dexterously invested it in a bit of ragged calico, which she had been smoothing out for the purpose.

"But don't you need some help—some attention—the presence of some female?" stammered the bewildered official. "I never heard anything like this before."

"Oh, no, it's all right now. I'm getting along splendidly."

The conductor beat a hasty retreat, and, having fished up an old woman in some other part of the train, sent her in to attend to his self-reliant passenger. An hour or two afterward he gave her another call, and found the lady serene and happy.

"How's that youngster getting along?" he asked.

"First rate," replied the smiling mother. "I say, conductor, this is rather a fast boy, ain't he?"

"I should say he was—he came into the world at the rate of twenty miles an hour."

"I'm going to make a railroad man of him."

"It's a good idea."

The conductor looked a little embarrassed for a moment, and then felt nervously in his pocket and produced a $10 bill.

"Madam, just take that and buy this boy an outfit, and when he gets big enough dispatch him by express to my train. I'll make a railroad man of him if there's anything in birth," and, with his politest bow, the conductor took his leave. In a few minutes the train reached its destination, and the woman, with her baby, disappeared in the throbbing life and bustle of the city.—Denver (Col.) News.

Paddy Ahead.

A gentleman of the Hibernian nation was making himself disagreeable in a Virginia street saloon last night by insisting upon the superiority of Ireland over every other country on earth in any and all respects. The beer was better there than here—the beef, the bread, the houses, the land, the schools, the people, and so on through the list.

"I suppose," said an old-timer, with a frightful sneer, "I suppose you will say next that they have found more gold and silver in Ireland than they have in Nevada!"

"No, sor," replied Paddy, "but fwhat they've found there be of a darnsight better quality."—Reno (Nev.) Gazette.

FARM NOTES.

Hints for the Season.

(From the Rural New Yorker.)

CARE OF CELLARS.—If they are too cold, bank up the outside with something, or place a double thickness of newspapers over the windows. This lets in some light and prevents the escape of heat. A double floor, or fire in the room over the cellar, will help to keep out the frost. A kerosene stove in the cellar may be used in extreme cases. Ventilate on suitable days, and clean out decaying vegetables and fruits.

EXTRA HELP.—Look about early in the season, and get your pick of hands in the market. Make a written bargain in detail, no matter if you are well acquainted. This will prevent misunderstanding. The man agrees to remain a certain number of months; to perform certain chores Sunday or holidays; to start about such an hour in the morning, and close at such an hour in the evening. If, in case of an emergency, he works longer, he may have certain privileges to compensate for it. In case he quits before his time is out, he only receives a certain stipulated sum.

CALVES AND SHEEP.—Lard and kerosene are good to keep lice from calves; sulphur mixed with salt is good to drive ticks from sheep. Calves, like all animals, should be kept growing from birth to maturity. Here is one place where the profit comes in. There is always a loss of time and feed and more, too, by allowing young animals to "stand still" for six months or more of the year. Sheep are well clothed and need shelter from snow and rain, and perhaps from the very strongest winds, but cold agrees with them. Feed them well; give them plenty of water, in small flocks; keep them dry, and they may stay out in the cold and thrive. A close, dark pen is a poor place for sheep.

WOOD, TOOLS, ICE.—Cut a supply of wood, posts, rails and logs for lumber, ready to be moved easily on the advent of sleighing. No thrifty farmer will leave these things to be done in the busier seasons. Get wagons and buggies repaired and painted, as well as tools and implements for summer use. Make stone-boats, cut handspikes and stakes, and get ready everything which can be got ready. Snow may be scraped from the ice to keep it clear and allow it to freeze thick. If you have never tried it, build a cheap ice-house, and enjoy a cheap luxury next summer. The cakes should be cut of even size, and set on edge close together. There should be perfect drainage at the bottom, but no access of air. Around all, place a layer of eighteen inches of sawdust.

LOOK BEHIND AND BEFORE.—Now is the time to make plans for the campaign of 1879. Take an inventory of the farm-stock and everything on hand. If this has never been done before, the proprietor will doubtless be surprised to find how much he owns. Straighten up the books, and the little debts, and collect those due from neighbors. Small accounts should not run long. Trust not to memory. Arrange the books for the business of the year. Study over the plans considerably in detail, and do not wait till the ground is ready to plow before deciding what to do. Look over the past and study the good hints and the failures—whether all was done to the best advantage; whether there was too little or too much help. This should lead to better plans for the future. Nothing can bring larger returns, for the time, than a few weeks spent in accordance with the above suggestions.

COWS.—Treat them generously and kindly, but do not keep them fat, unless they are to be turned off for beef. A cow is a machine, a laboratory for converting raw materials into milk. If little be given, little will be received. All animals should have exercise, especially those kept for breeding. Some of them are naturally lazy, but they will be the better for stirring about in the open air. It is cruel to keep animals tied up or shut up for days at a time. They need light, too. Direct sunshine exerts a powerful influence for good on animals as well as on plants. Do not overlook a good supply of pure water two or three times a day; or good ventilation and proper clearing of stables. When the ground is frozen and covered with snow it may be well enough, on pleasant days, to scatter the fodder, and allow the stock plenty of room to pick it up, but, when it is muddy, no one but a sloven will fodder on the ground. Good racks should be made for the sake of convenience and economy.

Effects of Railway Accidents.

Accounts of railroad accidents frequently state that, although the engine and cars were badly damaged, the passengers escaped without serious injury. Yet many persons can recollect instances of men whose health steadily declined after they had passed apparently unharmed through some mishap to a train, and whose sufferings were terminated by death more or less sudden. Some light has been cast on cases of this kind by a paper read last month, before the Medical Society of the King and Queen's College of Physicians, Dublin, by Dr. McSwiney. In a railroad collision there may result to a passenger (1) shock merely, or (2) concussion, or (3) contusion of the cerebro-spinal system. In shock the functions of the nerves are impaired, and the action of the nervous system is thus lowered. It has been found that great confusion and injury, either temporary or permanent, to the nervous functions sometimes follow from a shock to the cerebro-spinal system, when the soft cerebral and spinal mass is struck violently against the bony case in which it is inclosed. That slight blows often cause serious results is now well established. An apparently trifling injury to the back or sacrum may give rise to an inflammatory process, which may, after the lapse of years even, end fatally. And, often, a slowly creeping-on paralysis will ensue upon a shock to the cerebro-spinal center, when at first no ill result was apparent. In such cases, the seeming contradiction may sometimes be noticed that, whereas the more severe and dangerous phenomena often result in the very cases in which injury appears to be trifling, on the other hand, it occasionally occurs that the severest primary lesions present to observation only slight and unimportant symptoms.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

TO REMOVE TAN.—Lemon juice used freely upon the face at night, and permitted to dry there, will be found, after a few applications, to remove tan from the features, though we consider it a matter of little importance. Some ladies are sensitive about the matter of tan, but men should never be; it is becoming to them.

TO DESTROY VERMIN.—Croton bugs and red ants can be driven off by sprinkling the floor with pulverized borax, and leaving a place for them to get out; to kill them mix borax with sugar, so they will eat it. For ants or other vermin, wash the shelves with a strong solution of borax; then sprinkle the same with borax mixed with sugar. When whitewashing your room, add a table-spoonful of pulverized borax to each pailful of lime.

WOOLEN CLOTHS.—When woolens are worn threadbare, as is often the case in the elbows, cuffs, sleeves, etc., of men's coats, the coats must be soaked in cold water for half an hour; then take out of the water and put on a board, and the threadbare parts of the cloth rubbed with a half-worn hatter's "card," filled with flocks, or with a prickly thistle, until a sufficient nap is raised. When this is done, hang the coat up to dry, and, with a hard brush, lay the nap the right way.

CONDIMENTS.—It is not enough that food should contain alimentary principles in proper quantity; to render it really nutritious there must also be a supply of condiments. These may be compared to oil in a machine, which neither makes good the waste of material nor supplies motive power, yet causes it to work easier and better, rendering essential service in the process of nutrition, though they are not of themselves able to prevent waste of any part of the body.

BEEFSTEAK, MADRID STYLE.—Take a piece of rump steak about three-quarters of an inch thick. Trim it neatly and beat it with the cutlet-bat, sprinkle it with pepper, dip it in oil, and broil it over a clear fire. Turn it after it has been on the fire a minute or two, and keep turning it till done; eight or ten minutes will do it. Sprinkle it with salt, and serve with a small quantity of finely-minced parsley and a piece of butter mixed together, and place over or under the steak. Garnish with fried potatoes.

BEEF TEA.—Take one pound of lean beef, free of fat and separated from the bone, and reduce it to the finely-chopped state in which it is used for beef sausages; uniformly mix with its own weight in water, slowly heated to boiling, and the liquid, after boiling briskly for a minute or two, is to be strained through a towel from the coagulated albumen and the fibrine, now become hard and horny. Thus is obtained an equal weight of the most aromatic soup, of such strength as cannot be obtained even by boiling for hours from a piece of flesh.

TO SUGAR OR CRYSTALLIZE POP-CORN.—Put into an iron kettle one table-spoonful of butter, three table-spoonfuls of water, and one teacupful of white sugar; boil until ready to candy, then throw in three quarts of corn, nicely popped; stir briskly until the candy is evenly distributed over the corn; set the kettle from the fire and stir until it is cooled a little and you have each grain separate and crystallized with the sugar; care should be taken not to have too hot a fire lest you scorch the corn when crystallizing. Nuts of any kind prepared this way are delicious.

IMPORTANCE OF AIRING BEDS.—The desire of an energetic housekeeper to have her work completed at an early hour in the morning causes her to leave one of the most important items of neatness undone. The most effectual purifying of bed and bed-clothes cannot take place if no time is allowed for the free circulation of pure air to remove all human impurities which have collected during the hours of slumber. At least two or three hours should be allowed for the complete removal of atoms of insensible perspiration which are absorbed by the bed. Every day this airing should be done, and, occasionally, bedding constantly used should be carried into the open air, and, when practicable, left exposed to the sun and wind for half a day.

A Senator Caught Napping.

A jocular Senator from the West tells a very good story about another Senator from a Southern State. The latter began life as a brakeman on a railroad, and, by industry and foresight, has accumulated a fortune and high political honors. Senator Thurman, while speaking, usually holds his eye-glasses in one hand and a huge red handkerchief in the other. He blows a sounding blast on his nasal organ in the midst of speech quite as naturally as Senator Dawes looks up at the galleries every time he addresses the Vice President. It was an all-night session. The Silver bill was under discussion. The Southern Senator referred to was quietly sleeping on a sofa in the cloak-room. Mr. Thurman was speaking. He blew his nose with such vigor that the report could almost have been heard in the Secretary's office. The sleeping Senator was awakened by the noise, and, leaping to his feet, grasped a chair by the side of the sofa and twisted it around until the author of the story grasped him by the arm and brought him to a realizing sense of his whereabouts. It is now an unhealthy matter for any one to call "down brakes" to the victim of the joke.—Washington letter to Boston Post.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

Drawn from the Deeds of the Fathers.

(From a Recent Public Letter from Horatio Seymour.)

When we look back on the 8th of January, 1815, we are led to study the early history of our country, and we learn something that may abate the sectional pride which gives birth to sectional prejudice and hate. These are the seeds from which grow treason and civil war. We shall find that no section is free from imputations of disloyalty or of inconsistency of conduct. New York for a time would not enter the Union. It distrusted the power given to the General Government. The doctrine of States' rights had its origin with us, and not in Virginia, which at the outset was in favor of a strong central government. Yet in the war of 1812 New York shifted its position and upheld the exertion of every power claimed by the President of the United States. On the other hand, in the Northeastern States, which had supported the centralizing doctrines of John Adams, when war harmed their free commerce upon the oceans, official acts verging upon rebellion marked their policy. While a foreign enemy was upon our soil, while the walls of the Capitol of our Union were blackened by the smoke of fires kindled by the torches of hostile invaders, open resistance was threatened to drafts to fill the ranks of our armies. These draft riots were not made by an excited mob acting under a sense of wrong, but were put forth as the calm conclusions of men who were then, and whose memories are now, honored in the communities in which they lived. As chosen representatives of their State they solemnly declare that, "In this whole series of devices and measures for raising men this convention discerns a total disregard for the constitution and a disposition to violate its provisions, demanding from the individual States a firm and decided opposition."

At an early day Alexander Hamilton, the great leader of his party, warned his followers that they were going too far. So thoroughly convinced was he at one time that there was a plan in progress for the separation of the Union that on June 11, 1804, on the Sunday previous to his death, he said to Col. John Trumbull, with a look of deep meaning, "You are going to Boston. You will see the principal men there. Tell them from me, as my request, for God's sake to cease their conversations and threatenings about the separation of the Union. It must hang together as long as it can be made to." It was a distinguished Northern Senator who, at the seat of Government in 1811, first suggested secession. He said: "I am compelled to declare it as my deliberate opinion that if this bill passes the bonds of this Union are virtually dissolved; that the States which compose it are free from their moral obligations, and that as it will be the right of all so it will be the duty of some to prepare definitely for a separation—amicably if they can, violently if they must." It was a leading Northern State which placed upon its Legislative records the declaration against the admission of Texas, which taught that it dissolved the bonds of the Union, and asserted that no human authority could make it submit to that act. Although it did submit the spirit of rebellion was there. Among the earliest events in Pennsylvania was the formidable resistance to the laws of Congress known as the whisky rebellion. This grew to such proportions that George Washington was forced to call upon other States to give him aid. At this period the Southern States were the firm supporters of the Union. John C. Calhoun was the able Secretary of War who organized its forces and asserted its powers. When we turn to the history of the late civil war we see how time and interest and passions change the position of States—the South waging war upon the General Government and exciting a Southern rebellion on Northern principles. At the same time some Northern States demanded the very measures they had denounced as acts which should be resisted. They poured forth blood and treasure to hold States in the Union whose membership they declared no human power should make them assent to States that deemed a war unjust in 1812, because, among other things, it destroyed our carrying trade, now demand a policy more destructive to American shipping upon the oceans of the world than any embargo which could be devised by the genius of Mr. Jefferson. These changes in the positions of States are full of warning and full of encouragement.

They tell us that there will ever be discontent wherever there are real or fancied wrongs; that it should always be the object of political parties and public men to work for the welfare of all parts of our Union; that this spirit can alone preserve its life. On the other hand changes from hostility to our Union to its warm support are brought about when the wisdom of our Government diffuses prosperity into every section. Unless the spirit of sectional hate shall be stamped out as a baleful fire we do not know in what quarter it may break out and involve us in civil war. The past warns us that the spirit of patriotism or the spirit of rebellion have no permanent seats or no fixed forms for their assertion. Kindling sectional hate at the North to-day is more dangerous to the peace and prosperity of our country than the exhausted passions of rebellion which have burned to ashes at the South. The fact that the principles of disunion were first put forth at the North is no reason why they should not be put down when acted upon at the South. But this fact should make us more tolerant and give us faith that a love of union can grow up there as it did in sections where disloyalty was first displayed, and where treasonable sentiments were first hatched out. I believe that celebrations of a victory gained for the flag of our Union by Southern men upon Southern soil will not only promote fraternal feelings, but by contrast with events elsewhere will teach all the duty of forbearance, of moderation, and of devotion to the interests of every section of our great country.

All that teaches a knowledge of our history tells us that other sections of the country have virtues was well as our own, and that we have errors to atone for as well as they. These truths make us tolerant and disposed to advance the interests and welfare of every section of our Union.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

GOUT MIXTURE.—Wine of colchicum, one ounce; spirits of nitrous ether, one ounce; iodine of potassium, two scruples; distilled water, two ounces. Mix. A teaspoonful in camomile tea two or three times a day.

SORE THROAT.—A gargle of salt and vinegar, with a little cayenne pepper, will do more to disperse soreness of the throat than any other remedy of which we have heard. It stimulates the glands, promotes free secretion, and will sometimes cure in a few hours.

TO CURE A STIFF NECK.—Apply over the place affected a piece of black oilcloth, with right side to the skin; then tie up the neck with a thick handkerchief. In a short time the part will grow moist, and, by leaving it thus twelve hours, the pain will be removed.

THE SICK-ROOM.—An invalid requires something beside physic. Good nursing and common-sense rules, gently and pleasantly enforced, do more toward recovery than the doctor can. Heat the sick-room, if possible, by an open-grate fire, or wood upon the hearth; the latter is the best of all modes.

CRAMP IN THE STOMACH.—Opium and other powerful remedies often fail to relieve cramp in the stomach. Hot water, sweetened with brown sugar and taken freely, rarely fails to relieve this painful trouble. Swift remedies are always the most desirable, as they do not disorganize the system or cause reaction.

CHILBLAINS.—1. Liniment Soap liniment, ten drachms; tincture of cantharides, two drachms; mix. 2. Liniment: Mercurial ointment, half an ounce; liquid ammonia, one fluid ounce; powdered camphor, three-quarters of a drachm; to be made into a liniment and applied night and morning. When there is the least appearance of ulceration, no liniment should be used, but immediate recourse be had to surgical advice. 3. Ointment: Calomel and camphor, of each two drachms; spermaceti ointment, eight drachms; oil of turpentine, four drachms; mix well together. Apply by gentle friction two or three times daily.

POULTICES.—The common practice in making poultices of mixing the linseed meal with hot water, and applying them directly to the skin, is quite wrong, because, if we do not wish to burn the patient, we must wait until a great portion of the heat has been lost. The proper method is to take a flannel bag—the size of the poultice required—to fill this with the linseed poultice as hot as it can possibly be made, and to put between this and the skin a second piece of flannel, so that there shall be at least two thicknesses of flannel between the skin and the poultice itself. Above the poultice should be placed more flannel, or a piece of cotton wool, to prevent it from getting cold. By this method we are able to apply the linseed meal boiling hot, without burning the patient, and the heat, gradually diffusing through the flannel, affords a grateful sense of relief which cannot be obtained by other means. There are few ways in which such marked relief is given to abdominal pains as by the application of a poultice in this manner.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Some Interesting Statistics.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the receipts for the last fiscal year fell off $8,341,020.88, as compared with the year which ended June 30, 1877. The depressing causes that have operated on every department of trade were felt here, as they have been in the reduced revenue on imports. Necessity has enforced economy in all forms of luxury, for even the comparatively rich whose incomes have been cut down, and still more for the toilers whose wages have been diminished when they could find employment.

This document covers more than 200 pages, and contains many interesting facts, which can only be presented by digesting an immense amount of superfluous matter. Deducting $56,538.79 for sums refunded, the following table gives the net total receipts for all the States and Territories:

States and Territories.	Net Total Receipts.	States and Territories.	Net Total Receipts.
Alabama	$137,098.05	Montana	$27,102.88
Arizona	20,771.01	Nebraska	669,447.60
Arkansas	114,876.26	Nevada	59,017.46
California	2,145,767.32	N. Hampshire	328,188.11
Colorado	89,282.00	New Jersey	5,095,279.17
Connecticut	590,291.59	New Mexico	10,325.36

Mississippi	86,824.03
Missouri	5,029,316.14	Total	$104,669,781.57

There was also received in cash deposited for purchase of adhesive stamps $5,936,848.01. Illinois leads the list of tax-paying States by four millions and three-quarters over New York, which stands next on the roll. Between New York and Ohio there is only a difference of some $154,000. New York, New Jersey, Ohio and Illinois together return nearly half of the entire internal revenue.

The sixteen Southern States pay together twenty-six and one-third millions, or, say, about one-fourth of the revenue, which corresponds nearly with their relative population in the expected aggregate of the next census. The six New England States aggregate $3,594,682.39, or about one-half of the revenue which Kentucky and Virginia respectively pay, or a little more than one-fourth that of New York.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, Jan. 17.—SENATE.—The protest of Republican members as to the organization of the Senate was filed and ordered spread upon the minutes....The Indiana Senators and Representatives in Congress were instructed to vote for a bill to pay arrearages in pensions and to equalize bounties....A message from the Governor recommended the sale of University square, in Indianapolis, and that the proceeds be applied to the support of the State University; also, recommending that courts be permitted to reduce judgment when excessive punishment has been inflicted, without being compelled to grant new trials....The House bill appropriating money to defray expenses of the General Assembly was passed....Bills were introduced: Authorizing executors and administrators to convey real estate sold by decedents; compelling foreign insurance companies to file agreements with the Auditor of State not to transfer suits against them to the Federal courts; prescribing the mode of proceedings in inquisitions of insanity; fixing the length of terms of certain officers; regulating the organization and transaction of the business of insurance companies; and a number of other bills of minor importance.

HOUSE.—Resolutions instructing Senators and requesting Representatives to use their influence to procure certain financial legislation were adopted. The resolutions embody, in substance, the financial portions of the last Democratic platform....Resolutions were adopted reciting the evils of the resumption policy, and in favor of the reduction of salaries of all Federal officers....Bills were introduced: Allowing Sheriffs to administer oaths in certain cases; regulating passenger fares on railroads; requiring guardians to make full reports every two years; authorizing cities to aid in the construction of railroads, and a number of other unimportant bills.

SATURDAY, Jan. 18.—SENATE.—The President of the Board of Commissioners of the Insane Asylum was ordered to report an itemized account of the receipts of the incidental funds derived from the sale of hides and tallow from beeves slaughtered....Bills were introduced: To regulate the practice of medicine; regulating expert testimony in courts; for the preservation of evidence taken before Grand Juries; concerning the rights of married women, and regulating weights and measures.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced: Regulating the election of Supervisors; to prevent the spread of Canada thistles, and regulating the closing of business of building and loan associations....A number of bills were read a second time, and referred.

MONDAY, Jan. 20.—SENATE.—A resolution appointing a joint committee to draft a railroad freight-tariff law was adopted....Bills were introduced: Creating a Bureau of Statistics; to prevent mortgagees of goods and chattels from disposing of them in violation of the terms of the mortgage; establishing a State Board of Health; concerning the rights of married women; making a prosecution under a State law a bar to similar prosecution under a city ordinance....Several other unimportant bills were introduced, and, after reading several bills the second time, the Senate adjourned to allow the committees to go to work.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced: Regulating the practice of medicine; fixing the pay of Judges at $1,500; fixing the salary of the Governor at $4,000; providing for compulsory education; to prevent election frauds, and inflicting severe penalties upon those who commit them, and several other unimportant bills....A resolution was introduced to investigate the charges made against the State House Commissioners as to the manner in which they adopted plans, and also to look after other alleged crookedness charged against them, which was adopted....A resolution was offered instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of striking out that portion of the State House act which requires the Governor to select the State House Commissioners equally from the two leading parties.

TUESDAY, Jan. 21.—The day was given up entirely to Senatorial matters, all other business being ignored by both houses. In the Senate, previous to the election, the Republicans offered a resolution against the repeal of the Resumption act, which was passed, under pressure of the previous question, by 25 to 22, three Democratic Senators—Reeve, Sarninghausen and Winterbotham—voting with the Republicans. Then a resolution was offered by the Republicans that no one should be voted for for United States Senator who had voted for the Congressional back-pay. This was tabled—25 to 21. The Democrats then struck back by offering a resolution that no man should be voted for who had speculated in Venezuela bonds. This was passed—36 to 10. After a recess of ten minutes the business of the day was begun. Mr. Reeve nominated Daniel W. Voorhees for the short term, and Mr. Langdon named Godlove S. Orth. The vote resulted: Voorhees, 26; Orth, 22; Buchanan, 1; Poindexter and Floyd, the other two National Senators, voted with the Democrats. The vote on the long term was the same, Ben Harrison receiving twenty-one Republican votes....In the House, Mr. Van Valzah nominated Voorhees for the short term; Owen, of Warren, named Orth. The vote resulted: Voorhees, 57; Orth, 37; James Buchanan, 2; Shakelford, of Evansville, 1. This last was the vote of Mr. Gordon, of Marion county, who bolted Orth. Five Nationals explained that they voted for Voorhees because they had no chance to elect the man of their own party. For the long term Voorhees, Harrison and Buchanan were placed in nomination, and the roll-call showed 57 votes for Voorhees, 38 for Harrison, and 2 for Buchanan.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 22.—SENATE.—The entire morning session was occupied in discussing a minority report, recommending the passage of the bill making void agreements to pay attorneys' fees in notes, etc. The majority report on the above bill was finally adopted. It recommends its reference to the Committee on Rights and Privileges....Communications from the Governor, recommending the passage of laws allowing courts to appoint prosecuting attorneys to certain cases, and for the protection of United States coast surveys, were received and referred....The Mexican war veterans having been invited to seats on the floor of the Senate, they appeared in a body, and the Senate took a recess. During the recess an address of welcome was delivered by the Lieutenant Governor, and responded to by Gen. Manson and Maj. Gordon. The House concurrent resolution asking Congress to pass a law granting pensions to the survivors of the Mexican war was taken up and passed unanimously.

HOUSE.—A resolution was adopted directing State officers to report all salaries and fees they have received during the past year, and from what source....A concurrent resolution was unanimously passed instructing Senators and Representatives to vote for a bill granting pensions to survivors of the Mexican war. The Mexican war veterans were received on the floor of the House and extended a cordial welcome.

JOINT CONVENTION.—Upon the reading of the journals of both houses, it appearing that Daniel W. Voorhees had received a majority of all the votes cast in both houses, Lieut. Gov. Gray declared him elected to the Senate of the United States to both the long and short terms.

THURSDAY, Jan. 23.—SENATE.—The Senate adopted a resolution asking for statements from all county officers of the fees received during the year 1878....The Lieutenant Governor announced as the Standing Committee on Reapportionment of the State for Senatorial and Representative purposes, Messrs. Vicho, Moore, Sarninghausen, Grubbs, Reeve, Langdon, Davis, Urmston, Heilman, Winterbotham, Garrigus, Tarlton and Coffee; also as the Standing Committee on the Reapportionment of the State for Congressional purposes, Messrs. Burrell, Taylor, Menzes, Olds, Fowler, Harris, Kent, Comstock, Hebron, Mercer, Wood, Smith and Bolley....A concurrent resolution was adopted requesting our representatives in Congress to procure the passage of a law requiring the plaintiff in cases where judgment is rendered in Federal courts against residents in this State to cause a brief memorandum of judgment to be sent to the Clerk of the Circuit Court in which defendant resides, to be entered on the judgment docket....Bills were introduced: To provide for the determination and allowance of claims against the State; declaring agreements in notes, etc., to waive valuation and appraisement laws void; granting the privilege of remonstrance against sale of liquors, and several apportionment bills....All apportionment bills were ordered printed on first reading.

HOUSE.—The House again postponed consideration until next week Wednesday of the constitutional amendments....Bills were introduced: To form a Metropolitan Police system in all cities of more than 30,000 inhabitants; to regulate the charges of sleeping coaches, fixing the price at 50 cents between any two points within the State for a time not to exceed twenty-four hours; to provide for a geological survey; fixing the salary of Superintendent of Public Instruction of $1,500; for a local-option liquor law; reducing fees of State officers, and a number of others, which cover the same subjects as bills already introduced....Mr. Gordon introduced a bill repealing that portion of the State House act which requires the Governor to select Commissioners equally from the two leading parties....Mr. Overmeyer introduced a resolution looking to the consolidation of all the State Universities and the repeal of all laws making the standing appropriations. Adopted.

THE editor of the Republican, of Tessin, Switzerland, has been condemned by a local court to three months' imprisonment for printing an article deemed to be derogatory to the character of a gendarme.

BRAZIL sells about three-fourths of her coffee crop, or, in 1877, 1,800,000 bags, to the United States, for which we pay chiefly in gold, the gold balance paid in 1877 for Brazilian products amounting to $45,000,000.

THE Wesleyans in England are a stirring religious denomination. They have already preaching rooms in 5,000 places in England and Wales, and are now setting on foot a movement to build 100 chapels a year for the next ten years.

IT was announced in one of the Roman Catholic churches, in New York, on a recent Sunday, that a $2.50 gold piece had been put on the plate at early morning mass, probably by mistake for a cent. The owner could have it by applying.

THE Japan Gazette is of the opinion that China is powerless to resist the encroachments of Russia, by reason of poverty, internal dissensions, and the utter weakness of the central Government. China, it says, is a "rickety and worn-out nation."

A WEALTHY Scotchman was robbed of a half a million in bonds, including $50,000 6-per-cent. coupons, in 1876. The thieves confess they burned these bonds, and application has been made at Washington for the issue of duplicates, which will be granted if the burning is proved.

OF 191 Congregational ministers who died in the last three years, 97 were over 70 years of age, and 155 were over 50 years. The average of the whole was 65¼ years, and of their ministerial service 34¼ years. This shows that the ministry is favorable to long life.

THE long tunnel through solid rock to carry water to Baltimore is being cut in nineteen sections, the plan adopted being to sink shafts to the proper level, and then work in both directions. The calculations must be very exact in order to make the headings meet precisely. Thus far the engineers have been remarkably successful, five sections being joined without a foot's deviation from straightness.

Why Ben Butler Supported Jeff Davis.

The Minneapolis Tribune says the following letter was written to a gentleman of that city:

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 5, 1879.

DEAR SIR—I do not know as I ought to write you to decide a bet, because you ought not to bet. But, to set you right in a matter of history in which you seem to be interested, allow me to say that in the Democratic Convention at Charleston, S. C., in the year 1860, I voted fifty-seven times, as I remember it, for Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, afterward President of the Confederate States, as candidate for the Democratic party, for President. He was not before the convention as a candidate, for my vote and that of one of my colleagues were the only ones that he had. I believed him to be a representative man of the South, and subsequent events have shown that I was right. And I believed, then, and believe now, that if he could have been nominated for President, and elected, the war would have been saved, and the attempted disunion prevented, for he would have chosen to be President of thirty-two States, rather than fifteen, and my experience has been that the North always got more consideration on questions of human liberty from a Southern statesman as President before the war than it did from a Northern doughface, and that remains true down to the present time.

Change of Feeling.

Last summer, when the hot wave from the West struck us so violently, we felt as if we'd like to go out and shovel ten feet of snow off a neighbor's sidewalk, and not charge him a cent. We don't feel that way now.—Norristown Herald.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 30, 1879

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

The Senate finance committee has decided against the reduction of the tax on cigars.

Mr. Charles Scribner, the senior member of the great publishing house of Scribner & Co., New York, died of pneumonia after a few days sickness, at his home one day last week. Mr. Scribner was but twenty six years of age, yet he stood at the head of the great house which was founded by his father Mr. Charles Scribner, and which is widely known throughout this country and Europe.

The Potter committee commenced the investigation of the cipher dispatches last Monday. There were in all 30,000 telegrams turned over to the Morton committee by the Western Union Telegraph Company in January, 1877. There were about an equal number of Democratic and Republican dispatches. Of course they were not all in cipher, but several thousand of them were. When investigation will close, man knoweth not.

A Useful Legislator.

Kendallville News.

Among the active influential members of the Legislature at Indianapolis this winter is the Hon. S. S. Shutt, of DeKalb county. Mr. Shutt is a prosperous well to-do farmer, and commands the best respect of the people of his county. His vote will be cast, and his influence felt in favor of good aws and good legislation, and few counties have sent better men or will be better represented.

The following complimentary notices we clip from our Ohio neighbor, the Defiance Democrat, "Daniel W. Voorhees has been elected to the United States Senate for both the long and the short terms. Mr. Voorhees received 88 votes, being seven more than necessary to elect. This secures the tall sycamore of the Wabash, a continuous service in the Senate for seven years, and the west one of the most eloquent advocates in the union. All hail to the glorious Democracy of Indiana, and her peerless orator in the Senate."

The newspapers of Indiana (the COURIER among the rest) recently gave an account of the falling of a metor in Fountain county, which account was taken from the daily papers. It has since been learned that no meteor has been heard of in that vicinity, concerning which the Indiana Farmer appropriately suggests that "this may be called an innocent hoax, as no harm was done to any person, but the general sense of the community is that the man who started it deserves some kind of punishment, and, so fearful is the joker of public indignation, that it will be long before he will dare to make himself known. If such innocent hoaxes, as these are called, are allowed to go unpunished, those of a more serious nature will be perpetrated and much injury result to individuals or society. Such joking ought to be severely censured by press and public opinion, if indeed it should not receive the attention of the Legislature."

In the death warrant issued to the Sheriff of Marion county, in the Achey case the following instructions occur: "The sheriff is hereby ordered and directed to execute the foregoing sentence in the presence of those invited to attend. The sheriff shall invite to be present at said execution, the prosecuting attorney and clerk of the Marion criminal circuit court, two physicians and twelve reputable citizens of said county to be selected by the sheriff, and he shall also, at the request of the defendant, permit any minister of the Gospel whom he may name, and any of defendant's relatives to attend the execution, and also such peace officers as the sheriff may deem proper. No persons other than those mentioned, can be present at the execution, nor can any person under the age of 21 years of age be allowed to wittness the same."

Under this rule the occasion will certainly be a select affair—a hightoned hanging bee, conducted in accordance with the latest rules of etiquette.

Jefferson, in his "glimpses of prominent members of the House," as published in the Indianapolis Sentinel, alludes to the representative from DeKalb county, in the following complimentary manner.

HON. SAMUEL S. SHUTT.

Representative Shutt was born in Summit county, Ohio, in 1833. Emigrating to Indiana in 1848, he settled near Auburn as a farmer where he began the work of life with liberal views of sound political theories, and the result of his services to society have been demonstrated in his subsequent history. In the session of 1872-73, he represented his county of DeKalb in the legislature. At the last election he was again elected to the present session. His appearance in the House as we see him, indicates the man of good character as well as of sound principles, and his activity and moral firmness as evinced in his movements thus far, promise to fully vindicate the interest of DeKalb county in every particular. It is often the case that the quiet, unobtrusive farmer, though making no fuss about it, moves upon a legislative body with much greater power and influence than does the most brilliant orator. We have great confidence in such men.

There seems to be a determination on the part of political papers of both parties, to allow unworthy candidates to paddle their own canoe during campaigns in the future. The South Bend Register in a recent issue expresses the growing sentiment, as follows: "It is high time that newspapers broke through the slavish truckling policy of inordinately puffing and praising whoever the party happens to nominate, whether worthy or not. It is the reproach of the newspaper press that, with a few honorable exceptions, it swears by its party nominees, no matter how corrupt or unfit such may be. Newspapers do this dirty work in good part for the reason that they think their subscribers will not think them zealous enough for the party success. Inspired with this dread they enter the political arena upon the opening of each campaign and day after day pile mountain high the adjectives of commendation of their own candidates, and sling mud at the opposition with the force of a catapult and the liveliness of a hen scratching gravel. When the fight is over they are glad, usually, to have no more to say about politics until compelled to go at it again. They have kept up the strait of nauseating subserviency on the one hand and misrepresentation on the other; they have warped their conscience to such an extent in trying to make black white and white black, that it is no wonder that they feel unutterable relief when the end is reached."

A considerable pressure is being brought to bear on the members of the Legislature for the repeal of the "attorney fee" law. At the time this law was passed there seemed to be less objection to it than now, although the majority of the people objected to it from the first, but as times were better then than now, and money could be had at any time to meet obligations when due, the attorney fee clause in promissory notes was not objected to in many instances; as money began to get scarce, and long time paper began to mature and be dishonored, the harvest for attorneys began, and they were not slow to take advantage of it. It soon came to be understood among the attorneys that a reasonable fee for the small amount of labor required in most cases to take judgement, was about ten per cent., and all that is necessary now to prove what a reasonable fee is, is to call up a brother attorney and have him sworn, and he testifies according to the general understanding and mutual agreement of the members of the bar, and the result is that a fee is added to the judgement as part of the costs in the case, much larger than an attorney would pretend to demand for the same service, were it not for the advantage of having the contract for attorney fees embraced in the note The abuse of the present law has made it odious with the public, hence the demand for its repeal. There should be a law of some character governing collection fees, but the interest of the debtor should be guarded as well as the interest of the creditor.

While there is so much being said about amendments to the state constitution would it not be a source of gratification to the people of the state to learn of a move on the part of our legislators looking to the change of length of the terms for which some of our county officers are elected? Prior to the meeting of the legislature this subject was discussed by the press of the state at considerable length, and it was natural to suppose that some action would be taken early in the session. We do not doubt that the four year officers who are serving in their first term would object to any action that would effect their interest, and will bring their influence to bear against such a provision of law; yet that should not prevent the representatives of the people now assembled at the Capital from considering the propriety of limiting all officers to one term of such length as may seem advantageous to the best interests of the tax payers. The one-term principle will go farther in correcting the evil influences of politics than any other step that can be taken, it will cause officers to devote their time and attention to the duties of their office, rather than manipulating and figuring for a nomination and election for a second term. The fees or salary of officers earned during the first term will not be used for corrupt purposes, voters will not be encouraged to barter and sell the highest privilege of an American citizen for a drink of whisky or a little money, at least not to such an extent as is now practiced. We hope some action will be taken in the early part of the present session of the legislature having in view the change mentioned.

A correspondent mentions a source of danger in the use of kerosene lamps which seems to have been generally overlooked, namely, the habit of allowing lamps to stand near hot stoves, on mantlepieces, and in other places where they become heated sufficiently to convert the oil into gas. Not unfrequently persons engaged in cooking or other work about the stove will stand a lamp on an adjacent mantle piece, or even on the top of a raised oven; or when ironing will set the lamp near the stand on which the heated iron rests. It is needless to enlarge upon the risky character of such risky practices.—Scientific American.

Congress has finally concluded that the soldiers of the late war deserve some additional legislation in the way of pensions. This is the most important act that has passed since the war, so far as soldiers are concerned. The amount of money required to carry out the law will be very large, but it will only be a drop in the bucket compared to the amount which has been showered upon the bondholders and aristocrats by congress in the last seventeen years, during which time thousands of disabled soldiers throughout the country who have suffered hunger and pain while the men whom they defended prospered by robbing the government, have been pleading for simple justice in the equalization and payment of pensions. The following is the full text of the bill as passed by both houses, and signed by the President;

Be it enacted, &c. That all pensions which have been granted under general laws regulating pensions, or may hereafter be granted in consequence of death from a cause which originated in the United States service during the continuance of the rebellion, or in consequence of wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in said service during said war of the rebellion shall commence from the date of death or discharge from said service of the person on whose account the claim has been or shall hereafter be granted, or for the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension: "PROVIDED," The rate of pension for the intervening time for which arrears of pension are hereby granted shall be the same per month for which the pension was originally granted.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed to adopt such rules and regulations for the payment of the arrears of pensions hereby granted as will be necessary to cause to be paid to such pensioners, or if the pensioners shall have died, to the person or persons entitled to the same, all such arrears of pension as the pensioner may be, or would have been, entitled to under this act.

SEC. 3. That section 1717 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides that "no claim for pension not prosecuted to a successful issue within five years from the date of filing the same shall be admitted without record evidence from the War or Navy Department of the injury or the disease which resulted in the disability or death of the person on whose account the claim is made: Provided. That in any case in which the limitation prescribed by this section bars the further prosecution of the claim, the claimant may present, through the Pension Office, to the Adjutant-General of the army or the Surgeon-General of the navy, evidence that the disease or injury which resulted in the disability or death of the person on whose account the claim is made originated in the service and in the line of duty: and if such evidence is deemed satisfactory by the officer to whom it may be submitted, he shall cause a record of the fact so proved to be made, and a copy of the same to be transmitted to the Commissioner of Pensions, and the bar to the prosecution of the claim shall thereby be removed," be, and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. No claim agent or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services in making application for arrears of pension.

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts so far as they may conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby repealed.

St. Joe Items.

—Sleighing played out for the present.

—H. Joggers who has been spending a few days at Metz, Ind., returned home on Sunday.

—B. A Woodcox, who has been sick for the past ten days, has passed the crisis, and is on fair way to recovery.

—G. R. Hoffman, living two miles west of St. Joe, died suddenly on Thursday, of Pleura Pneumonia.

—We are glad to say that the funds for the erection of a church at St. Joe has been nearly all subscribed, and it is an established fact that soon the people of St. Joe will have a commodious house to worship in.

—J. D. Leighty, having sold his farm will erect a brick store room, the coming summer so says the knowing ones.

—Our friend Nelson Ulm is a success in taking in the fur bearing animals. Last Friday he reports having caught two raccoon, and on Saturday, three perfumed animals, and not a very good day for skunks either.

—C. H. Whiteman (Mollie of the Republican) agent of the B. & O. R. R. at this place has been transferred to Nappanee, and S. S. Barr, of Albion, takes his place. To say the least, we are glad of the change.

—One of the committee soliciting subscription for the church, at this place, approached one of the moneyed men of this vicinity, and was met with the following as a reason why he should not give anything for our church: He being a member of the same church organization at Spencerville, was afraid that it would impair the usefulness of the church at that place, by taking one or two of their members might cause him to pay more than $1.00 a year towards the support of the minister. Another objection was that the building would not be in the proper place; another that we should be more economical and not build so dear ($1200). Said man for personal ends, could at any time give from one to ten hundred dollars, but could not give our committeeman one farthing for the erection of a church. If such is christianity, deliver us from its influence—it certainly will be easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for such as he to enter the kingdom.

—Roll of Honor.—The following is a list of pupils who were neither absent nor tardy during the month ending Jan. 24th, in school district No. 8 Butler-tp.: Miles Weller, Charles Dudley, Samuel Hawver, Charles Dudley, Bennett Hawver, Wilber Hawver.

T. S. Merica, Teacher.

—The following taken from a Fort Wayne dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer, concerning the Waterloo body-snatching affair, is rather rough on Mr. McBride: "His brother came to the city to-day after the body, which was taken back to Waterloo for re-interment."

—Angola Herald.—"It is remarkable how soon some men discover that they are too poor to take a paper when the bill is presented for last year's subscription. The man who pays in advance never begrudges the money it costs and reads his paper with a better relish because it has been paid for. Try it.

—While in Europe Mr. Storey of the Chicago Times allowed his wife to select a number of elegant dress patterns which were brought back to Chicago to be made up. For the work alone on these dresses Mr. Storey paid over $3.000, and went so far as to pay $500, to secure a guarantee from the dressmaker that she would not make another dress for any lady in Chicago, like one of Mrs. Storey's. Is there a lady in DeKalb county that envies Mrs. Storey?

—Chas. Wallace and Daniel Miller now board with Sheriff Leas at the jail, in default of payment of a fine of $5.00 each, for disturbing a religious meeting (or "thing" as their friends put it) at the residence of Mr. Mosier about four miles east of town. Peter Davis plead guilty on a like charge, for which he was also fined $5.00, but rather than go to jail he fixed the matter. For the fun of the "thing" the boys will have to "chip up" before they obtain their release.

—Last Saturday night at about nine o'clock Rev. Mr. Ervin and family were awakened from their sweet slumbers by a happy surprise party, consisting of about sixteen couples of Auburn's "social circle." After a protracted effort to gain admittance to the house, the Reverend appeared and received the company in his usual clever and graceful manner, and no pains were spared to make the occasion a pleasant one. At a quarter after eleven the company returned to their several homes well pleased, and speak in very complimentary terms of the manner in which they were entertained.

—How long will the citizens of Auburn permit one of the lowest specimens of humanity that ever disgraced the human race, to appear upon the streets and display her depravity and continue to lead astray young men and boys of respectable families? The miserable, contemptible, profligate wretch who frequents our streets flourishing a revolver, and insulting the old and young of her own sex should be severely dealt with. Such a mass of corruption deserves no place in a respectable community; she would not even be a desirable subject for mince meat in a medical college.

Some time since we published the law in relation to the liability of subscribers to newspapers; for fear that it may have been overlooked by some of our readers, we insert it again, and ask that the matter be carefully considered.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed they are held responsible.

5. The courts have decided that "refusing to take periodicals from the office or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facia evidence of intentional fraud."

6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, wheather he has ordered it or not, is held in law to be a subscriber.

7. If subscribers pay in advance they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time, it they do not wish to continue taking it; other wise the publisher is authorized to send it on and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears is sent to the publisher.

MASONIC.

The following is the closing part of the masonic lecture delivered by Rev. J. E. Ervin at Newville, Friday evening Jan. 24th, 1879:

Brethren of the Order:—That grand temple built upon Mount Moriah by the wisdom of king Solomon, and the artistic skill of our Grand Master, Hiram Abiff, is no more. Its beautiful white marble walls which once glittered in the sun-light, or reflected the pale light of the moon by night, are seen no more. According to the Saviour's prediction, there remains not one stone upon another to tell of its former grandeur and glory. But the sublime spiritual temple that you and I are called upon to erect will [illegible] with unfading glory, when all human temples shall have fallen into utter oblivion and ruinous decay. What! though no high priest enters now into the holy of holies on earth, there is One who has entered once for all into that temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens! It matters not, though the earthly Jerusalem is laid waste by desolating hands; though her walls are broken down, and her gates burned with fire; there is a new Jerusalem whose walls are jasper, whose gates are pearl and whose streets are gold, decending out of heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. It matters not, though no incense arises from the altar in the temple—though no shekinah glories fill the earthly house; the incense of prayer can still go up to God from the altar of our hearts, and the bright glory of the Lord can fill the soul of man. Let us be practically true to the teachings of our noble order. Let us passes that fortitude that will ever make us brave for truth and virtue. Let us cultivate that prudence that will guide our acts and words and thoughts aright. Let us practice that temperance in all things that will commend itself as a fruit of the spirit of the living God. Let us strive for that justice that is such a signal mark of the good and great of earth. Let us practice that charity that fulfills the Golden Rule, and let us carefully follow that great light in masonry, the Holy Bible. It will be a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path to guide us with unerring certainty to the realms of unclouded glory, to the temple of the skies where they need no candle, neither light of the sun, but the Lord God giveth them light—where "they hunger no more neither thirst any more, but the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters." No more tears; no more traveling on rough and wearisome roads; no more burdensome labors, but the grand refreshments of heaven will be spread before the faithful and the banquet will last forever. They that walk with God on earth shall soon go up to walk the streets of gold gold among the angels, in that city whose builder and maker is God, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

Mr. Leonidas McDaniel, of Rushville, Ind., was appointed as committeeman by the Wool Growers' Association to submit to our present legislature the basis of a better "dog law" for the protection of sheep. He presents through the Indiana Farmer, the results of his deliberations as follows, which will be made the basis of a new bill to be presented to the legislature for adoption. He says "the present law does not give satisfaction, neither does it pay for sheep when killed by dogs under the present distribution, for under the law as it is, each township trustee at the end of the year is required to hand over to the school fund all monies to the amount of $50 and over. Now some townships are ahead and some are behind in paying for sheep that are killed by dogs. And to remedy this evil we ask that all the tax on dogs in each county be thrown into a general bounty fund and remain in said fund until called for by each township trustee. And we further ask that the tax on female dogs be put at $4 each, and the tax on male dogs still remain at $1. And fine each assessor for willfully neglecting to list all dogs, male or female, when assessing. And make it the constables duty under law to kill a dog when reported delinquent."

Courier-Journal—"The English language needs one new word badly, if no more. A correspondent of the Interior Journal describes a supper table "which fairly groaned under the abundance of all kinds of delicacies," etc,; a letter in the Glasgow Times tells of another table that "groaned under the heavy weight of a magnificent Christmas dinner," and in almost every rural newspaper you open, you find one or more tables that groaned under similar burdens. What the English language is required to do just now is to furnish a substitute for that word "groaned," and he who shall establish the habit of making dinner, supper or banquet tables scream or shriek or yell or howl, or even sigh or squeal and thus put a stop to this incessant groaning, shall thereby pluck bright honor from the pale-faced moon and thenceforth forever be known of all men as the benefactor of his race.

Give Them a Trial.

Any lady or gentleman who will give Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes a single trial, will be convinced that for exquisite sweetness and permanency of odor, no perfumes in this or any other country can compare with them.

Communication.

Butler, Ind., Jan. 27, '79.

Editor Courier:—Sir: In a previous communication to you upon the affairs of school No. 4, at Haverstock's Corners, the writer signed his name in full, but from a typographical or other error it was made to spell something else, however that is immaterial, an explanation in the subsequent paper by a person without signature, supposed to be Mr. Thurston. He says the previous communication of mine was true. He explains that the Trustee knowing that No. 4 was a large school and required an experienced teacher, and as this shows the trustee was working for the best interest of the scholars in our district, according to the circumstances, we exonerate him from any blame. In behalf of the parents of the district, I would say that between Mr. Thurston and the larger scholars there exists an antipathy and has for some time, and for this reason, when they found out that the trustee was going to hire Mr. Thurston, they quietly met in the school house and petitioned the trustee to not hire him. But what does Mr. Thurston do, according to his own admission, the day that our petition was to be presented he goes to the trustee before daylight, and insists upon the trustee to hire him, and would not be put off any longer, it is evident that Mr. Thurston saw his only chance, and pressed his claim successfully.

Section 28 of school law, a portion of it reads thus, 'and the said trustee shall not employ any teacher whom a majority of those entitled to vote at school meetings have decided at any regular school meeting they do not wish employed.' Does not this explain why Mr. Thurston appeared so early in the morning to the trustee, it is self evident that if our petition had been presented that our trustee would not have hired him. Strategy among commanding generals or combatants may result in great advantages gained to the strategist, but when one neighbor tries to take advantage of his neighbors, it seldom produces harmony. Mr. Thurston says communicant had better go around and explain the law, the above portion of the law is plain enough for us, and weare satisfied with it as it is, so far as our case is concerned. He says Mr. Sewell and Mr. Ash only hired part of their teachers conditionally. If one hired one third and the other more than half of their teachers conditionally, they could have hired the others on the same grounds if they thought proper, if such conditions had been inserted in Mr. Thurston's certificate, the trustee would have had a chance in our emergency, or any similar case to discharge the teacher at his discretion, it is impossible for our lawmakers to foresee every little emergency that may arise, and wisely leaves the discretionary power in the hands of the trustee. If there was a clause in the law requiring at least ten scholars in average attendance, I fear it would be very hard on at least one school in this township, a school that 19 years ago had nearly 100 scholars and now scarcely ten, it would be wrong to close the school and compel the scholars to go 2 or 3 miles through the deep drifted snows or else not go to school at all. Mr. Thurston says communicant has nothing against him only the complaint of my neighbors. If I should have said that previous to or about the time or commencement of our school affairs, does it follow that I must always be held to that remark, it is well known that I have been intimately associated with Mr. Thurston for perhaps ten or twelve years, and therefore deeply regret that he has taken the advantage of us that he has. Mr. Thurston says that he never kept his children out of school to please his neighbors, and I think nearly everybody else would say the same. Our grievance is a common one and we think best under the circumstances to be or act in harmony with our neighbors, if one or two neighbors had sent their children it might have made a neighborhood jealous, as there are enough that would not send to his shool under any circumstances, I am sorry that Mr. Thurston should so far forget himself as to throw out the insinuation about his teaching in Sunday school. It is foreign to our subject, Mr. Editor, but permit me to relate a little of my experience in Sunday school matters, when a boy in my teens, a small number of us met on Sunday in our little Sunday school for mutual instruction, the more advanced had to take the place of teachers, each one naturally took his or her respective position in the class and being in accord as you might say, learned very well under the circumstances. In those days it was considered heresy to read anything except the Bible, nevertheless we formed classes in reading, writing, arithmetic and geography or any of the common branches when we could get enough together to form a class, and of course I feel under deep obligations to the Sunday school for what little education I have. What advantages the young scholars of the present day have over their parents in their day, how sacred should the trustees and superindents of public institutions guard their trusts. At the close of his explanation Mr. Thurston says that the trustee desires all who can to choose their own teacher. The writer of this has been a resident of the State of Indiana about 29 years, lived in different parts of the state and several school districts, and it has always been customary so far as I know, for each district to elect its own teacher. I would ask why did Mr. Thurston go to the trustee on the morning of the day our petition was to be presented, why did he not give us a chance to present our petition, the reason is obvious, I think he committed a grave error against the parents of scholars in this district. I believe I have answered all the points necessary in Mr. Thurston's explanation, and I believe you will grant him a fair hearing on his side. I have tried to state our case calmly and dispassionately, not wishing or intending to irritate any one, but tried to state the plain facts. I am willing to leave the case rest. Mr. Editor, I cordially thank you for the courtesy we have received at your hands, although I think Mr. Thurston erred, with all charity I say, we are all liable to err, but with the poet Burns we would say for "a' that and a' that a man's a man for a' that." Resp'y.

Butler Record.—"The Auburn Courier has come out in a greatly improved style. It looks much better now than formerly.

Garrett Herald.—"The Auburn Courier is putting on considerable style just now. A handsome border decorates each page, giving the paper the appearance of some literary publication.

Valparaiso Messenger.—"Our ancient friend, Mr. Theodore Reed, has very much improved the Auburn Courier, and made it one of the handsomest papers in the State.

Decatur Union.—"The Auburn Courier comes to us this week greatly improved, in fact it comes in "binding," neat and tidy, like a bridegroom's shirt. We are pleased to note Mr. Reed's success in the Editorial chair; it is just the same as in other departments of life, a successful success; and the Courier in his hands is being counted first and foremost in influential power in DeKalb county. Keep out of the mire of mean, tricky, ringster journalism, Theodore, and your work will ever be appreciated by the people." Thanks.

While we are a zealous advocate of Democratic principles, and ever ready to defend all honorable acts of the party and its leaders, we are not one of those who, in order to be considered a shrewd politician, will crawl in the dirt to gratify a prominent leader. The defense of a wrong act will eventually react to the injury of the party making the defense.

LaOtto Items.

—The sleighing is about gone.

—The next township institute will be held at LaOtto.

—The protracted meetings at the Lutheran church closed last Sunday evening.

—Wm. Upton, of this place, has been absent about a week, and nothing is known of his whereabouts.

—S. B. Wyatt has moved to Rome City.

—Mrs. Kinzie is able to ride out again after a long illness.

—C. W. DeMoss says he would like to have the making of the weather for a few weeks. He thinks the first few days would be devoted to making the roads icy—he is a blacksmith of course.

—Henry Holbrook came very near having a serious accident while loading saw logs; the binding pole flew back and struck him above the right eye. He is all right again.

—Messrs. Goram and Zimmerman, of Springfield, Ohio, are visiting friends here. We are so glad to see our friend "Joe." in our midst again.

Auburn Junction Items.

There being no one here who is contributing items to your valuable paper, will you please allow these few scribblings space?

—Mr. O. S. Clark was compelled, on account of sickness, to give up his school at Sugar Grove school house.

—Jas. McMichael, agent for the Ft. W., J. and Eel River Ry's., contemplates going west about the first of next month. Who his successor will be is more than we can tell just now. We are sorry to see Mac. leave as he is a whole-souled, genial, kind and accommodating young man. We hope his future life may be one of pleasantness and sunshine.

—We had the pleasure of going through the freight and ticket office here one day last week and found six men inside working busily. There was Jas. McMichael, agent Ft. W., J. & S. R'y., Geo. P. Smith, chief clerk, W. A. Place, car clerk, J. J. Martin, agent B. & O. R'y., C. W. Cook, chief clerk and W. W. Hoffman, operator. The boys say they are doing a good business and only want for one thing, that is empty cars to fill shippers orders.

—The ticket agent on the B. & O. R'y. informs us that he has round, single and emigrant tickets for all points in Texas, Kansas and Nebraska. Parties contemplating emigration westward, will do well to call and examine his stock before purchasing elsewhere.

—A terrible row took place at Whittington's saloon Sunday night last. As near as we could learn, some of Garrett's roughs and "Old Whit" got to throwing dice and hence the row. A fellow by the name of Bell was cut on the arm and hand very badly, and says he had twenty-eight dollars taken from him while the row was going on. "Old Whit" got a canoe cut over his eye, and John the barber got a very bad side swing. Glass rattled, window frames vanished, oaths and threats filled the air with profanity. Will some one be kind enough to say why old Whittington always keeps his saloon open at night and not during the day time?

—We attended the literary society last Saturday night for the first time since its organization, and was surprised to see so many in attendance and such good order observed. We can not allow time and space to give an itemized account of the proceedings, but will say the esay "What is a True Woman," by Miss Emma Grube, was well gotten up and well delivered. Above all things, ladies and gentlemen, don't steal your literary exercises from other authors, but do your own composing. The subject for discussion was ably handled by both sides, Mr. Jones leading and Pendulum following. It was decided in the affirmative, settling the question at once that railroads have been more beneficial to the United States than water navigation.

Died.—At Logansport, Ind., on Friday, January 24th, 1879, Miss Mary H. Wunderlich, aged 28 years.

"Death is another life" in which our friends as they pass away mingle in the full enjoyment of its beauties and glories. The life we are now living dwindles into insignificance as we contemplate the promised future. Thus, the life of the deceased has gone out to live only in the memory of those who knew her and were the recipients of her kindness and affection. Her body has passed to the newly made grave in the acres of God; and, as we believe, her soul has gone homeward through the gates of pearls to enjoy perpetual spring and the blessings of eternity. Through several years of sickness she bore her suffering patiently, and greatly appreciated the kindness of those who cared for her and administered to her wants.

A LOVER'S TESTS.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

I sat to-day beneath the pine
And saw the long lake shine.
The wind was weary, and the day
Sank languidly away
Behind the forest's purple rim:
The sun was fair to me, I lived for him!

I did not miss you. All was sweet;
Sky, earth and soul complete
In harmony, which could afford
No more, nor spoil the chord.
Could I be blest, and you afar,
Were other I, or you, than what we are?

The sifted silver of the night
Rained down a strange delight:
The moon's moist beam on meadows made
Pale bars athwart the shade,
And murmurs crept from tree to tree—
Mysterious whispers—not from you to me!

I stirred the embers, roused the brand
And mused; on either hand
The phalanx of human thought
Sang, concurred, ~~chimed~~ or naught
Pausing at each Titanic line,
I caught no echo from your soul to mine!

And last, when life recast its form
To passive rest and warm,
Ere the soft, lingering senses cease
In sleep's half-conscious peace,
The wish I might have fashioned died
In dreams that never brought you to my side!

Farewell! my nature's highest stress
Mine equal shall possess:
'Tis easier to renounce, or wait,
Happily, the perfect fate.
My coldness is the haughty fire
That naught consumes except its full desire!

DANDY FERGUSON.

A Miner's Story.

I do not believe that Quasomodo was a more pitiably-deformed creature, or Quilp a more hideously unnatural looking object, than was Dandy Ferguson when I saw him the first time, that calm, summer afternoon, laughing and joking with a crowd of boon companions in the cool shade of an awning at Quartz Mountain.

His face was seamed and distorted by peculiarly-glossy scars—the ineradicable evidence of close and long contact with that shriveling element, fire. His body was bent, and he walked with sidling movement. He was a sickening spectacle at first sight, suggesting fearful suffering in the past, and my curiosity in regard to him was thoroughly aroused.

"Who is that man?" I asked, accosting a tall, blue-shirted miner, who was standing in front of the postoffice.

"Don't you know him?" answered the man; "why, that's Dandy Ferguson. I thought everybody knowed Dandy Ferguson."

"Why do you call him Dandy Ferguson?"

"Because—well, because he used to be a dandy—a regular out-an'-out sport. When Dandy Ferguson first came to this camp he was a gilt-edged gentleman, an' no mistake. He wore a plug, an' flashed a spark in his biled shirt-front as big as a peanut. He put on more dog 'n a mine superintendent, an' most of the boys was down on him from the start. Thet was about three years ago, an' he come up here from the bay to get a whiff o' fresh air an' make nature an' the pines give him back what he'd lost spreein' 'round with them sharps an' young bloods o' Frisco.

"No, he don't look like he was more'n half human, that's a fact; but I'd rather have them scars o' his than wear the clothes of the richest man in Californy—that is, ef I'd gone through what he has and suffered what he did. Proud of 'em! Mister, thar ain't a man in this yer county—no, sir, nor in this yer State—as is prouder'n Dandy Ferguson of what other men might grieve over an' sigh about, an' no man's got a better right to be proud, either. When he first came to Quartz Mountain he used to parade the streets with his nose cocked up so; he'd hydraulic himself with pat chouly an' smell-water till you couldn't get within a mile of him. He was a delicate-looking cuss, an' his hands were as soft as a barber's. The boys used to bet that if big Bridget Sullivan—our washerwoman—was to take 't into her head to jump him, she'd knock the spots out o' him in derned short order. That was our opinion of him when he played his small cards in this yer camp—but he showed down both bowers and the ace before he quit the game, you bet your life. D'ye see that quartz mill over thar on the side-hill? That's the Chaparral mine, ye know, an' it's thar that Dandy Ferguson showed us what sand was.

"One night, about a month after Ferguson got here, somebody out there yelled 'Fire!' an' the camp turned out. The h'istin' works was in a light blaze, an' the flames shootin' high up in the dark. We all rushed to the spot like a pack o' mad animals—you know how a fire stirs men up an' excites 'em. Of course, nobody knew what to do, an', for a minute, we all stood lookin' at the fire creepin' along the eaves, an' the burnin' shingles droppin' down the shaft. Purty soon some one says: 'What!' kinder sharp an' fierce-like. Then there was a little movement in the crowd, an' a man as pale as death springs away from the mouth o' the shaft yellin' frantic: 'Water! Water! For the love o' God turn on the water—the night shift's in the lower drift.'

"There was an awful agony in that man's voice; he had jist remembered that his brother was down there, and that the fire under the biler of the engine was banked, thet the cage was too heavy to work by hand, an' the timbers in the shaft pitch pine an' dry as a bone, with great sparks droppin' down like flakes in a snow-storm. You've heered how fast a man thinks in times of danger. Jim Slocum thought of his brother, the dry timbers, the engine, the cage, an' water all in a second, but thet was all. He didn't hev time to think of the fact thet there wasn't a par'l of water within a mile of the mine.

"Somebody rushed up to the tank—ther was about a tubful there. The fire was playin' round the biler, an' the engineer hed turned the safety cocks to let thet out. They all rushed every which way, yellin' fur ropes, ladders, anything—as ef ladders could reach down 200 feet to where the men was. They was clean gone with excitement, an' didn't know what to do, an' the fire roarin' and cracklin' like the devil's own blaze.

"Some rushed one way an' some another, while some of them stood starin' into the hot, black smoke an' yaller fire, dazed, scared, helpless. Quicker'n it takes a man to tell it, a man jumped through the door of the histin' works an' caught hold of the chains. His coat and hat was gone, an' he looked like an angel—almost—as he swung over the shaft in his white-frilled shirt an' his long, yaller hair.

"It was Dandy Ferguson.

"He didn't wait for nobody, but jammed a big scantlin', that two men couldn't a lifted, down over the shaft. Then he yelled for a rope an' told some men near the door to fetch him the ol' win'lass thet was lyin' outside, near the dummy.

"You never see men work like they did as soon as ther was a head. The rope an' the win'lass was brought into the works on the jump, an' fastened to the scantlin'. Down went the rope and Ferguson shoutin' after it, 'I'm here, boys, an' I'll stay till I roast.' Then he grabbed the crank an' spun the rope round the bar'l faster'n it ever was rolled before. He used one hand first, an' when she tightened he laid the other on.

"Si Holden wanted to help him, but he wouldn't hev no interference. 'Time enough,' says Ferguson, 'when I drop.' It wasn't long before a half-naked body came up, an' they got the rope off as quick as they could, draggin' Harry Miller out of the works more dead'n alive, tremblin' like a leaf. They thought at the time that he was scared at the danger he'd been in, an' didn't notice how much exhausted he was, but they found out afterward thet he'd played it down in thet shaft as mean as one man can play it on another in sich a time.

"You see, there was five of 'em in the lower drift, and, when the burnin' timbers of the upper works began to drop down, they all made a rush for the main shaft. The cage was on, and they couldn't get out till a rope came down. They could see a flicker of light above, and yelled till they was hoarse, watchin' thet glimmer growin' brighter'n brighter ev'ry minute, an' knowin' thet the shaftin' timber'd blaze mighty soon an' cut off all hope of their ever gittin' out.

"It was a terrible thought, an' you can't blame Bill Slocum fur grabbin' the rope as soon as it dropped down to 'em. Harry Miller jumped 'longside of him, yellin':

"'Let go, d—n ye, let go! They can't lift two of us.'

"'Let go yourself!' shouts Slocum, turnin' round on him like a tiger.

"'My mother's waitin' up there,' yelled Slocum, pointin' up the shaft.

"'My wife's waitin' fur me,' howls Miller.

"'An' with that he knocks Slocum down in the drift, an' goes up the rope hand over hand before the others could stop him—they'd've killed him on the spot ef he hadn't climbed the rope as he did. Sarved him right! Kerrect, mister, they'd a sarved him mighty well, an' no mistake, but he beat thet game. He'd just strength enough to tie the slack round his waist, w'en he gave way all at once an' hung to the end of the rope like dead weight, an' Dandy Ferguson a haulin' him out of the fiery jaws o' death.

"Down went the rope again, and Slocum was tied on an' hauled up, Ferguson workin' the win'lass like a giant. The cords stood out on his neck like blacksnake whips, an' the sweat poured off him like a sluice stream. Two Cornishmen stood by him tryin' to make him let them roll up the rope while he rested, but he cussed 'em and told 'em to dry up; he said he was at the wheel, an' he'd stay there ef he died fur it. W'en Slocum came up, the fire was all around an' over the win'lass, an' two Cornishmen grabbed Bill an' carried him out—they couldn't stan' the heat. Ferguson sent down the rope agin, an' up come Sam Hildreth, with jist strength enough to make for the door. The roof over the biler and the pitch on the door-posts was chokin'. Jist as the rope went down for the fourth time, an' we lofin' round on the outside watchin' every minute to see him drop, an' not a man with gumption enough to think of what was wanted, a woman rushes into the fiery furnace an' slings a wet blanket over the bravest, best man in the State o' Californy.

"'Thet's the ticket,' shouted Ferguson. 'You're a trump, whoever you are, an' I won't forget ye, live or die.'

"An' he didn't. It was Sam Hildreth's sister Maggie, an' when she came out o' the smoke and flame with her dress in a blaze she calls out sharp to the men:

"'Keep that blanket wet. Ther's water in the tank. I'll marry the fust man that throws a bucket o' water over Dandy Ferguson—I'll marry him ef he's a Chinaman.'

"Them's her identical words, mister. The men didn't need no further orders, 'cause, you see, Maggie Hildreth was the han'somest girl in the country, an' the best, an' hed ev'ry young buck fur miles aroun' close at her heels all the time, handicappin' each other fur smiles. But her brother Sam saved her from them galoots—saved her fur a better man, by wettin' the blanket himself.

"About this time the heat was terrible; one man in the drift, an' another half way up, crawlin' slowly to the ragin' furnace on top, crawlin' fast enough in ordinary circumstances, but hardly fast enough with death racin' down on his savior at a two-forty gait. W'en Jack Harmon came out o' the shaft he stood a minute on the scantlin' swayin' back an' forth like a drunken man, blinded by smoke an' bewildered, an' ef Ferguson hadn't caught him he'd a gone back again.

"Two more of us hed got in with buckets of water—'bout all ther was in the tank; but it seemed to dry off as fast as we poured it on, fur the blanket was smokin'. W'en the rope went down fur the last time, to haul up Joe Harper, the scantlin' was burnin', an' the upper timbers was beginnin' to blaze. The whirlin' smoke hid Ferguson from us, but we knowed if he didn't come out purty soon the whole shebang'd give way and bury him; the sides was in a light blaze, an' the place where the win'lass stood was the only spot where even Dandy Ferguson could a worked. It must a bin an awful strain on him—the last pull—but he never owned it, an' bimeby up comes Joe, the bravest man in the camp, I reckon, barrin' Dandy Ferguson, 'cause, you see, he wouldn't tech the rope till they'd all bin hauled up; he tied every man on except the coward, Miller, an' then came through the blazin' shaft himself, watchin' the little tongues o' fire shoot out from the side ev'ry once in a while, as if they'd lick the life-thread in two.

"As Joe grabbed the upper chains the shaft lit up with a hiss an' a roar, as if the fire was mad at losing its prey. Joe got out an' Ferguson staggered away from the win'lass, but his luck went back on him at the last minute. He stumbled an' fell jest as he come to the tramway at the door, an' the whole side o' the buildin' come down on him with a crash. A hundred men forgot danger an' death, an' rushed into the flames; but Miller, the man that played it so sneakin' mean down in the shaft, got to him first, an' dragged him out.

"Everybody thought he was dead, an' the crowd carried him an' Miller—who dropped insensible after he'd got Ferguson out—to camp. But Dandy Ferguson lived through it, though fur weeks he lay between life an' death, an' fur months he didn't stir out of a dark room. But there wasn't no lack o' help an' prayers an' faithful nurses to bring him round. No, sir; there wasn't a man, woman, or child within 100 miles o' the Chaparral mine thet wouldn't a crawled on their hands an' knees to watch one hour at his bedside, an' thought it one o' the biggest kind o' honors—you ken bet your life on thet. Yes, sir; Dandy Ferguson is a king in this yer country—he's better'n four kings most o' the time, 'cause any man that knows him 'd lay down four bullets any day if he held them against Ferguson; it 'd be like takin' an advantage, ye see, to hold 'em out on him. He can hev anything or do anything he likes. We'd send him to Congress ef he'd go, but he won't. We've got him here, though, an' I guess he'll never leave; I wish I was one o' them poetry writers; I'd write the bulliest poems about Dandy Ferguson you ever read, you hear me?

"Yes, he's married. Got married after he came out.

"Talk about weddin's! That was a weddin'; ev'rybody got an invite, and ev'rybody piled in to see the gamest man in the State tied to the gamest woman on God's footstool. Who was she? Why, Maggie Hildreth, of course. Who else 'ed it be, I'd like to know? What became of Harry Miller? Well, that's purty good. Miller, ye see, came out all right, and you bet he didn't rest till he'd begged Bill Slocum's pardin for leavin' him in the shaft as he did; but Bill wouldn't hev it; said that Miller 'd balanced accounts by savin' the life o' Ferguson, the man that saved him. But thet's played.

"You want to know what become of him. Well—say, look here, mister, I don't like to own it, but I'm the cuss—I'm Harry Miller. Interdooce ye to Dandy Ferguson? Of course I will, an' ye'll never get an interduction to a gamer man or one it's more honorable to know.

"An', mister, if ye ever tell about the Chaparral shaft, an' how Dandy Ferguson stood by thet win'lass in the red-hot h'istin' works, jest throw in it somewhere thet he's better'n four kings in this camp—it'll top off the story fust rate, an', besides, you bet, it's no more'n the solid truth."

Cramming for Berlin.

Tutor, Uncle Sam—"Now, boys, one thing is certain. No one can go unless he can speak German. Remember, the boy who speaks no German has no chance at all. What can you say, George William Curtis!"

George—"Yah!"

U. S.—"Yah! Is that all? Would you say yah to everything when you got to Berlin?"

George—"Yah!"

U. S.—"Step down. You can't go. Step up, Fenton. Would you say yah to everything in Berlin, Reuben?"

Reuben—"Nein."

U. S.—"Nein? Nein what?"

Reuben—"Nein, sir."

Typographic Eccentricities.

A great many columns have been written concerning typographic errors, and many of the instances sound so witty or so stupid that it seems as if they must be rather inventions than actual happenings. But we never saw one cited so unlikely that we couldn't remember its match. Once we wrote that it was "like evoking the shadow of a shade" to quote forgotten writers. The phrase appeared in print thus: "Like cooking the shadow of a shad." The printer had, in burlesquing the sentiment, actually preserved and intensified it in a most striking image of unsubstantiality. At another time we had quoted the proverbial opinion of Rosalind: "Men have died and worms have eaten them—but not for love." The printer may have been a misogynist; at all events, he substituted "women" for "worms." There are Shakspearean emendations not much better than that, perhaps.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

THE CHEYENNE MASSACRE.

A Circumstantial Account of the Recent Indian Insurrection and Slaughter at Fort Robinson.

The sentinel walking guard on the east side of the prison-room containing the Cheyennes had just cried out, "Ten o'clock, all's well." Hardly had the sound of his voice died away on the breeze when, by a preconcerted signal, the savages burst through the doors and windows, which they had previously unfastened. The movement was executed with such promptness as to take the sentinels completely by surprise. The first of the savages gaining the outside at the east end opened fire upon the sentinels from firearms which they had succeeded in concealing since their capture last October, succeeding in killing one and dangerously wounding another. A similar scene was enacted on the west and south sides of the building. The savages having fired into the guard-room, severely wounding two guardsmen, the main guard, consisting of twenty men and two non-commissioned officers, rushed to intercept the savages' escape. Corporal Pulver, a brave young fellow, of Company L, Third cavalry, sprung on a savage, supposed to be the chief, Dull Knife, with the intention of disarming him. The savage, anticipating the attack, immediately fired on Pulver, the ball taking effect in his right arm. Other members of the guard in the meantime were trying to prevent the escape of the retreating savages, all efforts however proving ineffectual, as the bucks on being overtaken fired on the guard with fatal effect. The squaws were also armed with huge hunting-knives, using them on the troops when an opportunity occurred. The men of Company C, Third cavalry, in the barrack-room near, hearing the first shot, sprung out of bed, and, in an incredibly short period, rushed to to the scene of the engagement, many of them stopping to render assistance to wounded comrades lying on the frozen snow. This scene tended to arouse within them the demon of revenge.

On catching up with the guard ineffectively struggling with the retreating savages, they opened an indiscriminate fire, with dreadful effect, on the renegades, killing twenty, eight of whom proved to be warriors. The savages, reaching White river, within 500 yards of the post, scattered, making for the hills a few miles distant. The main body continued to retreat up the left bank of the river, closely pursued by the infuriated soldiers. Such of the savages as were overtaken fired on the pursuers and in return were immediately shot down. The dismounted troops, after pursuing the savages two miles, were overtaken by Companies E and L, Third cavalry, mounted, who, on hearing firing in camp a mile distant, arrived in time to capture many savages who would doubtless have escaped had it not been for their timely assistance. The mounted companies continued pursuit of the fleeing savages, allowing the dismounted troops, completely exhausted from cold and fatigue, to return to the post, carrying back a number of savages, most of whom proved to be squaws and papooses, their wounds, in many cases, being rendered doubly serious by their being frozen, and the most-seriously injured of whom died within the ensuing two hours. During the work of dressing their wounds by Surgeon Petty, who displayed great skill and perseverance in administering relief to the wounded savages, great fortitude was displayed, especially noticeable in the younger savages. Surgeon Mosely, in the meantime, was busily occupied attending the wounded troops, who lived only long enough to have their wounds dressed. The dismounted troops, having consigned the wounded savages to medical care, were ordered to saddle up and follow the trail of the fleeing savages, which, owing to the light from the pale moon, and the ground being covered with snow, was rendered doubly easy. During the entire night the sharp report of carbines could be heard from the distant bluffs, where pursued and pursuers met in deadly conflict. The trail was followed until the setting of the moon rendered further pursuit impossible until daylight. Soon the trail became visible, and pursuit was renewed. The principal trail lay over and through a succession of mountains and ravines, rendering pursuit by mounted troops almost impossible. The troops that followed the smaller trails were successful in capturing many savages, and killing such as rendered it necessary for self-preservation.

A detachment consisting of six men of company H, Third cavalry, having discovered a party of savages in a washout, Private Everett, one of their number, dismounted and advanced, calling upon the savages to surrender, by signs, etc., signifying to them their desire to capture rather than kill them. The savages, in response, opened fire, Everett falling mortally wounded. The remainder of the troops gained the nearest shelter and opened fire on the savages, killing and capturing the entire party numbering ten.

The troops that followed the main trail succeeded in trailing the savages to where the latter had intrenched themselves, in a ravine whose natural defenses rendered it almost inaccessible—a place, no doubt, well known to the savages, and which in years past was used for their camping-ground. The troops, finding it impossible to dislodge the savages without exposing themselves within easy range of the savages' fire, determined to surround them, in hopes of getting them to surrender. This determination being acted upon, the troops remained in position all night. The following morning the troops discovered the Indians had thrown up additional breastworks during the night, with a view to resist any attempt of the troops to dislodge them. The commanding officer, seeing that any attempt to dislodge the savages from such position could not be accomplished without sacrificing the lives of a number of his men, as the greater portion of the savages were known to be armed, conceived the idea of sending to Fort Robinson for artillery, by which he could more easily dislodge the savages. Accordingly a twelve-pound Napolean gun was sent to the scene of hostilities, but, owing to the position assumed by the savages, the gun could not be sufficiently depressed to play upon the position. A number of shells and solid shot were thrown as near as possible to the position occupied by them, but with apparently no effect. The next morning, on making reconnoissances of the ground held by the Indians on the previous day, the officers were informed, to their dismay, that they had escaped during the night. Owing to the troops having no provisions on hand, it was found impracticable to follow their trail.

The following are the names of the killed and wounded since the outbreak of the savages: Killed—Private Smith, Company A, Third cavalry; Private Good, Company A, Third cavalry; Private Everett, Company H, Third cavalry. Wounded—Corporal Pulver, Company A, Third cavalry; Private Egory, Company C, Third cavalry. All of whom are expected to recover.

Forty savages were killed, fifteen wounded, and about fifty recaptured. Among the wounded was a sister of Red Bear, a chief of Red Cloud's band, who was present, having arrived from Pine Creek agency the day previous. On seeing his sister wounded Red Bear shed tears, and called her a bad squaw.

Hints for Economy.

PURCHASE provisions at a reliable market, not at a grocery. A little experience will enable one to select good articles at less price than is usually paid. For breakfast, if meat is desired, an upper-cut sirloin steak, broiled, fried liver, corn-beef hash, or hashed meats of any description, furnish the substantial part of a breakfast. Graham gems, fried hominy, occasionally corn-bread, when eggs are not too expensive, cornmeal griddles, flour griddles, mixed in part with dry bread crumbs, Graham mush, oat-meal mush, will go far toward completing a breakfast, and with many families prove a sufficient variety with the aid of coffee. For hearty noon meals I would recommend among other things lamb-shank stew. For this, take a few little shanks, boiled till perfectly tender, about four hours. At the proper time add sliced potatoes, turnips, parsnips and carrots, if relished, nicely sliced; half of a red pepper, cut very fine; tomatoes improve it; or, in their season, in place of the vegetables named, add a pint of Lima beans, the same of sweet corn, cut from the ear, with two or three tomatoes. A pot of baked beans, cooked in the most approved New England style, will furnish a substantial meal at any time, especially if you add a good loaf of steamed brown bread. For tea, if meat is required, chipped beef, either dry or frizzled, and occasionally a lobster, will add relish. A plate of soup made of soup-bones or bits of meat left from the roasts or steaks, or clam stew, bread toasted or fresh. Always have on the table a dish of oatmeal mush, to be served with sugar and milk, according to the taste of each individual. The dish furnishes every want required by the waste of the system. Apple sauce or baked apples, either with sirup or without, afford a relish, and will complete a repast sufficiently hearty and nutritious to afford good sleep and pleasant dreams. For desserts, plain boiled rice, or, what is better still, "poor man's pudding," made of boiled rice; "cornstarch pudding," "cottage pudding," "apple pudding." The latter is made by filling a pudding-dish nearly full of apples, sliced, sweetened, salted, and flavored as for a pie. Place on top of range and cook till about half done. One and a half hours before eating cover with a good crust, made like biscuit; cover so closely that no steam can escape; place again on top of range, when the paste should puff very light to the top of the dish. Send hot to the table and serve with a liquid sauce made of molasses and sugar, equal parts, a little butter and flour added, and boil ten minutes.

The Afghans.

Some old Indian officers call them "niggers," or "demi-savages." Yet most of them have fine features and splendid physique. They are said to call themselves "Beni-Israel," and to trace their descent from King Saul. Their Hebrew physiognomy, the division into tribes bearing the familiar appellation of Israel, Jusef, and Ibrahim, their custom of avenging blood, and of changing their possessions every fortieth year (a possible corruption of the jubilee), make the hypothesis at least interesting. The hill tribes who inhabit the borders are people whose hand is against every man, and, though some of them are nominally subject to the Ameer, there is no real suzerain, and no common national feeling, unless it be the universal hostility to the "Feringhee," or foreigner. These "Pathans," as they are usually called, speak the Pushtoo language, while the name of Afghan includes all the inhabitants. Their religion is of the kind which, after rendering to Allah the prayers, ablutions, and fasts supposed to be his due, leaves them free to indulge their natural instincts. The women, who are usually pretty, are mere household drudges. They are often, however, the occasion of a relentless blood feud, the prosecution of which through long years is looked upon as religious duty.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A $10,000,000 Estate Vanished.

When Capt. E. B. Ward fell dead on the street in Detroit on Jan. 2, 1875, his estate was popularly supposed to be worth $10,000,000. Official appraisal has reduced this to $5,400,000, including Mrs. Ward's inheritance of the Ludington property, valued at a round $1,000,000. The debts of the estate were $1,440,000, and it was expected that $2,000,000 would be left for the other heir after Mrs. Ward's apportionment was deducted. The legal time for closing the estate expires on Feb. 2, when the executors will report $641,000 liabilities, of which $596,000 are direct, including Milwaukee Iron Company's bonds guaranteed by Mr. Ward, with $350,000 assets, of which $125,575 is in stock of the North Chicago Rolling-mills. The liabilities thus exceed the assets by $291,000, making the sale of Mrs. Ward's Ludington property imperative.—Detroit paper.

THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE.

For aught that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
Or worm out of the oldest inhabitant
The course of true love never did run smooth.
Either it was different in blood,
His name being O'Rourke, her's Swartzfager, or Eppenstein;
Or else misgraft in respect of year;
The love-sick boy being seventy-five or eight
And the girl sixteen or thereabouts.
Very like it stood upon the choice of friends,
His father wanting him to take to wif
The pork merchant's daughter, while the youth
Had a hankering after the girl that Kept the toll-gate.
Or, if there was a sympathy in choice,
The Governor and the boy
Being of the same opinion, war, death,
Or sickness did lay siege to it, or the Girl said: "No, your bride I cannot be,"
Or words to that effect, thus making it
Momentary as a sound, swift as a shadow,
Short as a dream or the butcher's weight,
Brief as the lightning in the darkest night
That, in a flash, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And, ere a man hath power to say
"Jack Robinson," the jaws of darkness
Do devour it up. So quick bright things
Come to confusion, and a young man is left
Worse than the newspaper that didn't
Hear of the elopement of its own editor.

THE SNOWBIRD.

The trees are barren, cold and brown,
The snow is white on vale and hill,
The gentian, aster, too, are gone,
Is there no blossom with us still?
Oh look upon the hazel bough!
The flowers there are bright as gold,
Though all is cold and wintry now;
There little petals still unfold.
The apples red have fallen down,
And silent is the joyous rill;
The robin and the thrush have flown,
Is there no bird to glad us still?
Hark! don't you hear a gladsome song,
A merry chirp from tiny throat?
The snowbird all the winter long
Will cheer us with his happy note.

Vanderbilt's Evasion of Personal Taxation.

The New York Graphic prints a fac simile of an affidavit made to the Tax-Collector by William H. Vanderbilt as to his personal property. It was assessed at $1,000,000. The affidavit is as follows:

"April 22, 1878.—I hereby swear that my personal property, subject to taxation, does not exceed $1. My debts exceed all taxable personal property."

As Vanderbilt is known to own millions of dollars' worth of railroad and telegraph stocks, this extraordinary evasion of personal taxation, common as such evasion is, excites astonishment.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Opportunity.

BY JOEL BENTON.

How brightly on the morn it lies!—
Purple moments in disguise—
Hail him, crown him: if you wait,
'Twill forever be too late.

Youth, by May's enchantment led,
Dreams of rosier days ahead;
But only he who fronts the hour
Carves the spiral path to power.

Maiden with the pretty face!
All the world admires you, grace,
Form, and sweetness— [illegible]
Put no trust in "by and bye."

When the silver summons calls,
Stoutly speak—'tis fate befalls;
One moment turns each golden door,
And then it shuts forever more!

The Catches American Girls Have Made.

It is a singular fact that fifteen of the ladies connected with the present diplomatic corps at Washington are American girls whose beauty and diplomacy captured distinguished husbands. Among the number are wives of the French, Italian, Gautemalan and Turkish ministers, and many others of lesser rank, including Mrs. Yung Wing, of the Chinese legation, who was a Miss Bartlett, of Connecticut. In the diplomatic corps of Europe there are also several American ladies, such as the wife of the Italian minister to the Hague and others. Whether American women have a peculiar penchant for diplomacy, or diplomatists for them, is a difficult question to decide. At all events, diplomacy is a career for which our women seem to be admirably adapted. They have also broken down the exclusiveness of hereditary aristocracy, and some of them are connected with the oldest noble families of England and the continent. Proverbial as is their beauty, their natural grace and dignity of manner and their intelligence are no less striking.—Phila. Press.

One Minister's Bride.

A lively New York correspondent writing to the Troy Times, tells of the wife of one clergyman at least who is not entitled to sympathy for privations she will have to submit to:

We hear much of the privation among clergymen's wives, and for this reason it is gratifying to hear that at least one is well provided for. The bridegroom on this occasion being a pastor will not need a donation from his people to buy his wife a shawl so that she can attend church. The woman who thus enters the ministry has among her trousseau twenty splendid dresses, each of which is accompanied with a dozen pair of kid gloves, and also a bonnet and hat to match. Each dress has also a dozen morning robes of corresponding quality, and trimmed with lace. The congregation which the groom may yet serve will be glad to know that they have at least one well-dressed lady in their number. The bride appeared on the happy occasion with a train of three yards in length, and, among other jewelry, wore a necklace consisting of seven strings of pearls with a diamond cross as a pendant; also two clusters of diamonds at the throat, to which was attached a diamond dove, from whose beak hung another diamond cluster, including a large emerald. The bride will certainly want an angelic bodyguard to protect these jewels, whose description is enough to waken the ambition of all the sneak thieves in the city.

Divorced and Married Again.

It is not uncommon nowadays for married persons who have been divorced to make new conjugal experiments, and finally marry one another again, and be quite contented with a renewal of their first matrimonial experience. They can not clearly understand how much worse wives or husbands they can get until they have made a fresh trial. A man in southern Indiana recently separated from his wife because she had such a temper. He said he would as soon live with the devil's daughter; and after he had procured a legal release, he removed to Ohio, and found another partner, from whom he secured a divorce in six months. He returned to Indiana, and resumed his wooing of No. 1. She rallied him on his sarcasm, and he replied that she might be the devil's daughter; but that No. 2 was the devil himself, and he preferred, connubially, any member of the family to the head of it. Capt. Jack Kershaw, of Gonzales, Texas, has just been reunited to the bride of his youth. Incompatibility of temperament separated the young couple thirty years ago. She went back to her father's house in Tennessee with an infant daughter. She married again and removed to Texas, losing her liege lord during the rebellion. Kershaw married a Tennessee woman and made money; but his wife died, and he then opened correspondence with his former wife, through their daughter, now a mother of a small family in St. Louis, and they are conjoined again. Thirty years changes one's horizon, and ought to teach wisdom.

The Dublin Belles.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes: A Dublin belle is as much unlike any other belle as a Dublin dandy is sui generis. Very very few of these dear, delightful belles are ever seen in America, and more's the pity. She is often remarkably pretty, and always so in pertness—in a Paradise sense. The beauty of the Dublin girl—for "a dumpy woman" in Dublin is as much hated by all men as ever Byron could desire. I do not think in the entire population of fashionable people of this city there is such a thing as a dumpy old maid. I adopt the style of the belles here when I say such a thing, and make the statement on the same authority. The last "dumpy old maid" left here in 1835 for Nantucket in a sailing packet, and is still on her way, for all I know. Hence "the girls"—and they are all so called—like the "post boys"—though their ages of girlhood and youth have long passed beyond "the Groves of Blarney"—the girls, I say, are nearly all tall and straight, like Lady Jane, who was "tall and slim." Every one of them has a Lesbia's beaming eye, "but on whom it shineth no one dreameth.' Those girls talk with their eyes, flirt with their eyes, and slay like unspeakable Turks with their eyes. Their voices are charmingly sweet, soft and low-toned' their words are of the sort that not only [illegible], but burn—when the time comes. The Irish lady is unsurpassed by the French one in the art of conversation, and unequalled by the English or American. An Irish girl of the world—and by no means let me imply worldly—can say more "idle nothings" and leave an enchanting impression that "strong somethings" were meant" than any girl on North Charles street. There is an inductive process in the parleying of the Dublin belle that is susceptible of doing what Paddy's gun had the unique ability of accomplishing. Her jokes shoot round one corner just in time to meet her pathos coming round the other, and then occurs such an amazing and charming concussion that you are like the man with "Hobson's choice." Her direct sallies of wit and bon mots, her sympathetic circles, like the First Book of Euclid with all the angles thrown out, interest and charm your attention. I am sure Venus was from Dublin, and I know Adonis never saw Cork. The beauty of person, the brilliancy of brain, and that graceful "thou art so near and yet so far" familiarity peculiar to the Irish lady, are to be seen to be admired; to be faintly imitated, but rarely acquired, by any other woman on any side of "Mason and Dixon's line." I repeat, we rarely see this belle in America, and I also repeat, more's the pity.

Not Nice.

An American lady, residing Cairo, write as follows descriptive of an Egyptian wedding: "Hassan Bey was to take to his harem one of the belles of Heluan. Heluan is a watering-place that the viceking wishes shall eclipse the famous bathing places of Europe. It is a little green island not far from Cairo; it is dotted with gleaming white houses, in the midst of an immense glittering desert bordered the Nile. Upon its farthest bank stand lofty palms overladen with golden and purple dates. Upon the horizon rise the pyramids of Gizeh Abusir Sak Kabrah and Dachur in sad, solemn majesty. The women of Egypt look upon the place as a sort of Eden, where they can purchase all sorts of bijouterie and Parisian nothings and spend their pocket money as recklessly as their more civilized sisters across the waters. But to return to the marriage. Through the courtesy of Hassan Bey I was a wedding guest. He escorted me to the door of the bride's house and there left me. Placing my right hand over my left upon my breast, according to the custom, I entered and the woman who guarded the door conducted me to the room prepared for me. I finished my toilet quickly and went into the saloon, and soon after my entrance the bride with all her attendants came from the bath and entered the room. It was a brightly-colored picture. First came the slaves and servants of the house; in their right hands they held wax candles, in their left a green basin which contained henne for coloring the nails; the bride followed with her guests. She wore a creamy embroidered silk, with a violet-blue overdress that was fastened at the waist by a girdle set with diamonds; the little arched feet were encased in pearl-embroidered slippers; the little cap upon her head set with precious stones, and her long, black shining hair rippled over her shoulders, half concealed by a gold tissue veil. When she was seated they painted her nails, the palms of her hands, her feet an orange yellow, and then bound them in white linen. After this operation she retired from sight, but the guests remained, drank coffee, ate confections and cakes, smoked dainty cigars and watched the dance of the bayaderes, listened to the songs of the Almahs and chatted as only a crowd of women can do over the approaching wedding. The next day, the day of the wedding, the bride was led under a gold and purple canopy to the house of the bridegroom. We followed and went up the stone stairs to the vestibule of the harem. Here coffee and fine confections were served. Then the bride's guests returned to her home to await the arrival of the bridegroom's mother, who leaves the house when he enters to claim his bride. And this ends the ceremony.

Fashion Notes.

BLACK velvet bags, beautifully embroidered and mounted in sterling silver, continue to rage.

OSTRICH feathers are extensively used for trimming on any of the newest Parisian costumes.

CLOSE-FITTING waists prevail, the closer the better, we believe. It is a fashion unjustly attributed to the Greeks.

THOSE cottage bonnets made of felt are not susceptible of too much trimming, but this is a fact every woman is not yet fully convinced of.

NOTHING is handsomer, more genteel, or more generally suitable and appropriate than a good quality of good black silk stylishly made up.

GOLD braid is more or less used for trimming, and on some garments, judiciously put on, is certainly effective, but too much recalls the circus.

LITTLE women in those long, furlined cloaks, look exceedingly funny, and provoke any amount of absurd remarks which they sometimes hear.

LONDON GUILDS.

Curious Relics of Early English Times—Revenues in the Amount of $2,500,000 a Year—How the Vast Income is Spent.

Correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette.

Among the curious relics of early English times are the city guilds, or livery companies of London. The "city of London" comprises but a small fraction of the entire area and population of the metropolis—the former having an area of about 700 acres and less than 75,000 people, while the latter has an area of some 80,000 acres, and nearly, or perhaps quite, 4,000,000 people. The term "city" applies only to this small tract of 700 acres at the very heart of the metropolis, where the heaviest part of the business is centered. The halls of the livery companies are all within the limits of the city, and these organizations are so closely connected with the government and business of this part of London that they may truly be called the vital part of the corporation itself. They own the ground upon which about one-half the entire city is built, from which they draw ground rent, and in a very large number of instances they also own the buildings upon it, though this is by no means always the case. It is very usual in England to build upon leased ground, and the landlord then has no property in the buildings; but upon the expiration of the lease the buildings become absolutely his without any payment whatever. Ninety-nine years is a very usual length of ground leases. The city guilds are constantly growing in wealth by the lapse of such leases.

These guilds are about eighty in number. A large number of them took their rise in the times of the Plantagenet kings, and some of them even back to Norman times. The charters of the older ones were mostly granted by Edward III. and Richard II., in the fourteenth century. Many of them, however, had been in existence from 100 to 200 years previous to that time, but were then mostly without charters, and had none of the rights of corporate societies. The guild of the Goldsmiths can be certainly traced back to 1172. Probably both came into existence considerably before those known dates. The Fishmongers are still older, and were chartered by Edward I., in the latter part of the thirteenth century.

The twelve great companies are the Mercers, Grocers, Drapers, Fishmongers, Goldsmiths, Skinners, Merchant Taylors (sic), Haberdashers, Salters, Ironmongers, Vintners, and Clothesworkers. Many of them have great wealth, and all the prominent ones have magnificent halls, where they occasionally give expensive feasts. About forty of the minor companies have no halls, and some of these have so diminished in number as scarcely to be able to keep up their organization.

As their names imply, they were all originally trade associations. London has always been pre-eminently a trading place, and in Norman and Plantagenet times, when the city contained nearly the whole population of the metropolis, the citizens were almost wholly tradesmen. At first the term guild seems to have meant much the same thing as ward; at all events, the members of the different trades had generally appropriated distinct parts of London to themselves. It was not long, however, until the colony arrangement fell into disuse. After these bodies became incorporated, they had the absolute monopoly and control of their own trades. No one could follow the business of a draper without the consent of the guild of drapers, and presently it was necessary that all who practiced that trade should be members of the guild. By and by the different trades began to adopt a dress peculiar to themselves, and this gave them their name of livery companies. At first all members must be actually engaged in the peculiar trade of their several guilds. As the guilds grew in wealth and power, this rule was so far relaxed as to allow the admission of distinguished persons who did not practice the trade. When a member was in full standing, he was said to have the freedom of the company. They always held the privilege of presenting, not of selling their freedom to those who did not practice their trade. Finally, their influence became so great, and their support so important, that kings were willing to become members. Queen Elizabeth was free of the Mercers' company,—that is, a member, and James I. was a Cloth-Worker. Charles II. and William III. were Grocers, and Henry VII. was a Merchant Tailor.

In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries these wealthy guilds were often compelled to furnish the sovereigns money for carrying on foreign wars and for other purposes. The money was not generally returned. Henry VIII. came upon them for many large sums of money. In 1545 they paid him more than $100,000 toward the Scotch war. To get the value of that sum in our present currency, the amount must be multiplied by four or five at least. Queen Mary took from them $325,000 toward the French war, and Queen Elizabeth is said to have taken $700,000 from them. Charles I. also took large large sums, over $500,000 being handed over at one time. They suffered in the very same way during the Commonwealth, but recovered so far that when Charles II. came to the throne they were able to welcome him with most expensive presents and processions. In the latter part of the last century monarchs found other means of raising money, and the guilds were left free to grow in wealth and monopolus power as fast as they could, and their trade character then began to disappear. At present the Livery companies have almost wholly lost their ancient trade character. Indeed, not more than have a dozen of them have any trace of this character left, and these only in limited degree. Among these last are the Fishmongers, who have the power of ordering the destruction of all bad fish coming into London, and they continue to exercise that supervision, though not one of the company is really connected with the fish trade. In nearly all cases the members of these bodies have nothing to do with the trades they are supposed to practice, and only two or three of them—e. g., the apothecaries and stationers—make this a condition of membership. Some of the more powerful companies have each several hundred members, and the tie that binds them together is the social distinction, influence, dinners, etc., that go with membership. Should business misfortune overtake them, they stand a chance of a good fat sinecure, an office without duties, or of a good pension of $500 to $1,500 a year. Membership was formerly obtained mostly by servitude; that is, by going through an apprenticeship of seven years. Now, it is always by payment of a fee. In some of the minor guilds, a fee of a few guineas will admit to a full membership, but in all the wealthier ones, the freedom of the company cannot, in any case, be had for less than $500, and, in many cases, it costs fully $1,000. Over 160 members of the present house of commons are free of the various city companies. In most of these cases the freedom is presented, for they are wise enough to know that they cannot have too many friends in parliament. These city guilds are among the most objectionable monopolies a civilized country ever tolerated. In addition to their property in the city they own vast property in other parts of London and many large tracts of land elsewhere in the kingdom. They have very large estates in Ireland. There are even numerous church livings in the gift of some of them. There is no means of ascertaining the exact aggregate revenues of these companies, but enough is known to say with certainty that the yearly revenues from real property is not below $2,500,000; some venture to put the amount as high as $5,000,000 a year. A commission was appointed in 1837 by parliament to investigate the affairs of the guilds. The commission got well snubbed on nearly every hand, and that is nearly all they did get. A few did give some account of their income and expenditures, but most of them refused to tell anything whatever. The Drapers condescended to inform the commissioners that that their yearly revenue was $120,000; that they spent $25,000 a year on dinners and entertainments, $20,000 on salaries, and $25,000 more on pensions and gratuities. The rest went toward various charitable purposes. There is not one real draper in the company, and yet the membership is very large. If their income was $120,000 in 1837, it may safely be put at twice that amount now, for the property is mainly in the metropolis, and values have more than doubled since 1837.

Some of the wealth of these companies has been left to them without condition, but the greater part is in trust, and intended, either wholly or in part, to go to stated charitable or educational objects. Unfortunately, the bequests do not generally direct that the entire proceeds of such bequests shall go to the specified objects, but name, instead, fixed amounts to be paid to this or that object, or to several objects. In an enormous number of cases property so left has increased so greatly that the letter of the bequest may be satisfied, and yet nine-tenths of the proceeds remain unspent. Here comes in a large unappropriated balance, and it usually turns out to be a *mis*appropriated balance, for it usually goes in feasting. Various writers have tried to figure out the amount of this misappropriated balance, and the aggregate amount is usually put at over $500,000 a year. A fair-minded person would, it seems to me, decide that, where about the full income of a property at the time of making a bequest was directed to be paid to a certain object, the intention must be that the whole proceeds should always be so spent. In 1570 Robert Doukyn, a merchant tailor, left to th t guild some property in the guild of Bishopsgate. Twelve poor men were each year to receive a gown of Welsh frieze at 16d the yard, and also a shirt to be worth two shillings each. Twelve pairs of shoes were also to be given at 12d the pair. Twelve poor women were similarly provided for. It would be impossible to literally fulfill such a bequest, but a good jurist would define it to mean this: that an equal number of poor men and women were to receive a full suit of coarse clothing each per year, and he would direct that the number of people should be so increased as to consume the entire revenue. The merchant tailors did not decide thus. They magnanimously doubled the amount directed to be paid out, and turned the balance into their own fund, and so continued to do until quite recently. The value of that property is fully 100 times what it was worth in 1570. To another company $100,000 was left "to make themselves comfortable." In 1433 the grocers bought a piece of land for about $160. It was sold within the present century for over $100,000.

In another respect, the vast revenues of these bodies are misappropriated. Many bequests were left for the purpose of giving pensions to old, infirm and poor members of those trades. Hundreds of those pensions are regularly paid, but they do not go to actual grocers, drapers, and fishmongers. They generally go to persons who have lived jolly, easy lives, and if they have come to poverty at all, it is more likely to have been through speculation on the stock exchange, than by failures in any real trade. The money was to go to tradesmen in the actual sense, and there is exactly where it don't go at all. Yet the letter of the law seems to be followed.

The mass of the membership of these guilds are just as much in ignorance of the real income and outlay of their companies as the outside public. The managing boards are not often changed, and they alone know anything about it. They say about this to the rest of the livery men: "Take the goods the gods have provided for you, namely: the dinners, sinecures, distributions of money, &c., and don't be curious about the working of the machinery." If the money of these wealthy corporations were well spent, no one would seriously object to their existence, even though the reason of their being has long since passed away; but this they are not doing. The greater part of it is wrongly spent altogether. The Goldsmiths are said to spend $150,000 a year on entertainments and dinners alone.

SMITH has a good opinion of himself. He has never done a stroke of work, but lives on a hard-working farmer. Nevertheless he fancies that some credit is due him for the fortune which he enjoys. The other day, leaning against the mantlepiece, his back to the fire, he said: "I was born the son of a poor laborer. Before I was thirty years old I was the son of one of the richest men in the country."

The Tanks of Tinajas.

A wonderful place is "Tinajas," about twenty miles southeast of Mission Camp. The mountains have one face of hard, smooth granite. All the water falling upon this basin has to flow through nine tanks, one above the other. The lower tanks are of easy access, and are often drained of their contents by men and animals traveling between Yuma and Sonora. The upper tanks are approached only by circuitous and difficult climbing over rocks. To one standing below they afford no indication of their existence, nor does climbing the smooth, steep mountain side seem possible to one unacquainted with the way to do it. In the upper tanks water has never been known to fail. To this water comes game of all kinds in great numbers from the great waterless country around Tinajas. Antelope, mountain sheep, and deer of several kinds come in herds. Rabbits and hares are as plenty as anywhere, and are prey for many coyotes and beautiful little rock foxes. One would think that all this game would be thinned by the Papago Indians who inhabit the country; but these Indians are superstitious, and avoid Tinajas with abject terror. Within two miles of this water are certainly 150 graves, and probably more, each marked by rows of stone laid in form of a cross. Scores of men famished for water have expended their last strength in reaching Tinajas, only to find the lower tanks dry, and ignorant of the upper ones, have lain down in despair to die. Their remains have been buried by later travelers, and the graves marked, Mexican fashion, by a cross of stones. During the rush to the gold fields of California, cholera attacked adventurers on the road from Mexico, as it did American immigrants along the Platte; pestilence combined with thirst to gather corpses at Tinajas. Recollections of bleaching bones and grinning skulls protects the game from Papago arrows and flint-locks. After passing through its usual fermentation, the water becomes clear and pure as any in the world; it comes from the clouds only, and flowing into the tanks over insoluble granite, it carries no mineral matter. Every heavy rain pours a whirling torrent through the tanks, washing them out to the very bottom—no organic matter stays behind. The number and variety of birds is marvelous; many of them appearing to be new and undescribed species. At morning and evening the din of their song, confined by the sides of the mountain, is almost deafening. All around Tinajas is the remarkable vegetation of the desert; near its banks are many and curious plants nourished by their moisture. The place is one of much interest.—Arizona Sentinel.

A Real Spanish Hacienda Existing in the United States.

A few miles from Phœnix is a Mormon settlement, and the inhabitants thereof are carrying out an excellent system of agriculture. They have a very superior body of land under cultivation, have erected substantial homes and carry on the dairy business with success. Twelve miles from Phœnix is what is known as Hayden's Ferry. Here is a farm, owned by my old friend Hayden, that would make the eyes of any California farmer water. There is no prettier place anywhere. The farm is situated on a bluff at least forty feet above the crossing of the river. Then there is a level tract of land, as far as the eye can reach in all directions, divided into grain, corn and alfalfa fields, with great swelling water ditches upon all sides. The dwelling is a sort of manor house, with accommodations for any and all friends of the hospitable proprietor who may happen along; with the latch string always upon the outside; with a yard of great dimensions, dotted here and there with pyramids of corn, pumpkins, flour and other evidences of good cheer. Added to this is a big wholesale and retail store adjoining and a flour mill in constant operation a few feet away. The whole place reminds one of the real hacienda as they exist in Mexico and the Spanish countries.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Those Husking Parties.

And the husking parties—hold me for a minute! I went to one once; had I been 20 years older then how I would have sketched it for you; but I was only a boy, and I've only a boy's remembrance. I only remember the lanterns strung with cords from one great beam to the other, each comer bringing his own lantern. I remember the lights and the darkness over-head; the bright flashes and the great shadows that swallowed them up; and the hens that nodded and blinked on the scaffolding; and the one fool of a rooster that kept crowing, thinking that the morning had come, and the huge pile of yellow ears that grew and grew in size; and the greater pile of straw-colored husks that were thrown backward and pushed out until they blocked the great barn doorway; and the sleepy cattle in the stalls that looked stupidly but benevolently out at the strange goings on; and the red ear!—how the young fellows wished the red ears were thicker; and the chasings and tumblings through the rattling husks; and the scream and laughter. I know all this is heretical, but who would be a saint when heresy is so pleasant.—Golden Rule.

Polygamy and Porridge.

When we made an excursion in southern Utah not long ago we were hospitably entertained by the Mormon bishop at Richfield. He was a Scotchman, and had been brought up a rigid Presbyterian. "Ah, weel," said he, "They think ill of me at home for changing my religion; but there was my brother Aleck who took it most to heart. He was on his way to California, and turned off the a bit to see me, and try to bring me back into the fold. When he got here he spent the whole evening in lecturing me, and then went to bed. In the morning I gave him the best breakfast the country would afford—coffee and rolls, trout, beef, and venison steak, and such like. Poor Aleck! he looked all over the table, and then turned upon me his sorrowful face, blurting out, 'Oh, Jamie, mon! Jamie, mon! did I ever think it would come to this? I could hae forgein ye a' yer poleegamy, but hae ye gien up yer parritch?'"—Harper's Magazine.

A WINTER MORNING.

BY FRANK TOOKER.

The snow-drifts pile the window-ledge,
The frost is keen, the air is still;
The lane that lies below the hill
Is drifted even with the hedge;
Gray skies, and dark trees shaken bare,
Blue smoke that rises straight in air;—
And down the west a yellow glare
Is driven like a wedge.

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

All things beautiful and true are included in the Divine repertory; man's merit is, at best, to have trained his mind's eye to preceive them.

Wherever I have traveled, I could never judge of the height of any hill but from the vale beneath. The height of God's eternal love is only to be discovered from the vale of humanity.

Dress is as much a test of civilization as is the literature of a country, and those who decry it show how deficient they are in reading and observation. We judge a stranger more or less by his dress, no matter how much we may claim to be above such influences.

Sense.

[Detroit Free Press.]

Suppose the hangman does bungle when he hangs a murderer. Did it ever occur to these setimental howlers that the murderer is not at all careful and tender and genteel when cutting some woman's throat, or smashing some old man's skull?

Friendship.

Friendship is a vase which, when it is flawed by heat, or violence, or accident, may as well be broken at once; it can never be trusted after. The more graceful and ornamental it was, the more clearly do we discern the hopelessness of restoring it to its former state. Course stones, if they are fractured, may be cemented again; precious stones—never—Landor.

Cheerfulness.

When Goethe says that in every human condition foes lie in wait for us, "invincible only by cheerfulness and equanimity," he does not mean that we can at all times be really cheerful, or at a moments notice; but that the endeavor to look at the better side of things will produce the habit; and that this habit is the surest safeguard against the danger of sudden evils.—Hunt.

Life is made up of little things. The greatest misfortune troubles us least. A man will generally show more of his evil nature at the absence of a button off his shirt bosom than at the loss of his finest horse, and will probably endure it less manfully. The field of experience is broad, and covers the world; but her most severe test greets us first, and happy be who can achieve the mastery over the things which are small, for he, then, is sure of the mastery over himself.

The editor presented a bill for eight year's back subscription. The old farmer was first amazed, then indignant. He put on his spectacles, scrutinized the bill, and after assuring himself that it was genuine, he exclaimed: "I've been supportin' this vere paper for nigh onto eight years, and I never had no such thing as that flung at me before. I'll stop supportin' it." He not only withdrew his valuable support, but failed to pay the bill.—New Age.

Truth in Brief.

Anybody can soil the reputation of any individual, however pure and chaste, by uttering a suspicion that his enemies will believe and his friends never hear of. A puff of idle wind can take a million of the seeds of a thistle, and do a work of mischief which the husbandman must labor hard and long to undo, the floating particles being too fine to be seen and too light to be stopped. Such are the seeds of slander, so easily sown, so difficult to be gathered up, and yet so pernicious are its fruits. They know that many a wind will catch up the plague, and become poisoned by their insinuations, without ever seeking the antidote. No reputation can refute a sneer, nor any human skill prevent mischief.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

The History of Dancing.

Dancing is nearly as old as the world. The Hebrews danced when they emerged from the Red Sea, and about the golden calf, which was not their maiden effort. The young maidens of Silo were enjoying the dance in the field, when they were surprised by the youths of the tribe of Benjamin, and carried off by force, according to the council of the ancients of Israel; David danced before the ark; Socrates learned dancing from Aspasia; the soldiers of Crete and Sparta went dancing into an assault, etc. But we leave this point of animated archaeology to be resolved by others. Dancing probably originated in certain gestures which indicated contentment, pain, joy—just as music was born of certain analogous sounds. Plato, Socrates, Lycurgus, and others, held dancing in great veneration. We are further informed that in old Chinese books dancing and music are described as the two most important departments of public affairs. Under the Romans, however, dancing had degenerated; and we are reminded that Cicero addressed a grave reproach to the Consul Gabinus for having danced.—Helps.

A FEMININE CRITIC.

How She Does Up a Feminine Actress.

[St. Louis Times' Women Writer.]

The most ridiculous part of it was Jane Coombs, trying to personate little, delicate, timid Juliet, who, as Shakespear has it, is only fourteen years of age. This company has it eighteen, not daring to render the play literally for fear the audience should burst into roars of laughter. She weighs somewhere near 170 pounds, I should think, with a voice like a base drum, and a face like a cow. The balcony scene was horrible in the extreme. Where Juliet, with a soft, tender whisper, should, through her inexperience, allow Romeo to find out the love she bears him, the deep, heavy voice sounded more out of place than ever. Horrified I looked around to see if the bard of Avon's ghost was not near, grinning maledictions upon this awful departure from what he intended little, childlike Juliet should be, but I did not see him, only a grin upon many faces. I do not blame the idiot who tried to play Romeo for forgetting his part, as he did, many times. The idea of making love to such a—O, my, to such a Juliet! Had I known her weight I would not have gone to see the farce. The Friar reminded me more of a wooden nutmeg than anything else, and how I did wish I was a boy that I might have stood in the back of the house and prompted, "Mary had a little lamb" to him, then asked him to retire. I'll never believe in spirits any more, because Shakespeare did not appear upon the scene then and there and stop the company. By the way, did Juliet wear overskirts? And did nurses wear diamonds in those days? Juliet was just three times the size of her mother, and decidedly embonpoint. Ta! ta! Jane, may your shadow never grow less. "Romeo, I come," with a voice like a drum, so pull down your vest and shut your eyes. When you forget a part you should know by heart, just sigh and look wondrous wise.

Gone.

There is probably no word in the English language more expressive, more heart-touching, than the simple word gone. It is a small word, yet hidden under it is an intense meaning deeper than one thinks, until called upon to use the word in reference to his own loss.

Robert Hall thought the word "tear" the most beautiful and expressive in our language; but has not the word word gone much of the same pathetic sentiment? The loved and cherished of the heart and home—perhaps a dearly beloved mother or father, brother or sister—has passed away. No expression could be more touching to the heart than the word gone—gone out of our sight and home forever. With it in this case the word tear is a near kindred. When we have seen friends laid in their narrow house, gone expresses the feelings of our hearts better than any other word. We can hardly conceive of the cause of a tear without the knowledge of something gone.

Does the heart weep over the graves of loved ones? Then something surely is gone. Does it mourn for wasted time and opportunities? Then something is gone. Abundant as is our language in words, it is hard to conceive how we could do without it, short as it is. Life is always changing, always making voids in our fireside circle; friends leaving us to seek fortune or fame. Twenty years hence the friends with whom we mingle at the present time will be scattered; some may be in foreign countries, others may rise to high honor, and some, sad to say, will ruin themselves in dissipation, and finally die outcasts from society, unhonored and unmourned. And gone is the only word which expresses the soul's keen sense of the loss and absense. There is an expressiveness in the exquisitely sad word which we only see in its kindred word, tear.—Waverly Magazine.

Trials.

Trials are very hard to bare. To see the wealth, for which we have labored so long, make to itself wings and fly away.—To have to stand and serve, where beforetime we have sat and ruled; to lay loved ones in the lonesome grave; to miss the merry laugh, and the glad welcome, and the protecting hand, or the guiding mind; to see the fairest flower in our garden withered; the brightest light in our households quenched, these things are not joyous, but grievous, just as winter is not the pleasantest season that summer brings, with her merry songs, and her sunny days, and her georgous wealth of foliage and flowers; and just as bitter medicines are savory meat. But, then winter is needed in nature, and medicines are needed for the body; and afflictions also are needed. The sharp frosts, and the keen biting winds of winter, kill the weeds and brake up the soil, and so prepare it for the spring rains and the summer suns. And afflictions, when sanctified by God, wean us from earth and nurture us for heaven.—A. C. Price.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

DOUBLE WOOING.

Making Love to a Two-headed Girl.

Millie Christine, the two-headed colored girl, has been relating her experiences with lovers to a reporter. She claims to have had ten proposals. She says: "Why, I have had—let me see (counting fingers on two hands with two other hands)—why, ten outright proposals, and perhaps as many more suitors, who never asked me to marry them, but spoke of love. White? You forget, sir, that I have been abroad for many years, and saw no colored people, although my first love affair was in this country. You can't expect that I could tell you of them but in a general way. I don't mind saying that my suitors have been of every profession and condition of man, with the majority leading toward speculative showmen, who thought to impose upon me with professions of a passion that they might realize upon my value as a curiosity. I sent them to the right about mighty quick."

"Who was the first suitor?"

This time the other head talked: "Why the first was an old gentleman in Boston, very rich, but a little loose here (the other head was touched by its own set of hands, illustrating a mild form of insanity.) He presented me with bouquets, two at a time, brooches and earrings, boxes of gloves (the story shifted on to the other tongue now). Oh, he gave me lots of things. You see, I am an expensive girl to make love to. Well the old fellow in Boston used to call on me brimful of love and whisper in my ear. He didn't know which set of ears to whisper to. He would say to, very softly; 'My darling, listen to me.' Then I would look round (interrupted the other head) and say, 'What's that,' and he would come round to the other side and begin again. It was tremendously funny, and although I wanted to be kind to him, I wouldn't, for very mischief, resist the opportunity. Finally, in desperation, he fell on his knees—he was the only one that ever knelt to me—and exclaimed: 'Darling, or darlings I love you dearly, and would like to make you my wife or wives.' It was too funny, and I held out four hands to help him rise. He wanted to kiss one, but while making up his mind which one I made my escape. I never saw him again, but just as I was about to leave for England he sent me a set of bracelets—four make a set for me. Here they are. They are all inscribed; see." She unclasped two at once and passed them about. Neatly engraved inside of each were the words: "To the only woman I ever loved."

Than a friend of the Nightingale looked up the story—one who knew whereof he spoke—and remarking that these love affairs of Millie Christine had not been the least interesting part of her history, told how a young Frenchman, who always had plenty of money and was certainly a man of education, had followed the Nightingale for two years all over the continent, and never ceased his solicitation of her hand. "He sent her presents and letters, attended her performances with regularity, and was present at fifty-five in succession in half a dozen different cities. He pestered the life out of her and me. Then a circus agent in this country wanted to marry her, and pressed his suit with much ardor, and half a dozen side-showmen wanted to join with her in matrimony. People often ask queer questions on this subject, and will not credit it that she has received bona-fide offers of marriage. She has had as many lovers as fall to the lot of the average young woman, and here is one now—Count Rosebud, gentleman."

The Count is a very small man—about as long as an umbrella—and in years more than thirty. He is one of the attractions in the company of which the Nightingale is the bright, particular star; and has traveled in the company with her for some years. His love was of slow growth, and only became a passion that he could no longer restrain the expression of after two years' acquaintance. Then love took fast hold of him. He watches her every movement; is miserable when she talks to anybody else; is ferocious when she smiles on another, and is in a perfect agony of despair when she smiles not on him.

"Do you love her, Count?"

"As my life, monsieur; but ah, she no care for me as I for her. She is my life light. What care I if the world know my love?"

"Would you marry her?"

"To-day could I be made so happy."

The Count passed to an adjoining room, where Millie Christine sat, and through the half-open door an inquisitive eye could have seen him standing on tiptoe in front of her, reaching with one hand to each side of her face as if to caress her. The case forms, in fact, something of a parallel to the story told by Victor Hugo in fiction of "The Man Who Laughs," and who, despite his terrible mutilation, was much loved.

Caution.

We desire to warn the readers of the COURIER, especially those in the country, (for they are the ones who will most likely be approached) against having anything to do with the thieving gang of dead-beats and swindlers who are traveling through the country offering inducements of every character to unwary farmers and others in order to ensnare them, and rob them of their hard earned money. In order that our readers can form some idea of the many deceptions that are being practiced, we give the particulars of some of the trickery practiced in neighboring counties. The Angola Herald says, "On the 7th inst. two men of gentlemanly appearance, came up to the residence of Mr. Stallman and found him engaged at his usual duties. After some introductory remarks, one of the gentlemen stated that he was looking for some good man to sell a patent churn dasher, setting apart the county of Steuben as territory to work upon, and suggesting to Mr. Stallman that he take the position as county agent. After some hesitating and a great deal of explanation on the part of the two gentlemen as to their reason for introducing their patent in the manner suggested, setting forth its superior qualities, and condemning patent right swindlers generally, Mr. Stallman concluded that he would enter into the agreement of agency and commence work upon the scheme. Five hundred of the churn dashers were to be sent by shipment to Angola. Stallman was to sell them at $1 a piece and receive as compensation a salary of $65 per month, also a commission of 20 per cent. on the price of the dashers. But in order that the bargain should be fully executed, it was necessary that a note should be drawn up, and that he should be perfectly at ease it should be made payable to himself. For convenience sake the note was to be left at the Angola Bank and all business to be transacted and money on sales to be remitted through the same; and that it should be understood perfectly between all parties, and the bankers, he must write his name across the back of it. This consummated the entire bargain. The gentlemen took their leave, and everything seemed glowing until the 10th, when matters took a turn. A gentleman with apparent dignity and innocence called and presented a card representing himself from some commercial insurance and banking association of Indianapolis. He had met a Mr. Morrison at Sturgis, Mich., and purchased the note of him for $250, together with a property statement. He had been looking through the county records and found him (Stallman) not to be the owner of property according to statement and therefore required him to secure the note. The truth of fraud dawned out, and Mr. Stallman succeeded in getting two or three of the neighbors to talk the matter over. The gentleman with the card was persuaded to skip, but was permitted to take the note with him. Since nothing has been heard from him. We understand the matter is being closely looked up. Let this be a last warning to let such shysters alone."

Another game of a similar nature is described by the Bryan (O) Press as follows. "On Monday of this week two of those sleek-tongued gentry who are continually prowling around the country, seeking whom they may swindle, called upon T. Day, a farmer living south of Eden, and represented themselves as being agents for the Western Medical Works, of Indianapolis, Ind. They were traveling over the country establishing agencies for their medicines among the people, didn't want to leave them at the drug stores, because the druggists would adulterate them. The result was as usual. A contract was drawn up and signed by both parties, Mr. Day agreeing to take the medicines and pay for such only as he might sell. The other parties were to pay all expenses, including advertising and postage. As they had a large bundle of papers Mr. Day did not take time to read all of them, but thought he understood all perfectly and there could be no swindle about it. After the parties had gone he found by the duplicate of the contract left with him that he had signed a note for $200, payable three months after date at the national bank, in Bryan, and the date of maturity may be extended indefinitely, at the option of the payee. Nearly every week there is notice of this kind in our exchanges. As long as people sign paper without knowing positively what they contain, these things will happen. It would be well for farmers not to sign papers prepared for them by any of these traveling agents.

A PRINCE'S MARRIAGE IN OREGON.

The Fortunes of a Leader in the Austrian Revolution of 1848.

From the Oregon Deutsch Zeitung.

A few days ago the Oregonian contained a list of marriages during the year, and among them appeared the following notice: "Dec. 18.—Prince C J. Nadasky and Marie von Reiche." The oddity of a titled wedding in Oregon led our reporter to investigate, and here follows the true story: Prince Carl Johann Nadasky, sole heir of a wealthy and influential Austrian family and a long line of illustrious ancestors, was, during the revolutionary war of 1848 a young officer in the Imperial Austrian Guard. When sentence of death was passed on Robert Brum, the famous revolutionary leader, and a favorite of the German people, the young officer was detailed to command the detachment of soldiers whose bullets were to terminate the life of the noblest and bravest man of his age. The fortitude Blum displayed at the execution, and his parting words so impressed the young soldier, that a few months' study of the liberal publications of those days sufficed to lead him into the revolutionary party. But the feudal Government triumphed, and Prince Nadasky, together with many other prominent leaders, was taken prisoner and condemned to death. Through the influence of his relatives his sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life, and he was sent to the dark toils of an Austrian fortress.

Eight long years the Prince lived the life of a convict, until at the birth of the Crown Prince of Austria he was liberated, but banished from his country for life. He came to San Francisco and devoted himself, under the assumed name of H. Meier, to the business of flower gardener earning a livelihood and accumulating a small fortune. About five years ago he was married to a German lady of noble birth, who was impressed with the cultured and gentlemanly demeanor of the gardener. Not more than a year past he removed to Salem, in this State, and bought a small property for his business. But the happy pair had been blessed with a lovely boy, and the father found no rest in the thought that his dear ones were destined to lead an obscure life, away from the honors and luxury due them, and took passage for Europe. He went to Vienna, and in an audience with Emperor Francis Joseph succeeded in obtaining his pardon and being reinstated into his ancestral inheritance. Post haste he sped back to his family, and under his real name he was again married in this city to his faithful wife. The steamer Idaho, which left here Dec. 29, took the happy couple and their young son back to the castles of the Prince in the beautiful mountain regions of Austria.

Four Per Cent. for Money.

New York Sun.

The plethoric condition of the money market and the low rates of interest which prevail in general commerce have, no doubt, had much to do with the large and continued demand for Government four per cent, bonds. We do not refer to the phenomenally large subscriptions since Jan. 1. These do not represent a normal market, but are directley due to the facilities of one or two banks for making enormous profits in a short time and without risk, under John Sherman's more than paternal favor.

About eighteen months ago the Bowery Savings Bank reduced the rate of interest on its mortgage loans from seven to six per cent. The Mutual Life Insurance Company followed suit, and since then all its mortgage loans have, as we understand, been made at six per cent., which may be considered at present the current rate for a sound loan on city real estate. Other insurance companies have, as a rule, made no reduction in the rate of interest, and still insist on seven per cent. on new loans. Naturally, the choicest loans have been secured by the six per cent. lenders, companies, estates, and individuals.

Never before in the financial history of the country has there been so great an amount of accumulated capital at this centre seeking investment as to-day Call loans are two and three per cent. on stocks, and one and two on Governments. Sixty and ninety day loans are made at three per cent. on stocks and at one and a half and two per cent. on Government bonds. Prime mercantile paper is discounted at three and a half to five per cent., according to date of maturity. Money is flowing into New York banks at a rate which is anything but flattering to the abilities of its owners. The aggregate deposits on the 25th of January, 1879, show an increase of $7,810,000 over those of the corresponding date in 1878.

It is very questionable whether in the present era of small profits and low prices, borrowers can afford to pay as much for the use of capital as they once could. The annual taxes, national State, and local, are fully triple the amount they were twenty years ago. This is a charge on the net earnings of the agriculture, industry, and commerce of the country, and must very sensibly reduce the profits of business.

Our chief capitalists are self-made men, familiar with the various modes of employing capital actively, in rail roads, steamboats, building, manufactures, trade, and speculation. These men are not likely to be satisfied with four per cent. as a permanent rate of interest. Much money invested temporarily in the Government four per cent. bonds merely awaits opportunities for permanent profitable investment, or for employment in industrial and commercial ventures. The risks of lending money have been greatly diminished, and are more easily ascertainable than formerly. The number of firms with ample capital and established credits have largely increased, while the weak ones have, in a great measure, been weeded out. Because of these diminished risks, and other kindred circumstances, the lender can afford to accept a lower rate of interest.

Government four per cents. will no doubt be sought after as a safe investment for the surplus accumulations of the rich and the savings of the poor. We have in this country a very considerable and growing class in the enjoyment of modest fortunes, each yielding support to one or to a few persons, and not readibly available for the ordinary forms of business investment. This class, wishing a safe investment, and willing to accept a very moderate income from it, are investing in Government fours. A large amount of capital held in trust for widows, orphans, minor, heirs, and others, very properly seeks the new loan. It is a favorite investment with trustees and executors, sure of their principal, and sure of realizing on it with little trouble when ever needed. So called "good old-fashioned seven per cent. investments" are very scarce.

The German army-horses are now fed on biscuits of three parts each of rye flour, oat flour and dextrinated pea flour and one part of linseed flour. The biscuits are made with a hole in the middle of each, so they can be strung on a string and hung to the saddle-bow or be carried by the trooper around his waist. Each biscuit weighs, when baked hard and dry, about two ounces. Seven biscuits are broken up and given to the horse in the morning, moistened with water, if convenient, otherwise dry; twelve at noon and seven at night. After careful experiment in camp, on the march and campaigning, they are reported by all the cavalry and artillery officers better than oats. A trooper can easily carry thirty pounds of these biscuits, which will furnish his horse with full rations for eight days, or will serve with forage, for twenty days' hard marching.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case Try it Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

Sleep has a most wonderful power, often stronger than the will, as in the case of the sleeping soldier, and more mighty than pain, as when sick persons and tortured prisoners sleep in the midst of their suffering. No tortue, it is said, has been found equal to prevent sleep. The amount of sleep needed differs according to the constitution and habits. Big brains and persons who perform much brain labor need a large amount of sleep. Children need more sleep than grown people, becase constitution is more active than decay in their brains.

THE

INDIANA STATE SENTINEL

FOR 1[illegible]

HAS BEEN REDUCED IN PRICE TO

One Dollar Per Year

The merits of this paper are well known among a large majority of the farmers and stock raisers of this State. No paper furnishes more news for less money. It has been the acknowledged leading Democratic newspaper of Indiana for almost half a century. It has ever stood with the Democracy. Its reputation throughout the Union is firmly established. Indiana to-day is democratic by 15,000 majority, and the Sentinel's circulation and influence has increased in like proportion in the last six months.

The Weekly Sentinel

Will be in many respects an epitome of the Daily, championing the same cause, and aiming to fill the same wants of the general reader, but it will be prepaired with special reference to the character of its circulation. In every respect it will be the best weekly we can make, and we think it will more than

Compare Favorably

With any weekly circulating in the State of Indiana. It will contain our ablest editorials upon current political events and other topics of interest, and will be

Newsy, Literary,

And full of entertaining and instructive miscellany, and more particularly adapted to the family circle. Its splendid market report will continue to be a leading feature, and, for this reason alone, no farmer should be without it.

Every reading and thinking man in the State who can afford to take a newspaper ought to subscribe for the Weekly Sentinel.

Farmers, Merchants

and Lawyers, without respect to party, particularly stand in need of it, for, in addition to its political and literary merits, the Sentinel is confessedly the

Commercial Paper of Indiana.

The Indiana State Sentinel is the paper for everybody—the farmer, mechanic and professional man. At our greatly reduced rates no one can afford to be without it.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of wealth have been gathered from the fields of "golden grain" during the past harvest, and, what is better, this wealth is distributed among the people. As the Sentinel's share of this happy result, we ask every reader to aid in gathering our share of the harvest of 50,000 new subscribers.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A DISPATCH from Belvidere, N. J., says the convicted ex-officials of that county have been sentenced to terms in the State prison ranging from one to two years, all at hard labor. The contractor involved in the conspiracy to plunder the treasury was sentenced to six months in the county jail, and to pay a fine of $500.

THE boiler of a locomotive exploded near Bradford, Pa., a few days ago, instantly killing John Vaugh, the engineer, and John Adds, a laborer; fatally injuring Geo. Grogan, the conductor, C. L. A. Sheppard Assistant Superintendent, and Mike Hollerin, the fireman, and seriously injuring four other men.... At Mortville, Me., John McFarland, wife and granddaughter were killed by an insane man named Rowell, who was later shot dead by a neighbor whom he had attacked.

THE New York Star asserts that A. T. Stewart's remains were returned to Judge Hilton, Nov. 14, only eight days after the theft, by a go-between, and that the amount of money which changed hands was between $35,000 and $45,000, but that no agreement was entered into to protect the thieves, who were five in number....It is reported that Jay Gould is seriously embarrassed financially, and his early downfall is confidently predicted.

DR. LINDERMAN, Director of the United States Mint, at Philadelphia, is dead.

THE WEST.

AT Coal Creek, Ind., two young men, named Hughes and Daily, quarreled over a friendly game of cards, and Daily drew a revolver and shot Hughes dead. The murderer was arrested.

THIS week another new drama, "Two Women," is being produced at McVicker's, in Chicago. As this play is a partial adaptation of one of Emil Gaboriau's works, the same source from which "Almost a Life" and "Within an Inch of His Life" were drawn, an impression has been created that it is similar to them. This is not the fact, as it differs as widely as possible. The situations in the drama are well worked up, and the construction is good. Mr. McVicker complimented the authoress very highly for her work, stating that it was the first manuscript play he had ever received without alteration.

SITTING BULL—the good old soul—has sent to his Uncapapa relatives at Standing Rock agency the following: He wants to locate on the reservation, if the Great Father will permit him. "Once I was strong and brave, and my people had hearts of iron, but now I am a coward and will fight no more forever. My people are cold and hungry. My women are sick and my children are freezing. I will do as the Great Father wishes. I will give my guns and ponies into his hands. My arrows are broken, and my war-paint thrown to the winds."

THERE was a double execution at Indianapolis, Ind., on Wednesday, the 29th ult. The victims were John Achey, a gambler, for the murder of George Leggett, a member of the same disreputable profession, and William Merrick, who put his wife out of the way by giving her strychnine in a glass of wine. Merrick asserted his innocence to the last. Achey said on the gallows, "The people wanted a hanging, and he was ready for it." Both of the culprits displayed wonderful coolness to the final moment. ....Another County Treasurer has gone wrong, and also gone to the penitentiary for four years—Charles F. Goodhue, Stephenson county, Ill.

A TERRIBLE explosion is reported from Secor, Woodford county, Ill. The saw and grist mill of L. Gasner was almost totally destroyed instantaneously, timbers and boards being thrown a quarter of a mile by the explosion of the boiler. Four persons were instantly killed, their bodies being horribly mutilated, and one thrown 300 feet through the air. Another was fatally injured.

M. J. SULLIVANT, the famous Ford county (Ill.) farmer, died recently on an Ohio river steamboat while journeying from Henderson, Ky., to Louisville. Mr. Sullivant was celebrated as the largest farmer in the world, owning and cultivating a place of 47,000 acres, comprising nearly all in Ford county, Ill. The farm was so extensive that small dwellings constructed on wheels were drawn by oxen to various parts of it, conveying laborers who would be for weeks absent from the village headquarters.....A fire at St. Joseph, Mo., destroyed Bailey's dry-goods store and Hax's furniture store. Losses, $95,000 and $125,000, respectively.

THE SOUTH.

IMMIGRANTS in Wise county, Texas, from Lawrence, Kan., engaged in a fight, in which forty shots were exchanged. Ben Rhodes and Joe Haney were fatally wounded.

THREE negroes named Alexander and three white men named Gamblin quarreled about the possession of some land in Wayne county, Miss. Later the negroes ambushed the white men, killing one and wounding another. The fire was returned and two negroes were killed. The other fled....The two convicted members of the Brevard county (Florida) Canvassing Board have escaped from jail.

A TORNADO swept over a portion of Iuka, Miss., occupied by black people. One colored woman and five children were killed outright; two of the latter were found a quarter of a mile from home. Eight other colored people were wounded, one of whom has since died....It is reported from New Orleans that J. Madison Wells, Surveyor of the Port, has been indicted by the United States Grand Jury for malfeasance in office.

WASHINGTON.

ST. MARTIN, the Louisiana witness, whose affidavit charging Representative Stenger, Maddox, Gibson and others with having bribed him to perform certain dirty work in the interest of Tilden the Potter Committee some time ago refused to place upon its records, has undergone a three days' examination before that committee. He proves as versatile a witness as Jim Anderson and Agnes Jenks, and is probably about as reliable. In his testimony he recanted that portion of his affidavit implicating Mr. Stenger, and also retracted that portion which charged that Gibson paid him $400. During the examination there was an interesting tilt between the witness and Ben Butler. The latter asked St. Martins if he had corrected the lie which appeared in the affidavit before he had seen it in the newspapers. St. Martins replied that he did not consider it a lie; that it was a mistake. Butler then said: "But wasn't it a lie to the public?" St. Martins stubbornly returned that he would not answer any more questions put to him by Gen. Butler, who simply replied, "Well, we will see." The witness repeated, "Well, I'll be —— if I answer any more. You can call me up for contempt, but that is all you can do." He, however, reconsidered and the examination proceeded.

THE commission appointed during the last session of Congress, composed of three Senators and five Representatives, to consider and report upon the feasibility of transferring the control of the Indians from the Interior to the War Department, finds itself at a dead lock, four of them favoring and four opposing the proposed change....The President has signed the Pension Arrearages bill. He said at the time the bill passed that he looked upon it as doing substantial justice to the soldier, but he regretted extremely that it appeared upon the stage at just this time, in view of the enormous expenditure it entailed. This expenditure cannot begin until an appropriation has been made, as it has been officially announced that no payment will be made under or on account of the bill till Congress makes a specific appropriation for the purpose.

THE Senate Finance Committee, in Congress, has decided to report against the reduction of the tax on cigars.

REPRESENTATIVE BUCKNER, Chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, says that he does not believe it is possible to get any additional financial legislation through the House at this session....Senator Christiancy, of Michigan, has accepted the post of Minister to Peru, and will resign his seat in the United States Senate....The Finance Committee of the Senate has decided to recommend a reduction of the tobacco tax to 20 cents per pound.

IT is announced from Washington that hereafter interest on Government bonds will be paid in gold, when demanded, at the various sub-treasuries in the country. ....At a Cabinet meeting, the other day, the Arrears of Pension bill was the principal subject under consideration. Secretary Sherman thought the law inoperative, and that the framers of it have been so careless that it will not be possible to pay any money under it. This appears to be the opinion of the accounting officers of the treasury, who are the only persons who can pass upon the question. The subject was referred to the Attorney General.

THE excess of exports over imports for December, 1878, were $35,128,000; for the year 1878, $304,842,000.

LIEUT. COMMANDER KELLS, of the United States navy, who, during the political excitement in Louisiana, wrote an insulting letter to Senator Kellogg, of that State, has been sentenced by court-martial to dismissal from the service.

POLITICAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "Mr. Conkling has again triumphed in his committee, and, by the solid vote of the Republican members, secured an adverse report upon the nominations of Gen. Merritt and Mr. Burt Gen. Graham, having been nominated to fill a vacancy, will be confirmed, a unanimous report in his favor having been agreed upon in the committee."

R. L. T. BEAL, Democrat, has been elected to Congress from the First district of Virginia, to fill the unexpired term of Beverly B. Douglas....The Arkansas Legislature has elected J. D. Walker, Democrat, as the successor of Stephen W. Dorsey, Republican, in the United States Senate from that State.

THE Louisiana Legislature has chosen B. F. Jonas United States Senator to succeed John B. Eustis.

GENERAL.

RECENT deaths: John W. Goff, one of the leading business men of Cincinnati; John Bonnet, a famous St. Louis caterer; Horace Hyde, a well-known St. Louis journalist, and brother of William Hyde, chief editor of the Republican—killed by a railroad accident.

FOREIGN.

ACCOUNTS from France, England and Holland represent the weather as unusually severe, and much suffering in consequence.... The Governments of Eastern Europe are devising measures to ward off the dreadful plague, which is slowly making its way westward. The Assembly of Bulgarian notables charged to choose a Prince for the new European state met at Tirnova, the capital, a few days ago. The Assembly is decidedly pro-Russian. The election of a Prince will not be proceeded with until April....The news from South Africa is that the Zulu King refuses all the British demands, and that the King has assembled 8,000 men on the border.

THE British troops continued their advance into Afghanistan, and at last accounts were well on their way toward Cabul....A definite treaty between Russia and Turkey has been concluded, and peace is now established between the two nations....Great distress is reported in the English mining districts....Fresh outbreaks of the rinderpest are reported in Prussia....Germany, Austria and Italy are devising measures to ward off the plague....A Rome dispatch announces the death of Cardinal Antonucci....Stanley, the explorer, is preparing to make another exploration of Africa.

IN consequence of the arrival at Liverpool of a cargo of cattle infected with incipient pleuro-pneumonia, from Canada, the British Government has prohibited the importation of cattle from America....Propositions are before both houses of the French Parliament for full amnesty to all the Communists.... In Germany, the opposition to a protective tariff is rapidly increasing in numbers and power....Rev. Hugh McNeill, Dean of Ripon, Eng., is dead....The great Russian fair of Simbirsk has been postponed on account of the plague....In France there is talk of constructing a telegraph line across the Desert of Sahara.

THE conflict between Marshal MacMahon, President of France, and the Republicans of the Assembly has ended in the resignation of the former, together with his entire Cabinet. The refusal of MacMahon to accede to the demands of the Republican leaders for certain changes of army commanders was the immediate cause of his resignation, though the recent elections were a hint to him that he was not wanted any longer. The two chambers of the Assembly immediately assembled in joint congress, and elected M. Grevy as the successor of MacMahon, and he was accordingly proclaimed President of the French republic for the term of seven years.

THE CIPHER TELEGRAMS.

THE Potter Committee began the investigation of the cipher dispatches at Washington on the 27th of January. Clarence Carey, the attorney for the Western Union Telegraph Company, testified that certain telegrams were placed in his charge when it was proposed to issue subpœnas for their production before the Investigating Committee. He was instructed to pick out all of a political character, with the view of getting them out of the way of the subpœna. They were afterward turned over to Capt. Whitney, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Washington. Floyd Grant, who made the selection of the dispatches in New York, said that he thought of the 20,000 about 300 were in cipher. Capt. Whitney was called by the committee, and testified to the shipping of the telegrams to New York, by order of President Orton, and James O. Green testified to the subsequent burning of them. Green said that among the dispatches there were seven or eight messages that passed between John N. Tyner and Zachariah Chandler about making two appointments in the Interior Department at salaries of $2,500 each, and having the money deposited in some national bank, so that it might be drawn in Indianapolis by the Republican committee. The telegrams also contained the names of the persons to be appointed. He could not remember what those names were, but he believes one was Martin. Green also remembered some telegrams between Tyner and John W. Foster, of Indiana, in reference to the sale of some political office.

THE Potter Committee was occupied, on the 28th, chiefly in trying to find out how copies of the ciphers came into the possession of the New York Tribune. Assistant Postmaster General Brady and William E. Chandler related their connection with the dispatches after they left the custody of Bullock, the messenger of Senator Morton's Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Brady detailed the manner in which he came into possession of the dispatches through Mr. Evans, member of Congress from Indiana, who received them from Bullock direct, before the latter left for Cologne, as Consul. Mr. Brady stated how he had delivered portions of these dispatches to William E. Chandler, and the manner in which they had been separated, culled over and examined. Mr. Chandler detailed the manner in which he dropped a package mysteriously upon Gen. Butler's desk, without telling Gen. Butler of the fact, or of the contents of the dispatches. Mr. Chandler also related the manner in which he had carefully collected certain dispatches from the package and forwarded them to Mr. Whitelaw Reid, of New York.

THE Potter Committee, on the 29th ult., recalled William E. Chandler, who said, when he first saw the cipher dispatches, he did not know their meaning. William P. McClelland, an expert, on examination of the writings, testified to deciphering the Oregon dispatches. There was no one present at the time except Senators Morton and Mitchell and Mr. Burbank and two experts from Oregon. Gen. Brady was recalled, and produced the telegrams alluded to in his previous testimony. Translated, they read as follows:

TALLAHASSEE—Dec. 1.—John Wing, Washington: Florida will go for Hayes. BRADY.

WASHINGTON—[illegible] Florida in trouble. I speak advisedly. Have no other fears. JNO. N. TYNER.

WASHINGTON—Gen. Brady, Tallahassee: Reliable information here says Democrats claim two of Florida Returning Board. Do you believe it? WING.

TALLAHASSEE—John Wing, Washington: We have no intimation of treachery, except on the part of one of our own number. It we come to grief, it is through him—the New Yorker. We are advised he recommends contrary to our interests. His many and mysterious interviews arouse suspicion. BRADY.

The witness, on cross-examination, explained that "New Yorker" meant Gen. Barlow, while "John Wing" was a fictitious name for John N. Tyner. The committee called Mr. Tyner, who proceeded to explain the meaning of the cipher telegrams that passed between him and John W. Foster, of Indiana. He said that the phrases, "Smith arrangement," "Brown arrangement," and the words "certain" and "early" were the ciphers used. "Smith arrangement" referred to securing the services of the Greenbackers, which were found desirable by the Republicans of Indiana at that time. "Brown arrangement" meant the purchase of the Indianapolis Sentinel, which was proposed, and placing it in charge of a competent Greenbacker in order that the Greenback voters should be taken from the Democratic ranks. "Certain" meant $5,000, and "early" meant $10,000. To carry out the former arrangement $5,000 would be required, and the latter $10,000. As to the dispatches exchanged between him and Zach Chandler, Mr. Tyner stated that in these dispatches the phrase, "one Indian Agent" and "two Indian Agents" were respectively used to represent $5,000 and $10,000. It was estimated that about the sum of $5,000 was necessary to pay persons for bringing out votes, and that $10,000 was the amount which could be used to advantage for the legitimate purposes of the campaign. Chandler had stated that the National Committee had about $10,000 which it could place to the credit of Indiana. The money was to be deposited in a New York bank to the credit of the Central Bank of Indianapolis, as the President of the latter national bank raised objections to cashing a draft upon the State Central Committee.

WHITELAW REID, of the New York Tribune, was before the Potter Committee on the 30th ult., and explained how he came into possession of the cipher dispatches published in that paper. He said he received a portion of them from William E. Chandler and a portion from Congressman Hiscock. Before they were deciphered, he published editorials on the subject, with a view to inducing some one to come forward with a key to the cipher, but, that failing, the copies were attacked seriously. Messrs. Hazard and Grovenor did the entire work of translation. An Associated Press dispatch drew attention to the fact that the cipher used was an old mining cipher, and was taken from the "Household Dictionary." The Tribune experts then procured this dictionary, and the cipher was plain. The witness met Gov. Tilden about the time the publication of the dispatches commenced and told him they were bothered by these ciphers, and he ought to give them the key. Tilden replied in the same jocular way, and subsequently, at Saratoga, said he did not know anything about the ciphers, and did not believe any had been delivered at his house. Reid understood him to mean that he did not even read the telegrams then being published.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

AT CHARLESTON, S. C.

ABOUT a dozen witnesses testified before the Teller Committee, on Jan. 24. Butler Spears, of Sumter county, colored Republican, testified he was pursued and fired at by the Democrats, and W. H. Singleton testified to finding packages of tissue tickets in the ballot box at Swimming Pen precinct. C. H. Morse and Marion Morse, white Democrats of Sumter, testified to general good feeling toward colored people in the county; and S. J. Hanna, colored Supervisor, testified to being assaulted and driven from the polls at King's Tree, in Williamsburg county. Pendergass, colored Deputy United States Marshal at the same place, was assaulted by a party of Democrats, who then, without being sworn, voted the tissue tickets by handfuls. Other Supervisors testified to being refused admission to other polling-places in the county. H. E. Blair and J. H. Johnson, Republican Supervisors at Camden, Kershaw county, testified that the polls were crowded by whites so that the colored people could not vote, and to finding large numbers of tissue tickets in the ballot boxes. J. M. Cantey and W. M. Shannon, Democratic Supervisors at the same place, and W. D. Grantham, County Chairman, testified that after 9 in the morning the crowding was over, and that everybody who chose to do so could vote, and that many colored people abstained from voting at the instigation of their leaders.

SEVERAL Republican witnesses testified before the Teller Committee, on Jan. 25, to the fact of tissue tickets being found in boxes in various precincts in Richland county. White and colored Democrats from Sumter county testified there were from 1,500 to 2,000 colored Democrats in the county, and hundreds of them were seen to vote the Democratic ticket. Two testified to being cursed, jeered at and threatened by colored Republicans, one being obliged to leave his church. W. J. Whipper (colored), Republican, described the turbulent conduct of the Democrats, and the demand for a division of time in Hampton county. Three Republicans from Colleton county testified to intimidation, and the use of tissue ballots in that county. This testimony was flatly contradicted by the Democratic County Chairman, who swore to the thoroughness and peacefulness of the Democratic canvass.

THE Teller Committee was occupied mainly on the 27th in hearing Democratic testimony as to the conduct of the canvass and election in Williamsburg and Sumter counties. The witnesses all testified to the peacefulness and fairness of the election, and to the bad character of Swails, the Republican leader, and his efforts to stir up strife between the whites and blacks. J. B. Chandler (white) testified that armed negroes surrounded Cedar Swamp precinct, saying the ballots should not be counted. The ballot-box was sent off on a by-path, while negroes lay in wait for it on the usual road. It was the intention of the negroes to murder the managers and seize the box. Paul Ludwig testified to the peacefulness of the election in Richland county. A number of colored Democrats were placed on the stand, and told how they had been bulldozed and intimidated by their Republican colored brethren. John Lee, colored Democrat, had been told by Republicans that he ought to be hung and his wife be burned. Many colored Democrats had been threatened, and their red shirts torn off. Others had been pulled from their horses, and their wives advised to leave them. Saw large numbers of colored Republicans vote the Democratic ticket. Coleman Beattie, colored Democrat, was told that every colored Democrat ought to be hung or burned. Andrew Johnson, colored Democrat, had been threatened, abused and beaten by colored Republicans on account of politics, and his children beaten and driven from school. James Miners, colored, had been cursed and scorned, and his children hissed at, because he was a Democrat. He had been shot in the face, and his head was broken. Dick Wallace, colored, had been cursed and threatened by colored Republicans, who also knocked down a building on his place. James Taylor, colored, was attacked near Columbia by three colored Republicans, who tore off his red shirt and stole his hat. Other attempts were made to do him bodily injury.

A LARGE number of witnesses, black and white, Democrats and Republicans, were examined by the Teller Committee on the 28th. William Riley and Fred Knox, colored Republicans, of Barnwell county, testified that there was intimidation, and that many Republican negroes were afraid to vote. Thomas H. Moses, colored Democrat, and three white Democrats testified, on the other hand, that the election in Barnwell was peaceable, that there was not a semblance of intimidation, and that most of the negroes voted the Democratic ticket. Orangeburg county was next taken up, and Sandy Keith, colored Republican, and E. A. Webster, white Republican, swore that Republican meetings were broken up and hundreds of negroes discharged by their employers for voting the Republican ticket. B. Byers, colored Democrat, testified to the bulldozing of colored Democrats by colored Republicans.

THE witnesses examined by the Teller committee on the 28th ult. gave testimony similar in many respects to that previously given. Two Republicans testified that Georgetown county was given to the Democrats by throwing out Republican votes on account of alleged informalities. R. Smith, a colored Democrat, was positive that over 3,000 colored men in Charleston voted the Democratic ticket at the late election. This closed the investigation at Charleston, and the committee left for Washington.

AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

WHEN the Teller Committee left New Orleans for Charleston, they appointed representatives to take additional testimony before United States Commissioner Lane, and a large number of witnesses have been examined. W. J. Cumming, a member of the Legislature from Natchitoches, testified that the general tenor of the testimony of witnesses on the Republican side is to the effect that a conspiracy existed on the part of the Democrats to break up negro meetings for political effect. Such testimony is unqualifiedly false. There was no organized band such as Blount described. Our action against Blount and others was taken for protection, they having threatened to get the negroes together and burn the town. The testimony of the witness throughout was contradictory to the Republican witnesses. A number of other witnesses from Natchitoches were called by the Democrats, and corroborated Cumming's statements. They all contradicted the testimony of the Republican witnesses as to intimidation, showing they apprehended violence threatened by the negroes, and their action was for the purpose of preserving the peace; also, that many negroes voted the Democratic ticket.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, Jan. 24.—SENATE.—There was little or nothing done. Mr. Edmunds made another unsuccessful attempt to take up the resolutions recently submitted by him, declaring the validity of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the constitution.

HOUSE.—Mr. Fuller submitted a resolution directing the Committee on Ways and Means to consider the feasibility of enacting a law to equalize the internal-revenue tax among all the States. Adopted.....The House went into committee of the whole, Mr. Bell in the chair, on the private calendar. Almost all the war-claim bills were objected to by Mr. Bragg. The committee rose, and twelve private bills reported were passed by the House....Mr. Banning presented a substitute for the Army reorganization bill, and asked to have it printed. So ordered.

SATURDAY, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the entire day, in committee of the whole, to the consideration of the Postoffice Appropriation bill, no other business being transacted.

MONDAY, Jan. 27.—SENATE.—The credentials of Senator Shields, of Missouri, were presented, and he took the oath of office....A large number of bills were referred, including one by Mr. Ferry, to reorganize and discipline the militia of the United States....The bill to abolish the volunteer navy of the United States was passed. ....Mr. Edmunds, from the Judiciary Committee, reported back the House joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution prohibiting the payment of claims of disloyal persons for property injured or destroyed in the War of the Rebellion, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Placed on the calendar....The claim of Warren Mitchell, amounting to $128,000, for cotton seized during the war, gave rise to considerable debate. Ben Hill, of Georgia, made the principal speech, in which he took vigorous ground against war claims of every description.... The New York nominations engrossed the attention of the Senate in executive session. The time was chiefly devoted to the reading of Arthur's reply to Secretary Sherman. Mr. Conkling contented himself with making a formal report of the action of his committee, which was adverse in the cases of Merritt for Collector and Burt for Naval Officer, but in the case of Graham, nominated for Surveyor in place of Merritt, as this was the filling of a vacancy, the committee reported in favor of confirmation. After considerable discussion it was decided by the Senate to remove the injunction of secrecy from all the papers.

HOUSE.—Mr. Wright's bill loaning $500 to every man who is not worth $300, who desires to take advantage of the provisions of the Homestead law, was taken up. After discussion, the bill was defeated—yeas, 22; nays, 212.... Mr. Haskell moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of Union soldiers interred in private, village or city cemeteries. Agreed to.

TUESDAY, Jan. 28.—SENATE.—The testimony of James E. Anderson, taken before the committee of the House, and affecting Senator Matthews, was received from the House, and referred to a select committee appointed at the last session, of which Mr. Allison is the Chairman....Mr. Edmunds introduced a bill authorizing the President to prescribe suitable police regulations for the government of various Indian reservations....The Warren Mitchell cotton claim was debated, put to a vote, and defeated—17 yeas to 30 nays.

HOUSE.—The Legislative Appropriation bill was reported and referred to the committee of the whole....The bill to restrict the immigration of the Chinese was then taken up and passed by a vote of 155 yeas to 72 nays. It provides that no master of a vessel owned by any citizen of the United States shall take on board at any foreign port any number of Chinese exceeding fifteen, with intent to bring them to the United States, under penalty of $100 for each passenger in excess of fifteen, such penalty to become a lien on the vessel.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 29.—SENATE.—Mr. Hamlin called up the Senate bill for promoting the efficiency of Chaplains of the United States navy, and it was passed without discussion. The bill provides that no person under 25 years nor over 35 be appointed Chaplain, and fixes the relative rank, and the whole number not to exceed twenty....The pension cases on the calendar being disposed of, the Senate went into executive session, on motion of Mr. Conkling, and the nomination of Senator Christiancy to be Minister to Peru was unanimously confirmed, and without the usual reference.

HOUSE.—After a short struggle, the Republicans, who desired the morning hour, were voted down, and, by a vote of yeas 118, nays 115, the House went into committee of the whole on the Postoffice Appropriation bill.

THURSDAY, Jan. 30.—SENATE.—The resolutions of Mr. Edmunds, declaring the validity of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the constitution, were taken up, and Mr. Morgan advocated his substitute of Jan. 20.

HOUSE.—The Postoffice Appropriation bill was passed after many of the amounts were increased ....The struggle for the morning hour then began, and Mr. Hewitt, by filibustering, prevented a renewal of the war-claims debate.

LOWELL, Mass., has over $16,500,000 invested in manufactures, 100 mills, 744,048 spindles and 18,261 looms; 11,660 females are employed and 7,625 males, while 3,444,500 yards of cotton goods are produced per week, with 112,650 yards of woolen goods, 40,000 yards of carpeting, 6,250 shawls and 20,300 dozens of hoisery, 1,000,000 pounds of cotton and 180,500 pounds of wool being consumed.

THE Moffet bell-punch has been an utter failure in Louisiana. The Legislature passed a law for its introduction a year ago, but it has been so stubbornly and actively resisted as to be rendered practically inoperative, and now it is going to be abolished without any opposition.

SITTING BULL.

A Hand-to-Hand Encounter With the Old Sinner.

(Chicago Times Interview with Frank Girard, the Famous Scout.)

The reporter asked the plucky scout if he had ever come across Sitting Bull. "Yes," was the reply. "I once had a hand-to-hand encounter with him. In the spring of 1864, a body of Sioux camped on the opposite side of the river, within a mile and a half of the fort. Sitting Bull and a party of twelve came on a visit to the Berthold Indians, who were still in their winter quarters. They afterward came to the fort, and I told Sitting Bull that I could only allow himself and a few of the principal men of the tribe to come inside and trade. He knew that regulation was customary when we were a little weak, and he made no objection. I further told him to go into the store and trade at our regular prices, and when he was through I would satisfy him by giving him anything that he wanted, but I could not permit him to fix the price. He went into the store and got some Iroquois shells, which are largely used by the savages for purposes of ornamentation. He offered five buffalo robes for them, but the price was ten, and the store man would not accept his offer. Sitting Bull came into my office and said he would not give more than five robes for the shells. I told him he could not have them for the price, and I took the shells away from him. I walked toward a bureau to put the articles away. Knowing the treacherous nature of the Sioux, I watched him over my shoulder. He had his arms crossed on the stock of a double-barreled gun, the muzzles of which were resting on the floor. As I stepped away from him, Sitting Bull raised the gun and was bringing it to bear upon me, when I dropped the shells, seized and threw up the barrels of the gun, and knocked the caps off with my thumb. While I was doing this the second chief of the Rees, who was in the office, pulled out his revolver and covered Sitting Bull, asking me in Indian, "What do you say?" I thought a second or two and the friendly chief repeated his question, but I answered, No."

The newspaper man suggested that Mr. Girard had missed a glorious opportunity of ridding the United States army of one of its most dangerous enemies.

"Well," said the scout, smiling, "we don't always know how things will turn out. I had considered the situation, and thought if Sitting Bull was killed inside the fort there were sufficient Indians in his camp to have smoked us out. He left shortly after this little episode, looking anything but pleased, and he sent me word by Bloody Knife that he had an arrow in his quiver which he would never use until he met me again. I returned the compliment by sending him word that I had a rifle which always spoke the truth when it spoke, and that when I saw him he would hear of it. This challenge remained in force for two years, when Sitting Bull was desirous of visiting the Berthold Indians. He sent two runners with a pipe of peace and asked me to smoke and terminate the feud. With this pipe he sent two fine American horses, as a sort of inducement for us to smoke. At the solicitation of the chiefs of the Berthold Indians I smoked the pipe, and gave the horses to the head chiefs at the fort. I sent word to Sitting Bull that as he came so would I receive him; if empty-handed, so would I be, but if he had a bow and arrows, I would have my pistol. From that day to this I have never had the pleasure of meeting Sitting Bull. I understand that he came to the village at dark and always returned to his camp before daylight."

The Statistics of Tobacco.

The statistics of the total and individual consumption of tobacco in the leading countries of the world furnish interesting and suggestive figures. Some of the totals are enormous. For instance, in Austria the consumption in 1876 was 31,614 tons; in France, during the same year, it was 31,435 tons, and 32,120 in 1877; in Italy, in 1876, it was 17,200 tons, and in Germany the estimated consumption was 80,000 tons. It is curious to observe how the consumption varies from one month to another. Thus, taking the observation from two French and Italian factories, we find that in these countries it increases in January, the cold weather; decreases in March, with the beginning of spring; rises again; but during the heats of July falls to a minimum, to rise gradually to a maximum during the cold weather of December.

The following table shows the approximate average consumption for several different countries per head and per annum:

Austria	3.25	Germany	4.00
Hungary	1.91	England	1.32
France	1.96	Russia	1.32
Italy	1.55	United States	3.52

How much money per head of the population is spent by their inhabitants is approximately deducible from the amount realized by tobacco taxation in some of the countries:

Austria-Hungary	$1.14	England	$1.12
France	1.68	United States	1.08
Italy	1.04

From these figures it is apparent that the consumption of the stimulating weed is increasing rapidly.

An Awful Pun-ishment.

"Ten days or $10," said the Judge, and the prisoner, a sullen-looking fellow, chose the latter alternative, paid the fine and was discharged. He walked moodily out of the court-room, but when he reached the door turned and showered a wholesale tirade of profane abuse upon the magistrate. Then he ran into the corridor, but before he could reach the street the officers gave chase, he was soon recaptured and stood again at the bar.

"Ten dollars more," said the court. The money was paid. "If you had used more chaste and refined language," the Judge continued, waving the fellow away, "you would not have been chased and refined."

The prisoner fell down—dead! Dead! My Lords and ladies! Dead! Right reverends and wrong reverends of every order! Dead! Men and women born with heavenly compassion in your breast—and hundreds are dying thus around us every day from the effects of similar atrocious puns.—Puck.

An Honorable Spy.

In his letter, resigning the position of Government Director of the Union Pacific railroad, Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., states very clearly and forcibly the difficulties which surround that position. It is impossible, he says, for any one to discharge satisfactorily the duties of a Government Director under the present law. These duties involve a thorough knowledge of the whole subject of railroad construction and management, the closest and most painstaking attention to detail in the annual inspections of the property in which the Government is so largely interested, and a constant humiliation of the official in the fact that he is at all times the guest of the corporation he is expected to supervise. Mr. Adams says on this point:

"To a person in any way sensitive it is far from pleasant to be the guest of a corporation; to eat and sleep and live at its expense; to accept every possible attention and hospitality from its officers, and meanwhile to keep careful note of every point open to criticism, and, when the time comes, to speak openly and truthfully, no matter how much what is said may hurt. Neither is it agreeable to do a public duty faithfully and at the same time to accept the money of one who suffers from the performance of the duty even though that one be a corporation. Yet the Government Director who does his duty must, under the law as it now stands, either do this or go wholly unpaid. As long as this system continues, it is practically inevitable that services of a purely formal character can only be looked for. The active Government Director is at best but an honorable spy."

Strength of the Regular Army.

The Secretary of War has sent to the House Committee on Military Affairs, by request, a statement showing the actual strength of the regular army at a stated period in each year from the beginning of the Government to the present time, from which it appears that the strength of the army, both officers and men, from 1788 to 1794 was about 3,500. From that time to 1812 it varied from 2,600 to 6,600, but in 1813 it increased to 19,000, in consequence of the war with Great Britain, and in the next year to 38,186. For 1815 it was 33,424. For 1816 it fell to 10,000, and in the three years following to 8,550. From 1820 to 1838 it averaged about 6,500. For 1839 it was increased to nearly 10,000, and in subsequent years to 1846 it varied from 8,500 to 11,000. In 1847 it increased to 21,686, falling in the following years until 1854 to an average of about 10,500. For 1855 it was 15,752, and from that year to 1861 the average was 16,000. From 1862 to 1864 the usual annual returns of the army were suspended. For 1865 the strength of the army was 22,310; in 1866, 56,815; in 1868, 51,000; in 1869, 33,744; in 1870, 37,075, and from this period to 1878 it has varied between 26,000 and 20,000. For 1877 it was 24,000, and in 1878, 25,818.

A Warning to Cat-Keepers.

Yesterday morning, as two ladies were preparing their toilet, an accident of perhaps a serious nature occurred. The elder lady was sitting with a large cat at her feet. Suddenly, without warning, the animal seized one of the legs of the lady, and tore the flesh with its teeth and claws. Before the younger lady, her daughter, could come to her assistance, the wounds inflicted by the cat were many and painful. The young lady took hold of the little enraged beast and pulled it quickly away. The cat, infuriated to a tigerish anger, then sprung at her, its tail swollen as large as a human arm, and scratched her, besides badly tearing her dress. A neighboring gentleman was appealed to for help, and, by the aid of the young lady's tight grip on the cat's neck, and a dumb-bell in the hands of the gentleman, the furious creature was killed. A physician was called to dress the wounds of the elder lady, who is afflicted with erysipelas in the lacerated limb, and whose safety is a matter of anxiety.—Wilmington (N. C.) Sun.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE SOUTH.

A Convention of Northern Settlers Without Reference to Politics in North Carolina.

[Charlotte (N. C.) Cor. New York World.]

There met in this city to-day a convention which, from the singularity of its character and from the results expected to flow from it, has attracted a great deal of attention throughout the Southern States, more especially in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. The convention is composed of Northern gentlemen who have settled in the South since the war. There are living in this county, engaged in farming, mining and mercantile pursuits, about fifty citizens of this description, among whom is Mr. Dumont, a native of Massachusetts, an ex-Federal soldier, and an officer of the United States signal service. He has prospered in business, established himself in the confidence of the people, and learned to like them. In view of the frequent and gross misrepresentations of the South on the part of Republican politicians and newspapers, it occurred to him and the other Northern settlers in this section that a convention, composed of the class of citizens indicated, called together without distinction of party, religion, or local lines, might put forth an utterance which would go far toward convincing the Northern people of the true situation of affairs in this section of the country. Accordingly, about a month ago, Mr. Dumont, as the prime mover in the matter, put forth a circular letter, of which the following is a copy, directing copies of it to every Northern man in the South of whom he could learn:

> MY DEAR SIR: I have consulted with a number of gentlemen who have removed from New York, New Hampshire and other Northern States and settled in this State, South Carolina and Georgia since the war, many of them ex-Union soldiers. I myself am from Springfield, Mass. The conclusion we have arrived at is that Northern men who have settled in the South have in their hands the solution of the question as to whether any considerable number of Northern men and active Northern capital can be diverted to the South. Many of the Northern papers are giving wrong notions as to how Northern people are received. You know many of our friends will not put much faith in what Southern men or papers say on this head. We who have consulted upon this matter deem it wise to hold a convention of Northern men only who have settled South since the war—good, fair, representative men. Your name has been given as such an one. It is desired in the convention to prepare a statement for publication in Northern papers, setting forth the soil, climate, prices, ease of making a living and social treatment of the individual Northern man. It is not desired to cover any question of politics or extreme views of any kind. In your letter, whether of acceptance or declination, please state if you were in the Federal army, company and regiment; where you moved from to your present residence, and how long you have resided at your present whereabouts.

As a matter of course, comparatively few people could be reached directly by this circular; therefore, 800 copies of it were sent out; but the press took hold of it and has been pursuing it with a great deal of energy. This has been especially true of this State, Virginia, South Carolina and Georgia, and by this means the movement has been not only thoroughly advertised in the States named, but there has been built up in its behalf a strong sentiment among the people.

It is not to be denied that in the beginning failure stared the project in the face. It is no small matter for a lot of men to quit their business and gather from long distances in convention, the results of which, however fruitful it might be of results, could not redound to any advantage to them in any direct manner, and which offered but little indirectly. But somehow or other the movement struck a popular chord. It was less than a week from the time the call was issued that responses began to pour in. Some of these letters were from Democrats and some from Republicans; some from those who were Federal soldiers and some from those wh were not; but the letters came from the Northern settlers until every pigeonhole in Mr. Dumont's office was full of them.

With four exceptions (and I have examined all the letters) they are of the same general tenor. In more than a hundred of these letters the writers pledge attendance at this convention, and all of them, with the four exceptions noted, declare the entire satisfaction of the writers with their Southern homes; declare that they find the soil more fertile than they had expected, the climate delightful, and their social relations altogether agreeable. They cordially indorse the convention; hope the attendance may be large, and that, through its instrumentality, others may be induced to follow their example and settle in the South. Of the four writers who dissent from the majority, one is Joseph C. Abbott, of New Hanover county, N. C., a leading Republican politician of the State after the war, and for one term United States Senator; another is A. W. Shaffer, of Raleigh, United States Register in Bankruptcy, a ward politician, and a well-known stirrer-up of strife. It may be here noted that the leading Republican newspaper of the State has attacked the convention and its promoters, and this is the full extent of the opposition which the movement has encountered.

Between 75 and 100 delegates were present from Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Mr. Dumont was chosen President, and a Vice President was chosen from each of the other four States.

Messrs. Cushing, of North Carolina, and Hoyt, of South Carolina, spoke particularly of the kindness with which they had been treated in their respective homes, and when their speeches were concluded the Committee on Resolutions, appointed in the early stages of the proceedings, submitted its report. It is long, and consists of thirty-one resolutions, mainly upon the prejudice existing in the North against the South. The report says "that in the portions of the South in which we reside the right of any man, from no matter where, to express publicly as well as privately his opinion upon any subject and of every nature is nowhere and in no manner restrained; that all laws are well administered and as truly enforced against the wrong-doer as in any part of any State of the Union."

Much is also said about the kindly, social character of the Southern people, and then the committee touched upon the virtues of the soil, the climate, the forests and the mines, and the facilities for manufacturing. The natives are criticized for their thriftless methods of agriculture, their bad roads and their inattention to fruit, grass-growing and sheep husbandry.

The twenty-ninth resolution declares that "We find that no man is ostracized for his opinion or on account of the land of his birth; but, as elsewhere, for his bad acts and dishonest failures to meet his trusts and obligations," and the thirty-first and last of the findings is as follows:

"We find that to the people of the other sections of the United States the South is an unknown land so far as relates to knowledge of its soil, its climate, its healthfulness, and its people. That it is labeled for partisan ends, and we present this document, in all conscience and honor, to give honest knowledge and to correct wrong reports."

These resolutions were passed seriatim and then as a whole. There was not a dissenting voice, and the announcement of the result was hailed with applause.

At the night session, which was held principally for speaking, ex-Federals and Confederates mingled together like their respective flags on the walls of the Opera House, and the best of feeling prevailed. Speeches were made by a number of delegates and prominent citizens, and the convention adjourned at a late hour of the night.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, Jan. 24.—SENATE.—Senator Olds introduced a resolution, which passed, for the appointment of a committee of five to investigate the Soldiers' Home and all benevolent institutions, with a view to determining whether any trustee or officer has received or charged a greater amount for his services than he is entitled to receive under the law.

HOUSE.—Mr. Gordon introduced the following bill into the Legislature: It provides that, in trials where the unsoundness of mind of defendant is set up as a defense, and testimony is introduced to show that he was insane at the time of committing the crime, and the defendant is acquitted, that the jury shall specifically find in the verdict whether the defendant was so insane at the time, and whether he is insane at the time of trial, and whether they acquit defendant because of such insanity. The court shall have power to order the defendant into strict custody in the place provided by law until the person shall have recovered from such insanity. Provided, that in case it is shown that insanity is constitutional or hereditary, or that the crime was committed through insane impulse, then the defendant shall be confined during his natural life....The Legislature is blocked just now by a great number of bills that have accumulated on the files. Several days will be spent in recording bills a second time and referring them, in order to get the committees to work.

SATURDAY, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—A message from the Governor announced the appointment of J. T. Scott, of Vigo, and Howard Briggs, of Sullivan, as Trustees of the Normal School, and asked that they be confirmed....The State House Commissioners invited the Senate to inspect the plans and samples of stone for the new State House....Senators Olds, Woolen, Treat, Foster and Kramer were appointed a committee to investigate the benevolent and reformatory institutions....The resolution asking for modification of the patent laws was adopted....About a dozen unimportant bills were introduced, when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Mr. Humphreys' Apportionment bill was ordered printed, and he intimated that it was the one the committee would recommend....The remainder of the session was taken up with the second reading of bills, and at noon the House adjourned until Monday afternoon.

MONDAY, Jan. 27.—SENATE.—The special committee to whom was referred the subject reported against selling University square in Indianapolis for the benefit of the State University. ....Bills were introduced: To apportion the State; fixing the amount of homestead; prescribing the manner in which certain lands are to be taxed; providing for the paying of special Judges; fixing salaries of Judges; fixing salary of Superintendent of Public Instruction at $1,000....The nominations of Murray Briggs and John T. Scott as Trustees, and Timothy Nicholson as Trustee of the State University, were confirmed....A number of bills were read a second time, and the reports of committees on them acted upon.

HOUSE.—Mr. Willard, of Floyd, Chairman of the Committee on Fees and Salaries, introduced a bill fixing the fees of county officers and grading them on the basis of county population....Bills were introduced: Defining the crime of libel and rendering a person convicted of it infamous; requiring each Assessor to stamp notes assessed for taxation, and rendering such stamped notes uncollectable if taxes have not been paid on them; abolishing the Marion Criminal Court, and a number of others, the subjects of which are covered by bills already introduced.

TUESDAY, Jan. 28.—SENATE.—Mr. Menzies offered a resolution instructing the Education Committee to report a bill revising the school laws, prohibiting appropriations for any other purpose than common schools, the frequent changes in text-books, the erection of costly school-houses and filling them with expensive furniture, and repealing all laws making appropriations from the State treasury to the colleges and universities of the State....Mr. Sarnighausen introduced a resolution instructing the Superintendent of Public Instruction to report to what extent the local school levies can be reduced without injury to the schools of the State. Both resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education....A number of bills were introduced, the most important of which were: Making it unlawful to lease property for purposes of prostitution; for the appointment of a legislative commission of five attorneys, in order to facilitate legislation; regulating the practice of medicine; defining vagrancy, and to create a bureau of labor statistics....A resolution asking Congress to tax greenbacks was referred to the Finance Committee.

HOUSE.—The whole morning session was taken up in disposing of committee reports....The Legislative Apportionment bill was made the special order for Friday....A resolution was adopted instructing the Election Committee to inquire into the expediency of permitting women to vote....The Warden of the State Prison South filed an itemized statement of accounts of the prison for 1877....The Superintendent of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum reported the names, pay, etc., of all the employes....A number of unimportant bills were introduced.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 29.—SENATE.—The Auditor of State communicated to the Senate the fact that, during the past four years, the State University had drawn from the State treasury $121,738; the State Normal, at Terre Haute, $98,291.85; and Purdue University, at Lafayette, $33,235.42....The superintendents of benevolent institutions sent a statement that the incidental expenses of the Insane Asylum for two years amounted to $14,010.01, and the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, $12,759.90....The bill establishing Probate Courts was indefinitely postponed....The bill abolishing the offices of Town Assessor and Treasurer, and providing for the election of a Town Marshal was recommitted.

HOUSE.—The whole session was taken up in acting on committee reports....The Compulsory Education bill was indefinitely postponed. ....The bill prohibiting voting further aid to railroads was ordered engrossed....Two legalizing bills were passed....Neither house accomplished much, the execution in the jail-yard close by so distracting them that they adjourned.

THURSDAY, Jan. 30.—SENATE.—Bills were passed: Authorizing guardians to settle estates of deceased wards; providing for working of prisoners in jails, on public highways or improvements; authorizing Justices to require additional replevin bail where insufficient bail has been taken; repealing the act for the organization of water-works companies; for the punishment of persons in possession of stolen property stolen outside the State; for the loan of Congressional, township and school funds; amending the code....The bill to appoint inspectors of election from the party casting the largest vote failed to pass.... Bills were introduced: To abolish the office of State Geologist; preventing officials from using railroad passes; regulating the working of coal mines; to authorize the sale of the property of incorporated companies on execution....The remainder of the session was taken up in discussing the interest bill in committee of the whole. The first section was so amended that the rate of interest shall be no more than 6 per cent. The committee then arose and were granted leave to sit again to-morrow.

HOUSE.—The whole day was taken up in discussing the first proposed amendment to the constitution, requiring a residence of sixty days in the township and thirty in the ward or precinct as a qualification to vote, and also providing that a voter shall be registered. It was finally adopted by a vote of 60 to 34, the Republicans voting solidly for the amendment, and being aided by a number of Democrats and Nationals....The bill to limit the fees of attorneys at law was indefinitely postponed.

BURGLARS IN A DEATH-CHAMBER.

Frightful Experience of a Dying Man.

[From the Philadelphia Record.]

At the residence of Mrs. Sweeny, on Christian street, lies a young man upon whose wan face death has already fixed his seal. For weeks the summons of the grim specter has been hourly looked for. The disease which has wasted his substance, and had confined him to a consumptive's bed, rendered it necessary that he should be watched constantly, so that he might not smother in one of the frequent spasms of coughing to which he was subject. Day and night the folks had taken their turns in watching by his bedside and performing such duties as his aggravated case demanded.

Between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning he was regularly taken with a most violent fit of coughing, which racked his frame and rendered him completely exhausted for hours after. On Wednesday night Mrs. Sweeny took her seat by his bedside, and waited until he had sunk into a sleep. Being already worn out with her day's labors, for the lady carries on the business of an undertaker, the watcher stole to an adjoining room and threw herself on a bed to snatch a few moments' rest before her patient was taken with his midnight attack. It was during her absence from his side that the sick man saw the burly forms of two men on the shed outside the window of his apartment, on the second story rear, acting in such a manner as to satisfy him that they were upon an errand of robbery.

Long sickness had rendered him completely helpless, and his voice could not be raised above a whisper, and by these circumstances he was compelled to lie and wait the issue of events. Presently he saw the window raised, and the two men stealthily entered his room. Then they crept to his bedside, and one of the villains, to silence him, dealt a heavy blow upon his forehead. The man was helpless. The wretches bound his feet with cords, and shackled his bony arms with ropes that cut deep into his bloodless skin and filled his body with pains. But still their awful work was but half finished. Fearing that he might cry out they gagged his mouth and covered his head with a towel in such a manner as to almost stifle his already feeble respiration. Seizing one of the pillows, the thieves ripped open the ticking and emptied the feathers upon the floor. Having thus secured themselves a sack they searched through the house and collected a large piece of satin, a roll of black cashmere, and a piece of silk used by Mrs. Sweeny for coffin mournings. These articles they placed in the pillow-case, and then proceeded to make their escape.

In the meantime the invalid had been making feeble efforts to release his head from the suffocating towel. He had partly succeeded in his object, and in twisting his body in a last effort he fell out of bed upon the floor with a heavy thud. The noise occasioned by his fall alarmed the thieves, who dropped their bag and sprung through the window and escaped. The disturbance also aroused Mrs. Sweeny from her sleep, and she rushed into the apartment to find the sick man stretched upon the floor, speechless and helpless, half enveloped in his bed clothing, amid the scattered feathers and the plunder of the thieves.

A Fable for "the Cultured."

There was once a good little boy wh was sent by his mother to the bakery on a Sunday morning for the weekly pot of beans. The sidewalk was slippery, the bean-pot was slippery, and, as the good little boy wore nothing but slippers on his feet, it is not at all surprising that he fell down, broke the bean-pot, and anointed the sidewalk with his mother's breakfast. While he was weeping over his misfortune, a bad little boy, whose mother had also sent him to the bakery for her weekly pot of beans, coming along, laughed and mocked exceedingly at the poor boy's sorrow. Now, while he was yet thus mocking and laughing, a man running for a doctor knocked the bean-pot from the bad little boy's hands, breaking it into pieces and spreading its savory contents over the sidewalk, whereupon his laughter was changed to weeping, and he lifted up his voice and mourned vociferously. Moral: Never pork fun at the unfortunate, for you never know how soon you may bean trouble yourself.—Boston Post.

THE Liberian ship Azor has returned to Charleston and will probably take another cargo of darkies to Africa.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

THE following remedy is recommended for frost bites: Extract the frost by the application of ice water till the frozen part is pliable, avoiding all artificial heat; then apply a salve made of equal parts of hog's lard and gunpowder rubbed together until it forms a paste, and very soon the frozen parts will be well.

DECAY OF TEETH.—In caring for the teeth, it is important to bear in mind that weak acids, or acids greatly diluted with water, have greater dissolving power than acids in full strength. Such an acid is contained in the sour eructations from the stomach, in many of the medicines administered, and in the particles of food which, moistened with saliva, have been left to ferment between the teeth. An article in the British Medical Journal takes the ground that the decay of teeth results mainly from this latter cause. It further says that the brush, as ordinarily used, does not remove the particles of matter that adhere to the teeth. It should be moved up and down, as well as horizontally. The mouth should also be rinsed after each meal, or, at any rate, before retiring for the night. The writer also says that it would be well, in rinsing the mouth, to use a solution made by dissolving a teaspoonful of cooking-soda and a table spoonful of cologne in a quart of water—the cologne, however, being simply to help the taste. This wash should always be used immediately after taking any acid medicine.

DIPHTHERIA.—This fearful disease belongs to the malarial group, and its prevention can be secured through the faithful observance of hygienic laws in our habits and relations. Its early indications are similar to those of an attack of scarlatina, with which it is confounded by many physicians, because it is a frequent accompaniment of that disorder, and consists mainly in lassitude, weakness, dull aches and pains in different parts of the body, with chilliness. The diphtheric character is exhibited generally by a feeling of uneasiness in the throat, and of stiffness in the back of the neck; the throat in such cases will be found to be inflamed and somewhat swollen. A few hours later the formation of grayish-white patches may be observed, which rapidly spread and thicken if the disease be not checked. As a high temperature and quick pulse accompany the attack, the free application of water to the trunk is important in the treatment to reduce the fever and bring the pulse to its normal rate. The membraneous formation is poisonous and gangrenous, and, when extensive, a gargle of carbolic acid or chlorine water may be necessary to destroy it. We would not advise the application of caustic, except in very severe cases. The solutions mentioned are generally sufficient. Nutritious food (mainly farinaceous) should be carefully administered to the patient. Milk is excellent, being both nourishing and sedative. The bowels will be assisted in their functions by giving fresh, ripe, or cooked fruit.

CARE OF THE EYES.—When any positive impairment of the vision is discovered, recourse should be had to a good physician—one who gives special attention to eye diseases is preferable. Ordinary inflammation may be treated successfully by the application of water, tepid or warm. A light bandage made of soft linen and saturated with water should be laid over the eyes and occasionally freshened. Severe inflammation should have the care of a physician. Sometimes a particle of dust gets into an eye, and, becoming imbedded in the membrane, occasions much pain. A steady hand with a pointed instrument can usually remove the irritating substance. But sometimes the particle is not readily found, and the pain continues—to soothe which a simple preparation like this is effective: Take a spoon or cup, heat it, and pour in a few drops of laudanum. The alcohol being thus evaporated, the laudanum or opium will soon become dense and jelly-like. A few drops of water added will dissolve this gummy material, and the liquid thus formed may be applied by the finger to the "inside of the eye," as they say, and the case which will follow will be very satisfactory. Not an uncommon accident is a fragment of lime in the eye, and the activity of this powerful alkali requires all that is to be done to be done at once. Do not waste time by attempting to pick it out, but neutralize the alkali by a few drops of vinegar or of lemon-juice diluted in a little water.

A Light-House Keeper's Perils.

The Secretary of the Treasury has dismissed a certain light-house keeper for forsaking his post during one of the recent severe storms. The ice threatened to carry away the light-house, and the keeper, becoming frightened, deserted, leaving the light unlighted for two nights, and then returned to his station. The Light-House Board considers it the duty of every light-house keeper to stand by his light as long as the light-house stands; and that for him to desert it when in danger is as cowardly as for a soldier to leave his guns on the advance of an enemy. His failure to keep the light burning, especially in time of danger, may cause the wreck of vessels looking for it, and may result in the loss of many lives and of much property. On the other hand, the board takes good care of those keepers who prove themselves faithful. In the year 1875 a keeper of a light off the coast of New England kept his post until the light-house went down and then swam ashore. The board thereupon recommended that Congress make an appropriation to reimburse him for all loss, and it was careful to see to it that no item was omitted.

There are many dramatic incidents, tragic and humorous, arising in the light-house service. Once in a while a light-house goes down in a night with a whole family, and every person and thing is lost. Not a trace is left. The elements make a clean sweep. One day last year a keeper slipped while cleaning his lamp. In his fall he displaced a great lens, which, falling upon him, killed him. From an economical point of view the loss of the man, as compared with the loss of the lens, was slight, for the keeper could be replaced from hundreds of eager applicants, but to replace the lens involved an importation from France and a large outlay.—Washington letter.

BLACK DEATH.

The Terrible Plague in Russia.

[From the Chicago Times.]

It is probable that the Czar has an affliction on his hands that may occasion more trouble than the Turkish war or the insubordination of the students in the universities. For several days past the cable has brought reports of ravages of the plague, in the district of Astrakhan, which lies to the north of the Caspian sea. One dispatch states that "the people died like flies." Later reports represent that the terrible scourge is spreading, and that full 10 per cent. of the people in the newly-infected districts have died. In some places the dead lie unburied in the streets because no person dares touch them. The disease was at first mistaken for typhus, but is now recognized as the real Oriental plague, or "black death," which, in early times, carried destruction to almost every country in Europe. The infected districts are now surrounded by troops; communication with Moscow is stopped, and physicians and nurses have been sent to the stricken regions.

The most ghastly pages of history are those which contain accounts of the ravages of the plague in Europe during the fourteenth and seventeenth centuries. In the year 1348 the plague broke out in Russia not far from where it now exists. It was carried to Constantinople, whence it spread all over Turkey. From Turkey it extended into Italy, and thence to France, Germany, the Low Countries and England. From England it was conveyed to Sweden, whence it passed over the Baltic sea to Russia. It made the circuit of Europe, from Southern to Northern Russia, in the space of three years. It is stated that London lost 100,000 inhabitants during this visit of the plague, while fifteen cities on the continent lost 300,000. In Italy half the population were swept away, and it was estimated that 25,000,000 people in Europe perished by the scourge. The origin of the disease was traced to China, where the chronicles of the empire state that more than 13,000,000 died from its effects. All accounts of this terrible visitation of death are colored by the superstitions prevalent at the time. Many attribute it to the Jews, who were accused of poisoning the wells so that the water bred pestilence. In some places all the Jews were most cruelly massacred. Many of these unfortunate persons, seeing the fate to which they were doomed, took their own lives. Companies of religious zealots, known as "flagellants," went from one place to another, torturing their bodies, thinking in that way to expiate the sins of the people. Sometimes these companies numbered thousands, and they did much to help spread the fatal disease. The men and women who composed them went about nearly naked, but all wore a red cross on the breast. Many people gave all their treasures to the church, the monks shutting the gates of their inclosures so as not to come in contact with the givers, who threw their coins and jewels over the walls.

All the rivers and streams were polluted, as they were the ordinary sepulchres of the dead. Many sought refuge from the disease in caves and woods remote from settlements, and perished from hunger. Others embarked on the sea in boats. These persons dying with the scourge, the vessels were picked up by sailors, who themselves became victims of the same fate that had carried off the former occupants. Vessels left to their own guidance were blown on the shores of remote countries, and in a week the terrible disease would commence spreading among a new people. Putrid corpses were carried down the rivers, often accumulating in large masses and giving off a horrible stench that infected the air for miles. Many persons were delirious when first attacked, and ran from one house to another, tearing out the hair and scratching the faces of all they met. Fear drove people from villages that were stricken to those that were healthy, and thus helped to spread the contagion.

The plague which prevailed in London and elsewhere in Europe during 1663 and the two succeeding years was productive of fewer deaths than that of the fourteenth century, but the accounts of it are more reliable. This was the last plague that was general. In 1720 half the inhabitants of Marseilles were carried off by a disease which was presumed to be brought from the Levant. As recently as 1790 the plague prevailed to a considerable extent in the northern portion of Turkey, and in parts of Poland and Russia. The symptoms of this terrible pestilence vary in different countries, with different races and at different seasons of the year. It usually develops itself within eight days from the time the person is exposed. The afflicted person has a high fever, accompanied with a delirious state of the nervous system. These are followed by a putrid inflammation of the lungs, expectorations of blood, and fetid breath. Boils appear on the limbs, and black spots extend over the face and body. Death ordinarily occurs within three days after these symptoms appear.

The Fisheries.

In the executive session of the Senate Mr. Edmunds delivered an elaborate speech in advocacy of the resolution submitted by him which provides for terminating so much of the treaty of Washington as relates to the fisheries by giving the notice required by its provisions. The resolution was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. According to present appearances, it will be adopted by the Senate without opposition, and President Hayes will promptly thereafter give the required notice to the Government of Great Britain.—Washington telegram.

Theaters in Europe.

The Continental Gazette, published in Paris, says: "There are 1,542 theaters in Europe, divided as follows among the different countries: Italy, 348; France, 337; Spain, 168; England, 150; Austria, 152; Germany, 191; Russia, 44; Belgium, 34; Holland, 23; Switzerland, 20; Sweden, 10; Norway, 8; Portugal, 16; Denmark, 10; Greece, 4; Turkey, 4; Roumania, 9; Servia, 1; Egypt, 3." This list is not absolutely correct.

RECENT official reports show that for the year 1877 the deposits in postal-savings banks in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland amounted to £28,740,575, and in Trustees' savings banks, £44,238,686, the increase in the former since 1871 being £11,715,753, and in the latter, £5,419,023.

IT is said that the real estate on Manhattan island has been so taken up that there are not over 400 building lots for sale above the lower end of Central Park. Land is being held very firmly in that part of the town. Even if real estate has gone down, the taxable value of New York city has gone up in spite of it. In 1872 the assessment was $797,125,115, but in 1878 it was $900,855,700.

NINE-TENTHS of the thousand million dollars which France borrowed of English bankers in order to pay Germany are now held in the shape of national bonds by Frenchmen at home. As fast as the foreigners would sell, the bonds were bought up on the Paris market, and thus, though France still owes that vast sum, she owes it in bulk only to her own people.

THE highest salary ever in Boston was that of J. Wiley Edmonds, who, at the time of his death, was receiving $50,000 per annum as Treasurer of the Pacific mills. The highest salary paid to a bank President in Boston at present is $10,000, the highest to a cashier is $3,500. The range of salaries of dry-goods salesmen is from $5,000 to $500 a year. In the wholesale boot and shoe trade, the highest salary is not over $4,000.

AMONG the deaths recorded in New York last year 15 were of persons whose ages at the time of their death were given as over 100 years. All except 3 of these were natives of Ireland. Of the remainder 2 were born in New York and 1 in Maryland. The best authorities in vital statistics, however, are slow to believe the stories of alleged centenarians. Eleven men and women, reported as of 100 years and over, died in Philadelphia during 1878, and 686 who had attained the age of 80 and over.

THERE were 25,729 births in New York in 1878, and 2,292 infants were born dead. Only one mother gave birth to triplets, while 206 mothers gave birth to twins. The following table gives the number of mothers of families of remarkable size:

Sixth child	1,774	Twelfth child	87
Seventh child	1,117	Thirteenth child	52
Eighth child	881	Fourteenth child	29
Ninth child	541	Fifteenth child	16
Tenth child	365	Sixteenth child	4
Eleventh child	190	Seventeenth child	1

Of the mothers who bore children in New York last year 442 were over 50 years of age.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 6, 1879

THEODORE REED, - - Editor.

A bill will be introduced in the legislature providing for the permanent organization of the state militia to be known as the Indiana Legion, and the bill which has been written up provides for [illegible], two companies, the maximum 100 men and the minimum 41 to a company, which are to be massed into brigades, regiments, and battalions. Counties calling for the services of the militia shall pay all expenses, including per diem, transportation, &c. Each man is to earn his uniform which is to be of the regular army fatigue pattern the State allowing each member of a company fifty cents for every attendance on drill, twenty drills annually being provided for, members to be fined twenty-five cents for each non-attendance. A State Inspector, to receive the pay of a captain in the regular army, is also provided for. The officers of companies and regiments are to be efficient and an Examining Board appointed by the Governor, on whose recommendation commissions shall be issued. Enlisted men will receive $1.50 when called out by the Governor, and officers on duty regular army pay. A general encampment shall be held once a year, at the discretion of the Commander-in-Chief. As an inducement for good men to enroll themselves it provides that the militia shall be exempt from jury duty and poll tax. An enlistment of five years is required. It also arranges that immediately after the passage of the bill, the Governor shall detail three officers of the Indiana Legion to prepare a code of regulations approximated to the code of the United States Army. County Commissioners are to provide armories for companies organized in their respective counties, the amount to be paid being regulated by the population. Counties under 20,000 population, $120; between 20,000 and 30,000, $300 over 30,000 $300. The State inspector and Adjutant-General are to be the only officers on duty in time of peace. The features of the bill contemplate more expense than the legislature will feel justified in authorizing, though there ought to be some change in the present law to encourage organization for the protection of the public in case of emergency.

The following dead shot from the South Bend Herald, strikes us as being the most sensible article that we have noticed on the subject of the re-nomination of Tilden for president. The Herald says "there is one thing in favor of making Tilden again the democratic candidate for president, which has no little weight with certain democratic editors, and that is the amount of money he would spend in furnishing editorial matter already written and printed for the use of the democratic press. During the last canvass Tilden kept a full corps of editors and printers at work in New York in furnishing the country press in all the states with ready-made editorials. To us poor devils who lacked either brains or time, Tilden's editorial bureau was a God-send. We shall stick to Hendricks as long as there is a button on his shirt, as our candidate for president, but if the party gives us Tilden, the Herald will derive great consolation in the expectation of being relieved from the heavy burden of editorial labors through the canvass by the Tilden editorial bureau. If Tilden is nominated, we expect another barrel of money rolled out, the head knocked in, the Chicago Times bought up and all the brains of our great cities put to work to elect him, and then have him counted out."

Bro. Murray might have added several other papers—Indiana papers too, to the list headed by the Chicago Times, and these same papers still remember the sweetness of Sammy's sugar teat, and long for more. We have no patience with Indiana newspapers that continually harp about being in favor of the nomination of Hon. T. A. Hendricks for president, but in order to be on what they imagine will be the popular and paying side, assume the role of prophets, pretending to be qualified to fortell coming events. We are inclined to the opinion that about a thimbleful of Hendricks enthusiasm would exhaust the supply in the majority of cases where Tilden's cloven foot appears, especially when an old personal grudge is allowed to control an editors opinion.

The probabilities are that DeKalb and Noble counties will constitute our new Senatorial district. It will be democratic. The Indianapolis Sentinel's report of the democratic caucus gives DeKalb one representative. Allen and DeKalb one, and Elkhart, Noble and DeKalb one; but there is a mistake somewhere, as the voting population of this county would not entitle it to that much representation. In either case the district would be democratic.

The Agricultural Society.

[Waterloo Press.]

An interesting meeting of the Board of Directors of the North-Eastern Indiana Agricultural Society, was held at the office of the society, in this place Tuesday afternoon. The attendance was quite full.

After considerable discussion, it was determined to hold the next Fair from the 6th to the 10th of October, both days inclusive. By commencing on Monday, and having entries close Tuesday noon, the committees will have one day more for work, enabling them to more thoroughly examine articles and animals brought in by exhibitors.

Messrs. McClellan, Lockhart and Barnes were appointed a committee to secure reduced railroad transportation for visitors, and also articles intended for exhibition.

The Executive committee was instructed to purchase, if possible, two acres of land adjoining the fair grounds on the west.

The Executive committee will, at an early date, revise the premium list for the coming fair. Friends of the enterprise, having any suggestions to make in regard to the list should hand them in at once.

Many other matters, of minor interest were discussed, and the Board adjourned, after a three hours session.

Blackwood's Magazine for January has been republished by the The Leonard Scott Publishing Co., 41 Barclay Street, N. Y.

The leading article, entitled "The Elector's Catechism," is a satirical squib upon the Liberal party, which will be amusing reading to those versed in English politics.

In "The Haven of Carmel" we find a description of the sea coast of Palestine, and speculations upon the possibility of developing the resources of the country under English administration.

"A Medium of Last Century" commences a little family narrative, in which an old negro witch or soothsayer is a conspicuous character. The scene is laid in Jamaica. The second part of "Contemporary Literature" introduces us to Journalists and Magazine writers, and takes the opportunity to give high praise to the leading Quarterlies.

Other articles are, a continuation of "John Caldigate," "The Novels of Alphonse Daudet," and "The Afghan War and its Authors." Price $4,00 per annum.

But what gave rise to the superstitious notion of the Ground-hog making its appearance on that day and in case the sun shines so that it can see its shadow, return to its burrow again, and remain for six weeks longer, I am unable to tell, but it is like all such notions, still believed by the superstitious. DR. C. McLANE'S

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. MCLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

—One of the greatest monopolies known to the traveling public of America, is the Pullman Palace Car Company. It has now in use in this country and Europe about 800 cars, at an average value of $14,000 each, which makes an aggregate value of $11,200,000, while the capital stock is only $6,000,000. The first Pullman car was built about twenty years ago, and was used on the Chicago and Alton Railroad.

—South Bend Herald.—"Mr. James Leach brought the largest load of wheat to this market, last week, ever hauled to South Bend by one span of horses. It lacked but ten pounds of measuring 135 bushels and weighed 8090 pounds—a little over four tons. It was brought to the mill on a pair of bob sleds. The man who has a span of draught horses that can beat this will just report to this office for a premium.

—We again urge the importance of the location of manufacturing establishments of all kinds in Auburn. Let no opportunity pass to encourage enterprise in that direction. We hope to see the time when Auburn will be known far and wide as a manufacturing town, and in order to accomplish that, it is only necessary that our enterprising citizens lend a helping hand in the start.

—Mr. Orrin Z. Hubble, the gentlemanly and scholarly editor of the Butler Record, surrendered his position in a well written valedictory last week. During the five months which Mr. H. has had charge of the editorial department of the Record, it has been a faithful, yet honorable advocate of the principles of the party it represents, for which it is now being rewarded by a liberal patronage from the representatives of its party at the county seat. May the Record prosper financially.

THE GALLOWS.

A Double Hanging at Indianapolis.

The execution by hanging of William E. Merrick and John Achey took place at Indianapolis at 12:20 o'clock on Wednesday of last week.

At 12:29 o'clock the physicians pronounced both men dead.

Achey claimed that his crime was not premeditated, and closed by saying; "The people want a hanging, and I am ready for it."

Merrick asserted his innocence to the last.

Both men displayed wonderful coolness, and stepped to their places on the trap without assistance and with no hesitation or tremor visible. The arrangements of the Sheriff were perfect, and carried out without the slightest deviation or accident.

The necks of both men were broken.

ACHEY'S CRIME.

The crime which John Achey committed was less fiendish than that of William Merrick. George Leggett a well-known gambler of Indianapolis, and a partner by the name of Brown, engaged in a gambling operation with Achey in which the latter was fleeced out of a large sum of money which had been left to him by his mother, who died a short time previously. The loss preyed upon Achey's mind, and he determined upon taking a terrible revenge. On the afternoon of July 16, 1878, he saw Leggett standing in a saloon on North Illinois street. Without uttering a word, he drew a revolver, and aiming at Leggett, fired twice in quick succession. One of the balls struck him below the breast bone, and caused his death in twenty minutes. He was tried and condemed to suffer death on the gallows. Great efforts were made to secure a reprieve, and up to the last moment his friends hoped for success.

MERRICK'S CRIME.

Sept. 22, 1878, two farmers accidentally discovered on the banks of Eagle Creek, two miles west of Indianapolis, a human hand between the interstices of a small log-heap. Upon removing the logs, the farmers were horrified in finding two partially decomposed bodies—one of a woman and the other of a new-born infant. The rustics fled and the police of Indianapolis were notified. For a long time, in spite of their utmost endeavors, the mystery remained unsolved. Finally it leaked out that the wife of William Merrick, who was quite well-known as the proprietor of a livery-stable, had been missing for some time. The clue was taken up, and Merrick was arrested. His early history was investigated, and it was found that he had, in his early youth, murdered his rival to the hand of a girl he then loved. The evidence of his guilt accumulated fast and at his trial the whole story of his damnable guilt was revealed.

A CARRIAGE RIDE.

On the day of her disappearance, Mrs Julia Merrick said to one of her neighbors: "My husband has been kind to-day, and has invited me to a carriage ride; do I look nice?" At early dusk they drove away the wife felling very happy. Later in the evening they stopped before a saloon on Indiana avenue, and Mr. Merrick called for a glass of wine for his wife. The saloon-keeper saw him pour into the glass out of a paper marked with a skull and cross-bones a white powder, mixing it with the wine. Merrick returned the empty glass, paid for a glass of whisky for himself, and drove off. They went into the country, and several teamsters whom they met observed that the lady was in great distress. A farmer living upon La Fayette 'pike heard noises in front of his residence, and upon going out found a woman lying on the ground in great distress. It was Mrs. Merrick. Her husband told the farmer that she was drunk, and asked his assistance to lift her into the carriage.

POISONED WITH STRYCHNINE.

It appears that she was poisoned with strychnine, and that during her convulsions a babe was born. Both died. With their bodies in the carriage, the fiend returned to the city and tried to dispose of them to the medical colleges but without success. He drove about the city, stopping frequently at saloons and drinking freely. Finally, he hit upon the plan of concealment under the log heap on the banks of Eagle Creek. When the case was given to the jury they remained out only thirty minutes, when they returned a verdict of guilty, and fixed his punishment at death. The case was carried to the Supreme Court which affirmed the decision of the lower court.

Good Wagons at Low Prices.

I now have my spoke lathes in working order, and I am prepared to receive 100,000 oak sticks for spokes. In sales of manufactured hubs and spokes, I find it to my advantage to take first-class wagons as part pay, which I will sell at what they cost me, ($50.00 EACH) and warrant them; or, I will take hub blocks, spoke timber, hickory axle timber or plank in exchange for wagons. Four to six days labor will get you a splendid new wagon. Please call and examine my stock.

Church Music.

Communicated.

Why in the name of decency don't our church choirs learn a little bit of the science of singing? It (the singing) is frequently the most enjoyable part of the church service, and attracts to the church that class who of all should attend, more than anything else. For a person who loves music (and who does not?) to sit and hear poor singing, loud, discordant sounds and screeches and screams, drives that person from that church, and if he be a stranger in our town drives him to the conclusion, that that church, its members and the whole town are a set of Yahoos, without a particle of taste, culture or refinement.

I attended a church recently and had I not heard the minister read the hymn, and knew it myself so that I could repeat it, I would not have known what the choir was singing any more than if it had been a Chinese hymn. There was one who supposed himself the leader, because he always started on the lead of the whole gang, that is he would not wait until the balance of his crowd had finished a word or sentence, before he would strike in and go it. He tried hard to make a noise, not music, and wanted all present to know he had a voice that could be heard, and the others acted pretty much the same way, each wanted their particular noise heard over every one else. Now sound and noise and racket, are not music and never will be. Music is the assimulation of sounds. In what I heard there at that time, there was no more assimulation or blending of the sounds than there are in the yells of half a dozen Thomas cats on the back fence. I know I speak somewhat disrespectfully of those good youngsters, but if they make some people miserable, disgust others, and make themselves the laughing stock of others, they had better know it. I doubt from that performance, for that is just what it was, if they know what time and accent in music is. And when the whole congregation joined in singing a hymn, these blessed performers for fear their voices would not be heard, would not sing at all. To show how they sang, or at least how it sounded to me, they performed on an old familiar hymn as follows:

> "Jeaus scan make ka dy-ying bed-ah,
> Feel sof tas down ni pillows sare,
> While lon nis breas ti lay my 'ead,
> Dan breathe my life font sweet ile thare."

Now if I recollect correctly "are" should not be pronounced as "air," nor "there" as if spelled as "their" or "thare." In kindness and not in ridicule do I make these criticisms, but wholly for the good name of our churches, our town and our choirs, hoping it may prove profitable to some.

Our Kansas Letter.

GIRARD, KAN., Jan. 26, 1879.

MR. EDITOR.—Seeing that you have no correspondent from this place, and thinking that the people of your vicinity would like to hear from this part of the world, I herewith send a few items. Thus far this has been the coldest winter ever known in this section. A heavy sleet fell on the 12th of December to the depth of two inches. It turned cold at once and continued so for several weeks, and, in the meantime, several snows falling—one four inches deep. Kansas has been favored with a few weeks of fine sleighing which furnished abundant amusement for those that could secure rigs. (You that live in your northern homes, and see plenty of snow every year must remember that in "Sunny Kansas," sleighing is quite a novelty.) Such a variety of rigs was never seen before, for several weeks a new industry prevailed in the way of furnishing jump-ups. Some are made of hickory sapplings some of pine planks, some iron runners—almost anything that has sliding qualities. And the tops; some have buggy tops, some wagon beds and some have tops improvised, some have bells, regular sleigh bells, some cow-bells and some no bells at all. But now the snow is all gone and there is every indication of a speedy break up. The farmers have fair prospect of a good crop of wheat the coming harvest. Everything is cheap here, and although times are hard everything is in a flourishing condition, and the people seem to be contented and happy. Crawford Co., is one of the finest counties in southern Kansas. It contains six railroad towns, a large number of fine churches and school houses and some of the best prairie land in the Union. I must stop right here for fear of occupying too much of your space. The COURIER is a welcome visitor, as it brings us news of our old home and many friends.

—We are in receipt of the catalogue of the loan exhibition now in progress in Fort Wayne, under the auspices of the Ladies of Trinity Church. The exhibition consists of a rare collection of works of Art and curiosities belonging to the people of Fort Wayne and vicinity. Such displays are becoming very popular in the cities, and to some extent take the place of church fairs and festivals. A great variety of curiosities and relics numbering between eight and nine hundred are now on exhibition, and will be for several weeks. An article which attracts the attention of the ladies particularly is a $4,000.00 dress. When our citizens visit Fort Wayne within the next few weeks, they will not regret the price of admission if they go to 49 West Berry street and spend their leisure time. Admission 25 cents.

A New Enterprise.

Mr. Walter S. Bowen, general agent for Bowen's Grain and Grass-seed Cleaner and Separator, is now exhibiting a sample of those famous machines in the room formerly occupied by J. R. Lanning, where he will take pleasure in showing its advantages to those interested in the manufacture or use of a machine that will assist the farmers in improving the quality of grains and seeds for seeding purposes, by separating the largest and best developed kernals. Besides producing two grades of grain, the machine at the same time removes all foreign substances, separates and cleans whatever grass seed there may be among the grain, and furnishes both grain and grass seed ready for market. We understand that the manufacturers of this machine would entertain a proposition for the location of a factory at this point, owing to the abundance of suitable timber and extra shipping facilities.

The subject is worthy of an investigation by our citizens. No opportunity should be allowed to pass to induce parties to locate here and give employment to mechanics and laborers, which would assist in building up the town and in making a home market for our produce. An institution of this kind would not require much capital, and would give employment to a large number of hands.

We have before us The British Quarterly Review for January, republished by the Leonard Scott publishing Co., 41 Barclay street, New York. We give a short sketch of the contents:

"Daniel Manin." Manin was the leader of the struggle for Venetian independence in the year 1848; and we have in this brief biography his portrait as a revolutionist, a statesman, and a dictator.

"What is Science?" This question is answered by defining science as the summation and colligation of all the knowledges pertaining to a given subject matter. Under this category stand the physical sciences, metaphysics, logic and religion itself.

"Religious Equality and Theories of Comprehension." A condensed statement of the Broad Church Theory, and of the arguments by which that theory is maintained.

"Arnold on Secondary Education." Dissents from Mr. Arnold's views on this subject as expressed in the November number of the Fortnightly Review.

"Restorations." Describes the work which has been going on in English mediæval buildings.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and using, in German, French, or English. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. Sherar, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y. 6-eow 6-m.

—The Auburn COURIER has been materially improved, and is in every way a first-class county paper. We do not like that border, however, as it is too gingerbready.—Kendalville Standard.

There was a time when Bro. Meyers was not an admirer of patent sides, but he finally surrendered to public opinion and adopted the much abused child. The readers of the Standard need not be surprised to see a "gingerbready" border on that paper before long. Bro. Meyers will endeavor to please his subscribers rather than gratify his own taste, when there is dollars and cents at stake.

DIED:—At the residence of her uncle Mr. Geo. McMillin, Corunna, Ind., on February 2, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., Miss Annie I. Loveland.

Miss Loveland was a victim to that dreadful disease consumption, with which she has suffered for over a year. At the time of her death she was stopping temporarily with her uncle, where she was under medical treatment. The deceased was a young lady of more than ordinary intelligence, kind and affectionate, and much beloved by her many friends throughout DeKalb Co. Her brother, J. C. Loveland, (of the Garrett Headlight,) and all the bereaved, have our sympathies.

THE HUNTER'S BRIDE.

BY LUCIUS C. WEST.

Bell Gretchen fair, Bell Gretchen rare,
And she a miner's daughter,
With winsome ways and guileless air,
Spurned lovers all that sought her;
Cooked well her father's meager fare,
And treasured all he taught her.

Her inborn tact, devoid of art,
Though reared in crude rusticity,
Had given to her that matchless grace,
So charming in simplicity,
Of mind, and heart, and form, and face,
Which truth and worth doth e'er impart.

Once o'er a mountain's wooded slope,
In search of flowers [illegible]
This wild rose strayed, till, bending low,
The heavens all radiant like her face,
To kiss the earth at [illegible]
Proclaimed too great her rambling scope.

When shadows spanned the everglade,
As lower sank the setting sun,
Grew pale each ermine-tinted check,
Grew pale and corpse-like as a nun,
And, like a chess-piece brought to check,
She halted 'neath a fir tree's shade.

"Sweet bird, sweet bird," she weeping said,
With hands pressed 'gainst her panting breast,
As, 'neath the tree, her liquid eyes
She raised toward a songster's nest,
Suspended 'neath the ermine skies
Which tinged earth's mantle green with red.

Oh, change your song, my pretty bird,
And sing to me, sweet—where's my home?
You're up so high, pray look and see
Beyond you mountain's glistening dome."
Clear notes like water dropping free
Was all the sound Bell Gretchen heard.

Soon wearied sank she to the ground,
Where slumber robbed all chance for fear;
And, when earth donned her morning dress,
Upon the scene there did appear
And gaze upon her loveliness
A hunter bold with gun and hound.

Wild flowers nodding, bending low,
In wanton winds her form caressed;
No signs of life were seen save this—
The startled heaving of her breast.
He, stooping, gently snatched a kiss,
And murmured, "She will never know—"

Know what, John Stark?" she blushing said,
Up springing like a startled deer.
"How dare you take by stealth from me,
When in my sight you'd have a fear?
'Tis theft, bold sir, and I decree
Just retribution on your head."

"I'll stand a suit—and offer this
As offset to your charge, fair Bell:
Since I'm a thief by subtle art,
And you will cease not to rebel,
In innocence you've stole my heart—
Hence owe at least another kiss.

"Now, since you've lost your way, my sweet,
And I came here your steps to guide,
Pray let me lead you through all life—
Ah, Bell! why turn? why pout? why chide?
Why press your heart to quell its strife?
Come, fill my heart, 'tis meet, 'tis meet.

"No rich reward can ever reap
The doubting, never-trusting heart!
Come, be my mate, and I here swear
My truth to thee. Ah, sweet! why start?
Fair womanhood's charmed grace you'll wear—
Ah, sweet! my sweet! why do you weep?

"Your father's willing, and the points
Of rites and forms you oft have raised
Need have no weight. See, pure and free,
You crystal stream. No scoffs are raised
Because beyond it weds the sea,
And consummates what God appoints.

"Ah, Bell! dear Bell! you yield, you bow
Your head in maiden shame. Why weep?
With me kneel on this flower-decked mound.
Now mark: 'As soweth we we reap.'
Swear loyalty and love profound,
And God will bless our wedding vow."

He raised those charms with willing arms,
Ah, wildwood's fairest daughter!
And bore her, with new sweet alarms,
Across the gurgling water,
And vowed to shield her from all harms,
As 'neath his roof he brought her.

For years, out there, this happy pair,
By "Rocky Peak," near "Crumbs' Fort,"
Have lived: of children reared their share;
Drank deep of bliss and comfort.
"Life lived again." I've heard him swear,
"He'd do the same if he swung for 't."

THE LATE GREAT FRENCH DUEL.

[From the Atlantic Monthly for February.]

As soon as I heard of the late fiery outbreak between M. Gambetta and M. Fourtou in the French Assembly, I know that trouble must follow. I knew it because a long personal friendship with M. Gambetta had revealed to me the desperate and implacable nature of the man. Vast as are his physical proportions, I knew that the thirst for revenge would penetrate to the remotest frontiers of his person.

I did not wait for him to call on me, but went at once to him. As I expected, I found the brave fellow steeped in a profound French calm. I say French calm, because French calmness and English calmness have points of difference. He was moving swiftly back and forth among the debris of his furniture, now and then staving chance fragments of it across the room with his foot; grinding a constant grist of curses through his set teeth; and halting every little while to deposit another handful of his hair on the pile which he had been building of it on the table.

He threw his arms around my neck, bent me over his stomach to his breast, kissed me on both cheeks, hugged me four or five times, and then placed me in his own arm-chair. As soon as I had got well again we began business at once.

I said I supposed he would wish me to act as his second, and he said, "Of course." I said I must be allowed to act under a French name, so that I might be shielded from obloquy in my country, in case of fatal results. He winced here, probably at the suggestion that dueling was not regarded with respect in America. However, he agreed to my requirement. This accounts for the fact that in all the newspaper reports M. Gambetta's second was apparently a Frenchman.

First, we drew up my principal's will. I insisted upon this, and stuck to my point. I said I had never heard of a man in his right mind going out to fight a duel without first making a will. He said he had never heard of a man in his right mind doing anything of the kind. When he had finished the will he wished to proceed to a choice of his "last words." He wanted to know how the following words, as a dying exclamation, struck me:

"I die for my God, for my country, for freedom of speech, for progress, and the universal brotherhood of man!"

I objected that this would require too lingering a death; it was a good speech for a consumptive, but not suited to the exigencies of the field of honor. We wrangled over a good many ante-mortem outbursts, but I finally got him to cut his obituary down to this, which he copied into his memorandum-book, purposing to get it by heart:

"I die that France may live."

I said that this remark seemed to lack relevancy; but he said relevancy was a matter of no consequence in last words—what you wanted was thrill.

The next thing in order was the choice of weapons. My principal said he was not feeling well, and would leave that and the other details of the proposed meeting to me. Therefore I wrote the following note and carried it to M. Fourtou's friend:

Sir: M. Gambetta accepts M. Fourtou's challenge, and authorizes me to propose Plessis-Piquet as the place of meeting; to-morrow morning at daybreak as the time; and axes as the weapons. I am, sir, with great respect,
MARK TWAIN.

M. Fourtou's friend read this note, and shuddered. Then he turned to me, and said, with a suggestion of severity in his tone:

"Have you considered, sir, what would be the inevitable result of such a meeting as this?"

"Well, for instance, what would it be?"

"Bloodshed!"

"That's about the size of it," I said. "Now, if it is a fair question, what was your side proposing to shed?"

I had him there. He saw he had made a blunder, so he hastened to explain it away. He said he had spoken jestingly. Then he added that he and his principal would enjoy axes, and indeed prefer them, but such weapons were barred by the French code, and so I must change my proposal.

I walked the floor, turning the thing over in my mind, and finally it occurred to me that Gatling guns at fifteen paces would be a likely way to get a verdict on the field of honor. So I framed this idea into a proposition.

But it was not accepted. The code was in the way again. I proposed rifles; then, double-barreled shot-guns; then, Colt's navy revolvers. These being all rejected, I reflected a while, and sarcastically suggested brick-bats at three-quarters of a mile. I always hate to fool away a humorous thing on a person who has no perception of humor; and it filled me with bitterness when this man went soberly away to submit the last proposition to his principal.

He came back presently, and said his principal was charmed with the idea of brick-bats at three-quarters of a mile, but must decline on account of the danger to disinterested parties passing between. Then I said:

"Well, I am at the end of my string, now. Perhaps you would be good enough to suggest a weapon? Perhaps you have even had one in your mind all the time?"

His countenance brightened, and he said with alacrity:

"Oh, without doubt, Monsieur!"

So he fell to hunting in his pockets—pocket after pocket, and he had plenty of them—muttering all the while, "Now, what could I have done with them?"

At last he was successful. He fished out of his vest pocket a couple of little things which I carried to the light and discovered to be pistols. They were single-barreled and silver mounted, and very dainty and pretty. I was not able to speak for emotion. I silently hung one of them on my watch-chain, and returned the other. My companion in crime now unrolled a postage-stamp containing several cartridges, and gave me one of them. I asked if he meant to signify by this that our men were to be allowed but one shot apiece. He replied that the French code permitted no more. I then begged him to go on and suggest a distance, for my mind was growing weaker and confused under the strain which had been put upon it. He said sixty-five yards. I nearly lost my patience. I said:

"Sixty-five yards with these instruments? Pop-guns would be deadlier at fifty. Consider, my friend, you and I are banded together to destroy life, not to make it eternal."

But with all my persuasion, all my arguments, I was only able to get him to reduce the distance to thirty-five yards; and even this concession he made with reluctance, and said with a sigh:

"I wash my hands of this slaughter; on your head be it."

There was nothing for me but to go home to my old lion-heart and tell my humiliating story. When I entered, M. Gambetta was laying his last lock of hair on the altar. He sprung toward me, exclaiming:

"You have made the fatal arrangements—I see it in your eye!"

"I have."

His face paled a trifle, and he leaned upon the table for support. He breathed thick and heavily for a moment or two, so tumultuous were his feelings; then he hoarsely whispered:

"The weapon! the weapon! Quick! What is the weapon?"

"This!" and I displayed that silver-mounted thing. He caught but one glimpse of it, then swooned ponderously to the floor.

When he came to, he said, mournfully:

"The unnatural calm to which I have subjected myself has told upon my nerves. But away with weakness! I will confront my fate like a man and a Frenchman."

He rose to his feet, and assumed an attitude which for sublimity has never been approached by man, and has seldom been surpassed by statues. Then he said, in his deep, bass tones:

"Behold, I am calm, I am ready; reveal to me the distance."

"Thirty-five yards."

I could not lift him up, of course; but I rolled him over and poured water down his back. He presently came to, and said:

"Thirty-five yards—without a rest? But why ask? Since murder was that man's intention, why should he palter at small details? But mark you one thing: In my fall the world shall see how the chivalry of France meets death."

After a long silence he asked:

"Was nothing said about that man's family standing up with him, as an offset to my bulk? But no matter; I would not stoop to make a suggestion; if he is not noble enough to suggest it himself he is welcome to the advantage, which no honorable man would take."

He now sank into a sort of stupor of reflection, which lasted some minutes; after which he broke silence with:

"The hour—what is the hour fixed for the collision?"

"Dawn, to-morrow."

He seemed greatly surprised, and immediately said.

"Insanity! I never heard of such a thing. Nobody is abroad at such an hour."

"That is the reason I named it. Do you mean to say you want an audience?"

"It is no time to bandy words. I am astonished that M. Fourtou should ever have agreed to so strange an innovation. Go at once and require a later hour."

I ran down stairs, threw open the front door, and almost plunged into the arms of M. Fourtou's second. He said:

"I have the honor to say that my principal strenuously objects to the hour chosen, and begs that you will consent to change it to half-past 9."

"Any courtesy, sir, which it is in our power to extend is at the service of your excellent principal. We agree to the proposed change of time."

"I beg you to accept the thanks of my client." Then he turned to a person behind him, and said, "You hear, M. Noir, the hour is altered to half-past 9." Whereupon M. Noir bowed, expressed his thanks, and went away. My accomplice continued:

"If agreeable to you, your chief surgeons and ours shall proceed to the field in the same carriage, as is customary."

"It is entirely agreeable to me, and I am obliged to you for mentioning the surgeons, for I am afraid I should not have thought of them. How many shall I want? I suppose two or three will be enough?"

"Two is the customary number for each party. I refer to 'chief' surgeons; but, considering the exalted positions occupied by our clients, it will be well and decorous that each of us appoint several consulting surgeons, from among the highest in the profession. These will come in their own private carriages. Have you engaged a hearse?"

"Bless my stupidity, I never thought of it! I will attend to it right away. I must seem very ignorant to you; but you must try to overlook that, because I have never had any experience of such a swell duel as this before. I have had a good deal to do with duels on the Pacific coast, but I see now that they were crude affairs. A hearse—sho! we used to leave the elected lying around loose and let anybody cord them up and cart them off that wanted to. Have you anything further to suggest?"

"Nothing, except that the head undertakers shall ride together, as is usual. The subordinates and mutes will go on foot, as is also usual. I will see you at 3 o'clock in the morning, and we will then arrange the order of the procession. I have the honor to bid you a good day."

I returned to my client, who said: "Very well; at what hour is the engagement to begin?"

"Half-past 9."

"Very good indeed. Have you sent the fact to the newspapers?"

"Sir! If after our long and intimate friendship you can for a moment deem me capable of so base a treachery—"

"Tut, tut! What words are these, my dear friend? Have I wounded you? Ah, forgive me; I am overloading you with labor. Therefore go on with the other details, and drop this one from your list. The bloody-minded Fourtou will be sure to attend to it. Or I myself—yes, to make certain, I will drop a note to my journalistic friend, M. Noir—"

"Oh, come to think, you may save yourself the trouble; that other second has informed M. Noir."

"H'm! I might have known it. It is just like that Fourtou, who always wants to make a display."

At half-past 9 in the morning the procession approached the field of Plessis-Piquet in the following order: First came our carriage—nobody in it but M. Gambetta and myself; then a carriage containing M. Fourtou and his second; then a carriage containing two poet-orators who did not believe in God, and these had MS. funeral orations projecting from their breast pockets; then a carriage containing the head surgeons and their cases of instruments; then eight private carriages containing consulting surgeons; then a hack containing the Coroner; then the two hearses; then a carriage containing the head undertakers; then a train of assistants and mutes on foot; and after these came plodding through the fog a long procession of camp-followers, police, and citizens generally. It was a noble turnout, and would have made a fine display if we had had thinner weather.

There was no conversation. I spoke several times to my principal, but I judge that he was not aware of it, for he always referred to his note-book, and muttered absently, "I die that France may live!"

Arrived in the field, my fellow-second and I paced off thirty-five yards, and then drew lots for choice of position. This latter was but an ornamental ceremony, for all choices were alike in such weather. These preliminaries being ended, I went to my principal and asked him if he was ready. He spread himself out to his full width, and said, in a stern voice, "Ready! Let the batteries be charged."

The loading was done in the presence of duly-constituted witnesses. We considered it best to perform this delicate service with the assistance of the lantern, on account of the state of the weather. We now placed our men.

At this point the police noticed that the public had massed themselves together on the right and left of the field; they therefore begged a delay, while they should put these poor people in a place of safety. The request was granted.

The police having ordered the two multitudes to take positions behind the duelists, we were once more ready. The weather growing still more opaque, it was agreed between myself and the other second that, before giving the fatal signal, we should each deliver a loud whoop to enable the combatants to ascertain each other's whereabouts.

I now returned to my principal, and was distressed to observe that he had lost a good deal of his spirit. I tried my best to hearten him. I said, "indeed, sir, things are not so bad as they seem. Considering the character of the weapons, the limited number of shots allowed, and generous distance, the impenetrable distance of fog, and the added fact that one of the combatants is one-eyed and the other cross-eyed and near-sighted, it seems to me that this conflict need not necessarily be fatal. There are chances that both of you may survive. Therefore, cheer up; do not be down-hearted."

This speech had so good an effect that my principal immediately stretched forth his hand and said, "I am myself again; give me the weapon."

I laid it, all lonely and forlorn, in the center of the vast solitude of his palm. He gazed at it and shuddered. And still mournfully contemplating it, he murmured, in a broken voice:

"Alas, it is not death I dread, but mutilation."

I heartened him once more, and with such success that he presently said, "Let the tragedy begin. Stand at my back; do not desert me in this solemn hour, my friend."

I gave him my promise. I now assisted him to point his pistol toward the spot where I judged his adversary to be standing, and cautioned him to listen well, and further guide himself by my fellow-second's whoop. Then I propped myself against M. Gambetta's back, and raised a rousing "whoop-ee!" This was answered from out the far distances of the fog, and I immediately shouted:

"One—two—three—fire!"

Two little sounds like spit! spit! broke upon my ear, and in the same instant I was crushed to the earth under a mountain of flesh. Buried as I was, I was still able to catch a faint accent from above, to this effect:

"I die for—for—perdition take it, what is it I die for?—oh, yes—France! I die that France may live!"

The surgeons swarmed around with their probes in their hands, and applied their microscopes to the whole area of M. Gambetta's person, with the happy result of finding nothing in the nature of a wound. Then a scene ensued which was in every way gratifying and inspiriting.

The two gladiators fell upon each other's necks, with floods of proud and happy tears; that other second embraced me; the surgeons, the orators, the undertakers, the police, everybody embraced, everybody congratulated, everybody cried, and the whole atmosphere was filled with praise and with joy unspeakable.

It seemed to me then that I would rather be the hero of a French duel than a crowned and sceptered monarch.

When the commotion had somewhat subsided, the body of surgeons held a consultation, and after a good deal of debate decided that, with proper care and nursing, there was reason to believe that I would survive my injuries. My internal hurts were deemed the most serious, since it was apparent that a broken rib had penetrated my left lung, and that many of my organs had been pressed out so far to one side or the other from where they belonged that it was doubtful if they would ever learn to perform their functions in such remote and unaccustomed localities. They then set my left arm in two places, pulled my right hip into its socket again, and re-elevated my nose. I was an object of great interest, and even admiration; and many sincere and warm-hearted persons had themselves introduced to me, and said they were proud to know the only man who had been hurt in a French duel for forty years.

I was placed in an ambulance at the very head of the procession; and thus with gratifying eclat I was marched into Paris, he most conspicuous figure in that great spectacle, and deposited at the hospital.

The Cross of the Legion of Honor has been conferred upon me. However, few escape that distinction.

Such is the true version of the most memorable private conflict of the age. My recovery is still doubtful, but there are hopes. I am able to dictate, but there is no knowing when I shall be able to write.

I have no complaints to make against any one. I acted for myself, and I can stand the consequences. Without boasting, I think I may say I am not afraid to stand before a modern French duelist, but I will never consent to stand behind one again.

Bloody Record of Breathitt County.

The information from Breathitt county is of a startling nature. The dark deeds that have been perpetrated in that unhappy county are only just coming to light. The riot, bloody and fatal as it was, which attracted the attention of the country to Jackson is but a light affair compared with the bloody tragedies and villainous murders that have been committed among the hills of that wild country. Timidly the information is given to the officers of the law, and guilty secrets that have been kept for years are told in whispered accents. Not only have these noble mountaineers fought and killed each other, but they have waylaid, robbed and murdered travelers whose journey led them through the treacherous hills. Maj. Kinney, the prosecutor appointed by the State, learns of men who, having lodged at certain cabins at night, disappeared the next day, and were never heard of again. Their friends knew not where to inquire for them. Dead men, buried in Breathitt, tell no tales. The place is so cut off from the rest of civilization, or rather from civilization, that it is a safe retreat for fugitives of every kind. I heard recently of a young lawyer, who, having been indicted by the United States Court, went to Breathitt, where he lived for three years as safe from pursuit as if he were in Africa. Bad men could find not a safer place in which to perpetrate deeds of wickedness. It is estimated, from facts that have recently been put in the possession of the law officers, that 19 murders were committed in Breathitt during the war, and 26 since the war and up to the present time, making a total of 45; while the men who have been badly wounded, either in open fight or at the hands of the assassin, number 30. Horrible as this record is, not one man has been punished for any of these crimes. Living in such impunity, it is no wonder that they defied the law as too weak to cope with them.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE Times of India says that 3,000 orphans, the result of the famine in Mysore, have been handed over to the orphanages in the province.

OUR EXPORT TRADE.

The Produce and Live-Stock Showing of the Past Year.

There has been a decided increase in the exportation of American produce and live stock during the past year. The Bureau of Statistics at Washington has returns to the 31st of October, in full, and a circular containing the information will be published in a few days.

The following is a comparative statement of the value of agricultural implements exported from this country during the first ten months of 1878 and the corresponding months of 1877:

	1878.	1877.
Horse powers	$ [illegible]	$ [illegible]
Mowers and reapers	[illegible]	[illegible]
All other agricultural implements	1,662,834	[illegible]

The following is a comparative statement of the value of live stock exported:

	1878.	1877.
Hogs	$ 397,582	$ 219,730
Horned cattle	6,704,733	2,128,444
Horses	364,151	418,365
Mules	326,610	469,634
Sheep	497,273	328,361

The following is similar statement in regard to breadstuffs:

	1878.	1877.
Barley	$ 1,170,434	$ 1,054,041
Bread and biscuit	612,759	548,761
Indian corn	40,145,854	36,108,090
Oats	1,869,356	410,901
Rye	2,989,745	1,640,767
Wheat	102,896,189	51,015,090
Wheat flour	22,373,187	16,897,788
Prepared breadstuffs	1,760,391	585,899

It will be seen by the above tables that there is scarcely an article of merchandise the amount of which exported has not largely increased during the past year, and in some of the great articles of export the increase is enormous. It will be seen that the shipments of wheat have more than doubled, which is also the case with rye, and the prepared breadstuffs (which includes farina and other articles of food manufactured) have increased more than three times; the exportation of oats has increased nearly five times, while other breadstuffs show large gains.

The large increase in the shipments of horned cattle will also be noticed, while the shipments of horses have doubled.

On the other hand the shipments of gold and silver, both in bullion and coin, have largely decreased, as will be shown by the following table:

	1878.	1877.
Gold bullion	$ 198,880	$ 258,807
Gold coin	6,083,647	14,017,754
Silver bullion	8,807,667	11,276,494
Trade dollars	1,803,538	8,636,440
Other silver coin	172,660	409,707

Large increase is also seen in other articles of merchandise; the shipments of beer in bottles in 1877 were valued at $70,483, while those for 1878 were $112,439. The exports of unmanufactured cotton increased 30 per cent., while the exports of manufactured cotton were equal in all items to the previous year. The shipments of leather increased about 25 per cent., and those of oils show a similar increase. The amount of lard oil exported in 1877 was $376,477, while that in 1878 was $1,074,459. The export of bacon increased 25 per cent., and the same may be said of fish.

About Horse-Cars.

John Stevenson, who built the first street-car in 1831, has lived to see nearly 400 street railways built in the United States, and sent his first foreign shipment to Batavia, Java, in 1858. The attempt to introduce street-cars in London caused a riot, in which the rails were torn up; but now American cars are running at London, Liverpool, Nottingham, Leeds, Wolverhampton, Hull, and Birkenhead, in England; at Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, in Scotland; and at Swansea, in Wales. In the British possessions, also, they have been established at Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, St. Johns and Halifax, in the Dominion; at the Cape of Good Hope, the only place in Africa; at Christ Church, Wellington, and Dunedin in New Zealand; at Bombay, the only place in India; at Kingston, in Jamaica; at Adelaide, Port Adelaide, and Gamberton, in South Australia, and are soon to be built at Melbourne, Sidney, Tasmania and Hobartstown, in New South Wales. The French protective policy has shut American street-cars out of all that republic's cities but Calais; but they are running, and popular, at Berlin, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Stockholm, Christiana, Hamburg, Bremen, Amsterdam and Brussels, on the Continent. Like the British flag, the sun never sets on American street-cars, which are also running in Havana, and at the principal cities of Mexico, Brazil, Uruguay, the Argentine Republic, Chili, Peru, Venezuela, Guayaquil in Ecuador, San Jose in Costa Rica, and are to be substituted for omnibuses at Bogota, the capital of Colombia.

Starvation in England.

Meanwhile the most dreadful scenes are witnessed in our own immediate neighborhood. Our newspapers have teemed with instances of intense hunger and destitution, one only of which I will give, as a sample of the rest. A butcher missed a large bunch of "lights" from which the heart and liver had been detached, and which he had seen hanging outside his window a moment before. Going to the door he observed a scarecrow of a fellow making off with it. He quickly followed him unobserved, and, picking up a policeman as he went along, they went into the man's house, only to find him and his wife and children tearing asunder and ravenously devouring the "raw material" that had just been stolen! To the credit of our common humanity it ought to be recorded that, instead of giving the man into custody, the butcher gave him a couple of shillings, and the policeman was only too glad to wink at this evident but very excusable "miscarriage of justice."—Manchester Cor. New York Post.

AMERICAN cars are already running on several British tramways, also in Hull, Swansea, Wolverhampton, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Leeds, Aberdeen, Lisbon, Berlin, Hamburg, Brussels, Amsterdam, Christiana, Stockholm, Vienna, St. Petersburg, in nearly all the South American cities, the West Indies, and in Adelaide and Wellington. An order is in negotiation for the Cape of Good Hope.

THE GOLD THAT WEARS.

We parted one eve at the garden gate
When the dew was on the heather,
And I promised my love to come back to Ere the pleasant autumn weather—
That we twain might wed
When the leaves were red,
And live and love together.

She cut me a tress from her nut-brown
And I kissed her lips of cherry,
And gave her a ring of the old-time go
With a stone like a mountain berry—
As clear and blue
As her eyes were true—
Sweet eyes, so bright and merry!

"The wealth of my love is all I have To give you," she said in turning;
"The gold that wears—like the radian
In yonder blue vault burning!"
And I took the trust,
As a lover must,
Whose soul for love is yearning.

Fate kept us apart for many years,
And the blue sea rolled between us,
Though I kissed each day the nut-brown!
And I made fresh vows to Venus—
Till I sought my bride,
And fate defied,
That failed from love to wean us.

I found my love at the garden gate
When the dew was on the heather,
And we twain were wed at the little
In the pleasant autumn weather;
And the gold that wears
Now soothes my cares,
As we live and love together.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

The Lady on Skates.

BY NATHAN D. URNER.

Mark where she flies in flashing rings
  The throng of gazers through,
While every sinuous motion brings
  An added grace to view.
What crescent curves, what airy spires
  What arabesques of speed!
Her fairy feet form, light and fleet,
  As sweeps she in the lead!

Her snowy ermined cloak afloat
  Is wanton with the wind,
A jewel clasps her pearly throat,
  Her tresses blow behind;
The rose of beauty crowns her brow,
  [illegible]
As [illegible] on satin cheek
  The roguish dimples dance.

An Iris from the halls of [illegible],
  A breath of music blown
From elfin revels, earthward borne,
  To keep the world in tone.
She flies the flag of utter joy,
  And pins her laughing faith
On aught of youth, or ruth, or truth,
  Her happy bosom saith.

Now to and fro she softly swings,
  Lost in the cloud of curls,
And now with sudden joy she springs
  In meteoric whirls.
Around and round, and off again,
  She storms from place to place,
Till once again across the plain
  She floats in easy grace.

Crown her for love, ye jealous fates!
  With fairest flowers that bloom;
And as she rules the rink on skates,
  So may she rule her home.
Soft be her lines of life as those
  Her gliding footsteps trace—
Bright be her future as the rose
  That mantles on her face!

Nicotine in Her Smack.

I wonder how any woman who has ever kissed a clean man can go through the pretense even of kissing a tobacco chewer. Did you ever see one suffer the penalty? This is how she does it. There is a preliminary shudder, and then she sets her teeth hard, holds her breath, makes a little pigeon dip at the foul lips of the grinning beast, and then pale with horror, flies to the kitchen, where if you follow her, you will find her disinfecting with soap and water. Many of the blessed little hypocrites pretend that they like the smell of a cigar, but even hypocrisy is powerless to force from a woman the confession of a fondness for hanging like the bee on the flower of a tobacco-worm's lips.—Mrs. Garrison.

An Afghan Beauty.

The blue black hair is plastered down stiff with gums in various forms on the head, and from the roots behind is plaited into numerous long tails, hanging over the shoulders and back. The outer margin of the ears all round is pierced and decorated with rows of small silver rings, larger ones hanging from the lobes. The neck and breast are tattoed and dotted over with little figures of stars and flowers. The lustrious black of the eyes is further enhanced by loading the lids with soorma, or black antimony. The cheeks are rouged and picked out with little round moles of gold and silver tinsel, fixed on with gum. A loose yellow, blue or red jacket of muslin or silk, hanging below the waist, and paijamas or wide trousers of silk or other colored material, form the indoor costume. On going out, leggings of cotton cloth, gartered at the knee, walking shoes of red or yellow leather, and the indispensable bookaposh, are added. A lady of the Kuzzibash tribe is sometimes distinguished with the addition of a black horse-hair veil, and it is also considered chic to wear a vinaigrette filled with ottar of roses or other scent on the forehead.

A Happy Woman.

What spectacle more pleasing does the world afford than a happy woman, contented in her sphere, ready at all times to benefit her little world by her exertions, and transforming her briars and thorns of life into roses of Paradise by the magic of her touch? There are those who are thus happy because they cannot help it; no misfortunes dampen their sweet smiles, and they diffuse a cheerful glow around them, as they pursue the even tenor of their way. They have the secret of contentment, whose value is above the philosopher's stone, for without seeking the baser exchange of gold, which may buy some sort of pleasure, they convert everything they touch into joy. What their condition is makes no difference. They may be rich or poor, high or low, admired or forsaken by the wicked world; but the sparkling fountain of happiness bubbles up in their hearts and makes them radiantly beautiful. Though they live in a log cabin, they make it shine with a lustre that kings and queens covet, and they make wealth a fountain of blessings to the children of poverty. Happy women are the highest types of humanity, and we cannot say how much we owe to them for the progress of the race.

Mock Marriages.

Young men and women and who are at all sagacious will do well not to allow themselves to be drawn into that mild form of buffoonery called a mock marriage. We do not mean by this a ceremony in which one or the other of the two contracting parties is deceived as to its legality, but one in which a desire to momentarily entertain friends is the ruling motive. It is so easy to get married legally, and there are so many persons who possess all the legal requirements needed to declare a union valid, that the make-believe bride and groom can never be certain that they may not be in some way compromised by their perfectly innocent actions. Of course, there would be no difficulty in proving, if such evidence was necessary, an absence at the time being of all intention to consider the act a binding one; but then who wants to be summoned into court to explain the bearings of some seemingly harmless frolic? or have one's peace of mind disturbed by all manner of social forebodings? A case in point occurred a few days since in a neighboring city. There was a church wedding, as large and fashionable as could be desired, but at the entrance—and only one door of the church was allowed to be open—was stationed a detective for the purpose of preventing the entrance of a certain undesired individual, while near the officiating clergyman was posted a lawyer armed with all the legal documents needed to show, if any one raised the question, that there was no good reason why the marriage should be stayed. The cause for all this preparation was due to the inconsiderateness of the young lady, who had a year or two before been married in sport to some one other than her present husband by a man who turned out to be a judge or justice of the peace, or some other authority, and in consequence of this her life had been made miserable by the assertions of the temporary bridegroom that he would not permit her to be married to any one else. As it turned out, no attempt at interference was made, and the precautions taken were, therefore, needless; but that they were even thought to be be necessary indicates an amount of uneasiness which no one could care to lightly assume, and hence the very obvious moral is that the best way to avoid entanglements of this kind is to refuse to participate in any of these mock ceremonies.—*N. For Brides Only.

The materials for bridal robes this season are remarkably elegant. Extremists in fashion select brocades—satin brocade for brides over twenty years of age, and silk brocade for younger brides—though plain satin, by conventional consent—the one material always in vogue for bridal robes—is clamored for by some; while plain gros grain silk has its votaries, and India mull. Swiss mull and French organdy muslin dresses are sent out for youthful rustic brides, who do not feel willing to afford the expense of a dress more costly.

The silks, satins, and gauzes which are shown for bridal robes, are in several distinct tints of white, and several distinct shades of these tints. In cream white, for instance, there is the dark, rich, yellowish shade of the Alderney cream, twenty-four hours old; and, according to the age of the cream, paler shades, till the faintest "off color" is visible. In pearl white we are shown a tint that almost approaches the smoke pearl in shade; another, that has a suspicion of rose in tint; another, with the faintest suspicion of lilac—this being quite perceptible on the wrong side of plain satin or satin brocade; and from these scarcely perceptible hints of color in the silk fabrics displayed, there are fainter and fainter shades, till the existence of a colored ray is distinguishable only when laid beside a piece of snow-white silk. Cream white of the medium shade is that in the most decided favor for the bridal robe; and of the whites is that which is regarded as the most becoming or the least trying to the complexion.—Frank Leslie's Lady's Journal.

The Marvelous Stockings Now Worn by the Ladies in England.

In view of the belief that short dresses will ultimately be worn, manufacturers have produced marvels in the shape of stockings. Indeed, many are quite works of art. But the embroidery on some of them is far more elaborate than beautiful, while others are just as tasteful and pretty. In fact, stockings now form a most important item in the toilet. The old design of a spear head is considered too simple looking for the present style: Hose of black silk or Lisle thread, embroidered with white or colored floss silk, are always in good taste. The newer kinds are embroidered up the front, and not at the ankles as before. Very small flowers, such as forget-me-nots, look far prettier for the instep and leg of a stocking than roses almost as big as sunflowers, which are not at all uncommon. Spun silk and cashmere silk hose can now be bought in every new and delicate shade, to match the costumes with which they are to be worn. Pale pink, blue, beige, and caroubier are the most popular colors.

Fashion, like history, constantly repeats itself, and, as regards the wearing of flesh-colored stockings, the author of Ella, written in 1819, says: "A fashion of pink-colored hose for ladies comes up at this juncture. Oh! the conceits which we varied upon red in all its prismatic differences. And the collateral topic of ankles. What an occasion for a truly chaste writer, like ourself, of touching that nice brink, and yet not tumbling over it." "I pronounced, says Charles Lamb, in reference to the stockings, "that modesty takes her final leave of mortals, was visible in her ascent to the heavens by the track of her glowing instep; but fashion is transient, and so is the mode which has favored us. The ankles of our fair friends in a few weeks began to reassume their pristine whiteness."

That is not the least likely in our time, 1879, for white stockings are rarely ever seen indoors, far less in the streets; and the fashion for wearing shoes which display so much of the stockings makes it almost certain that the taste for colored hose will be more enduring than what Charles Lamb calls "the transient mode for a few weeks."

Then what dainty shoes there are. Almost extravagant, and quite indescribable in their elegance. They are made in every possible color, with gold or silver heels, and embroidered in all styles with gold and silver thread, or beads and pearls; likewise trimmed with rushes of lace, silk, and what-not.

The instep is held in place by embroidered bands or gold and silver clasps, or by ornamental knots of bright ribbons, made up in imitation of gay birds; lizards, butterflies, and flowers are used to decorate the toes.

Cardinal silk stockings look extremely well worn under a pair of black velvet or satin slippers trimmed with white lace, and clasped with buckles to imitate diamonds.

To the long gloves now worn on dress occasions fashion has added two more buttons, making the almost incredible number of twenty-six, and when hanging in the window in length they look far more like stockings than gloves. Sleeves to evening dresses, therefore, are none worth mentioning, and these gloves certainly cover one part of the arm, though it is at the wrong extremity.

Caps continue to be worn. Many have the crowns made of the same material as the dress, and are trimmed with gold or silver lace, and ornamented with gold coins, balls, pearl heads, or marabout feathers fringed with gold, and some are composed of flowers alone.

The "Olivia" is the favorite model also for bonnets made of soft materials as well as caps. The latter are of Indian muslin and Breton lace. This head dress is copied in exact imitation of the one worn by Miss Helen Terry, in her clever representation of Dr. Primrose's eldest daughter, and is more becoming to most faces than the universal turban shape. The crown of the "Olivia" is loose and large, trimmed with two rows of rather wide lace, which is caught back by a knot of ribbons just above the centre of the forehead.—Cardiff Mail.

The Reason for Woman's Moods—Her Industry and Economy.

The St. Louis Post says: Moodiness in woman may almost always be traced to an over-taxed condition of the system, to too much care, and to too much continued monotony in daily pursuits. A wife and mother surrounded by family cares is acted and re-acted upon by the same sights, sounds and labors until the freshness and vivacity of the spirit become worn out. We are so constituted that our natures demand for their enjoyment of life, and for the vigorous exercise of our powers, change, variety and relaxation. For lack of these the interest in life diminishes; the mental horizon narrows, life becomes contracted and seems not worth the living. Then come various unhappy moods and take possession of the mind. To learn to control and banish unhealthy moods is one of the tasks that must be undertaken by every woman who would lead a happy and useful life. The first step is to recognize their existence and influence. Reason must be called to the aid to declare that feelings of despondency hopelessness, complaint and discouragement are but the result of a mood, and therefore can be resolutely held in check. If one can only bring one's self to make the frank acknowledgment mentally, "I feel mean, cross and ugly to-day," and then to restrain speech and action accordingly, the battle is half won. But vigorous action must be resorted to in order to dispel the mood, and for this nothing is so effective for woman as to leave home, even if but for an hour. Get away where other influences will act upon the mind and body. If despondency and a complaining mood are dominant, go to see some fellow creature who is in real distress; the remedy is almost a specific for such a mood. Above all things, moods need to be dealt with objectively, not subjectively. Don't go to introspection; don't think about yourself; don't set it down to a sinful heart, or to any irreligious cause. The cause of moods is a purely physical one, and must be reached through the physical nature. Change of occupation, of surroundings, of air and exercises are the remedies for moods.

The Woman's Journal says: When men have learned to appreciate woman's industry and economy—when they have learned to enumerate the amount of money saved by their wives and sisters, they will cease to talk about their expensive tastes and habits. The wife of the laboring man in this country, makes it possible for him to get a home of his own. The wife of the mechanic who, by her frugal habits and strict economy, enables her husband to keep his family of five or six on that which would not board and clothe two, if she did nothing else, deserves a better reward than being told she earns nothing and is supported by her husband. The woman who cooks, mends, makes clothing, washes, irons, sweeps and dusts, who does an untold amount of labor that would cost the husband hundreds of dollars annually, if others performed the work, should not be insulted by being told that she is wasting her husband's hard earnings, if she buys a good dress occasionally. The farmer's wife who milks, churns and keeps the family in groceries, and, as is frequently the case, clothes herself and daughters with her butter money, should at least be permitted to call one dime her own, and not to be told she belongs to the class of non-producers. The educated woman, who says to her husband, "I can earn at painting, teaching, music, or writing, more than will pay a girl for doing all our work, and I wish to do it," should not be compelled to cook, bake and wash, because the law, which she had no voice in making, says she owes her husband service; neither should she, if she adorns her house with flowers, paintings and statuary, be told she is bankrupting the nation.

Revenge in Italy.

Two Englishmen, wandering in a boat in the suburbs of Venice, saw an object in the water surrounded by birds. They found it to be a man, yet alive. His arms and legs were broken and tied, and in order that he might not sink, a large demijohn of glass was attached to each shoulder, which sustained the head and neck above water. He could not speak, his tongue hung from his mouth. His eyes had been pecked out by the birds. The murderers were Luigi Parmaschetti, a farmer and his two brothers. Parmaschetti had a handsome and irreproachable wife and a daughter of 8 years. Tetaldo, the murdered man, was employed by him and well treated; but becoming enamored of Mme. Parmaschetti, he annoyed her to such a degree that her husband beat him and drove him from his house. Several days after Parmaschetti started at midnight, with a load of garden produce, for Venice. His wife was soon awakened by steps in her room. Her door was locked, but Tetaldo had entered by the window, and he stood before her, knife in hand. He threatened death if she called for help, but she defended herself bravely. In the meantime her daughter, unperceived by Tetaldo, had crept under the bed, and was a witness to the scene. Mme. Parmaschetti ran round a table, and several times escaped from Tetaldo's grasp. But he stabbed her, and she fell in a dying condition. Day begin to dawn, and Tetaldo fled. The child then alarmed the neighbors, who, on reaching the house, found the woman dead, with 32 wounds upon her body. On the return of Parmaschetti, himself and brothers sought Tetaldo, and found him. Parmaschetti plunged a pitchfork three times into his breast and held him pinned while his brothers broke his arms and legs with an iron bar. Parmaschetti intended then to burn him, but a brother proposed that he should be floated upon the Adriatic, that the birds and fishes might eat him alive. This was done. The three brothers were condemned to 10 years of imprisonment with hard labor, but a petition to the king was extensively signed in Venice, asking for their complete pardon.

PROCTOR tells us that the world is contracting. We do not believe it. It is now further from our back door to the corner grocery than it used to be from the old red schoolhouse to Mary Lyon's father's house on Pumpkin Hill.—Danbury News.

A STILL-BORN RAILROAD.

A Long Train of Cars Rotting in the Asiatic Wilderness.

A correspondent of the London News writing from Peshawur, Afghan, says:

On the road from Jhelum for some distance towards Rawil Pinde there is visible a melancholy memorial of the dark ages. Alongside the Grand Trunk road there still remains a section of the still-born, impossible, and preposterous narrow-gauge line which formed the so-called continuation of the railway system beyond Lahore. The broad gauge, or rather the normal gauge, has been completed as far as Jhelum, and there railway communication stops; but this ghastly limb of the dead distance beyond Jhelum, a monument of folly, of good money literally thrown into the the gutter, of insistance in blundering on the part of pertinacious imbecility. One passes well on to a mile of perfect rolling stock collected here to rot. In his "Narrative of a Besieged Resident," Mr. Labouchere tells an amusing anecdote illustrative of the attachment to routine of the Paris postman. The ordinary suburban distribution by mail carts had just been stopped when he strolled into the courtyard of the General Postoffice. Here stood the vehicles, ready for the usual service, but unhorsed and without mails. But in each cart, through force of custom, the complement of postman had taken their places, and there they sat, resignedly waiting for events. Of this story the spectacle of this spectre train vividly reminded me. What hindered me to dismount from the rattle trap of a dark gharrie, and take my place in the comparative luxury of this train? There was choice enough of accommodation in the hollow mocker. One vehicle bore the inscription "Family carriage," another pretended to be a "Traveling inspector's carriage." "Native females" were provided for. Camels laden with ammunition tramped on their twelve day's journey to Peshawur, past conspicuously labeled "Powder vans," in this melancholy ghost of a train. There was a long string of trucks which would have in two days cl ared away that Ossa on Pellon of miscellaneous stuff—stores, rents, gun cotton, shell boxes, heaven knows what, that cumbers the neighborhood of Jehelum terminus, and its huge bulk seems to jeer at the efforts to diminish it by the means available for sending it on. For very shame's sake, had I any responsibility in connection with this unutterable fiasco, I would hustle somewhere out of sight this array of impossible rolling stock; this flagrant witness to unparalleled perversity of folly. There are narrow gauge railways elsewhere whose rolling stock it would usefully supplement, and thus retrieve a trifle of the expenditure. But of even this poor modicum of compensation reckless fatuity has prevented the realization. The long array of costly vehicles is a compulsory fixture. When Cæsar crossed the Rubicon he burned his boats, but then his brilliant future gave a justification to the step. For these carriages, too, it is nulla vestigia retrorsum, for the reason that the line has been torn up behind it. Neither is there any onward, so that rot in situ is their inevitable fate. Meanwhile the broad gauge continuation, tardily substituted for the narrow gauge abortion, is slowly progressing between Jhelum and Rawil Pinde, and its completion to Pashawur or Kohat may be vaguely looked forward to in the course of the present century. It is unfortunate that at this latter point a break of gauge will probably occur, as the gauge obtaining on the Russian system differs from that in use anywhere else.

The Apaches.

The Apaches, who have given us so much trouble—though not near so much probably, as we have given them—still claim to number, with all their tribes, from 8,000 to 10,000. When the Spaniards, in their search for gold in the high lands of what is now New Mexico, first met these Indians they found them proud and independent, though harmless and even kindly. Wronged and outraged, the Apaches at last retaliated, and the Spaniards were never able to conquer them. To this day they hurl defiance at all government and civilization. They are the Bedouins of this continent, and are all mounted on small ponies capable of great endurance. Their chiefs can have any number of wives they want; but the Apache squaw found guilty of adultery is most atrociously tortured, and all women captured are infamously treated. These savages, fierce and untamed as they are, do not scalp their enemies. They are fond of smoking and of cards, and when idle have a strange, monotonous chant. In battle they keep their ponies in motion, and are themselves always changing position. They seem to be Monotheists, and Montezuma, or the spirit of God, blended in their mind with some sort of religious aspiration. They have a superstitious regard for the eagle and owl, and will not kill or eat the bear or the hog. Rattlesnakes they dread, imagining them to be evil spirits. They never cultivate the soil live principally by plunder, and are in the main ill-formed, emaciated, and miserable in appearance.

The Gallant Militia.

The Militia Convention has completed its work at New York, and voted to hold the next meeting at St. Louis, Sept. 30. It adopted a resolution that the militia should be divided into two classes, the active to constitute a national or State guard and the inactive an enrolled reserve; that every able-bodied male citizen in the various States between 18 and 45, except as exempted by law, should compose such militia; that the first class should be first called out when necessary, but that the second class should not go into service except during war, riot or insurrection; that each State should be entitled to receive aid for 700 uniformed commissioned officers and men for each Congressional representative. This draft of a law was also adopted: "That the President of the United States shall appoint a board of 7 officers—2 of the United States army and 5 from the active militia of the Eastern, Middle, Southern and Pacific States—for the purpose of selecting a suitable pattern of campaign dress and equipment for the active militia. The Chairman of the delegates reported the number of uniformed troops in the respective States, as follows: New York, 19,800; Pennsylvania, 10,000; Ohio, 8,000; Iowa, 5,500; Massachusetts, 4,400; South Carolina, 4,000; New Jersey, 3,300; North Carolina, 2,750; Connecticut, 2,500; Missouri, 2,300; Louisiana, 2,400; Michigan, 2,000; Rhode Island, 2,000; California, 2,000; Virginia, 1,200; Vermont, 750.

The Indian Question.

Mr. Frank Girard, the famous Indian scout, who has spent over thirty years among the wild tribes of the far West, was recently interviewed by a newspaper reporter in Chicago, whither he was called to testify before the Reno court of inquiry. Girard said the Government provides amply for the Indians, but they were swindled by agents on all sides. Under the present system there were abundant opportunities for fraud, and few of the agents neglected to avail themselves of the chances to enrich themselves at the expense of the redskins.

"What would you suggest as a remedy?" asked the writer.

"Well," he replied, "the Government is now carrying out part of a policy that I have been advocating for the last fifteen years. The Indians should be disarmed. They should be furnished with no means of carrying on warfare. So long as they are supplied with food there is no necessity for them to have arms. Another mistake is furnishing them blankets, clothes and paint. In place thereof they should be furnished with clothing of a civilized pattern. This would be the first step toward civilizing them. The Indian would have to leave off his blanket. His arms would be free. He would be at a loss what to do with his hands, and would soon find some useful employment for them. At present it takes both his hands to keep his blanket in position. The annuities should be stopped until he agrees to wear the garments of white men—he would mighty soon come round to wearing them."

A Remarkable Deposit of Salt.

Mr. Darus Carter, who has been on a visit to Lousiana, has brought to this office a specimen of rock salt of remarkable purity, procured in that state. The deposit is one that has been frequently alluded to in all the papers and was largely drawn upon for use in the southern confederacy during the civil war. The block shown at the Sun office and intended for presentation in the Maryland Academy of Sciences is of pure white crystals, with white exfoliations. The salt mine in question from which it was taken is on the island of Petit Anse, a tract of 2,000 acres, near the Gulf of Mexico, and rising out of a salt marsh to a height of 170 feet. The shallowness of the approach to the island requires the construction of a causeway to deep water before this remarkable salt mine, which has been opened into the pure salt rock to a depth of sixty feet, can be economically worked. The quantity of underlying salt is estimated as at least 15,000,000 tons. This is, however, but guess-work, but the quality of the salt is shown by analysis to be 99 66-100 of purity, the best Liverpool salt testing but about 98 per cent pure.—Baltimore Sun.

Endurance of a Horse.

The Hayneville Examiner states that a gentleman of North Lowndes came to this city some weeks ago. While here he bought a buggy and horse. On his way homeward, at Gunter's Hill, he got out of his buggy for some purpose, and the horse ran off with it. Darkness had set in, and the gentleman looked in vain for his missing property. He went home and gave notice of the escape, and was much troubled at the failure to recover the beast and vehicle. At last they were found in the woods of Pintlala swamp, near the place of escape. The buggy had become fixed among the trees in such manner that the horse could not draw it, and there the unfortunate beast had stood, without food or water, for ten days! Though emaciated and feeble, the horse was driven home without being taken from the buggy. We view this fact, which is vouched for on the best authority, as a contribution to the scientific knowledge and speculation of the day and hardly know of a parallel.—Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.

Startling a Drawing Room.

One of the most eminent pianists in London, having suffered much from the irrepressible conversation of drawing-room audiences, devised the other day a means of giving a little lesson to the town. He arranged with his violin, his violoncello, and the rest that the music should come to a sudden stop in the midst of the loudest passage of the piece, at a given signal from him. It was done.

The bawling and shouting voices were left in the twinkling of an eye, high and dry, as it were, upon a shore of silence. Joyous, clear, and distinct above them all rose a voice from the foremost seats, the voice of Lady—but no, tortures shall not drag her name from me! and these words were ringing upon the startled air, "we always fry ours in lard!"—London World.

A Wealthy Savage.

Olive, the Nebraska murderer, who took a leading part in burning two citizens to death, is perhaps the wealthiest man ever arrested in the United States for deliberate homicide. The Olives own over 70,000 head of cattle and vast tracts of land. Olive appears to have considered himself above the law, and tortured his victims to death with as much recklessness as he might have shown in destroying a wild-cat. He is spending money unstintedly with a view of evading justice, and the sheriff of Kearney county, where the crime was committed, is said to be entirely subservient to the murderer. There can be but little doubt as to the result of a fair and impartial trial.

A THOROUGHGOING infidel, who had no religious belief whatever, and was glad that he hadn't any, was recently stricken with paralysis at his house, a few miles west of Utica. When he recovered consciousness and powers of speech, his first request was that some one would read him a chapter of the bible.

BIRTHDAY NINES.

(For Frank, Harry and Mila, and for Little Children who have Lived just as many Years as They.)

How many birthdays now have you tried?
How many boys take a base-ball nine?
How many days does a wonder last?
How many muses throve in the past?
How many tails has a navy "cat"?
How many lives the foe of the rat?
How many syllables has this line?
How many lines has this poem fine?
What can the answer be but ——?

MISS GABRIELLE GREELEY intends to enter a convent.

BEN HILL and Alexander Stephens are bitter enemies.

IF Robert Burns were alive now he would be in his 120th year.

A SALEM child's grandmother's grandmother is still living.

YOUNG Bennett has just bought $30,000 worth of horses from Lord Roseberry.

THE late duchess of Argyle left $250,000 to be distributed among the poor of London.

GEN. CHESTER A. ARTHUR, ex-collector of the port of New York, is six feet high, and weighs over 200 pounds.

ALEX. H. STEPHENS is the best whist-player now in congress, and he wrote the article on the game in Johnson's encyclopædia.

CALVIN T. FILLMORE, a brother of the late president of the United States, has just died at Ann Arbor, Mich., at the age of sixty-nine.

AN eastern schooner has among its crew two daughters of its captain, and it is said they do their work on deck as handy as able-bodied men. Nothing is said by the chronicler of their efficiency aloft.

THERE is now living in the province of Ontario, Canada, a Catholic priest named Father John McDonald, who is ninety-seven years of age and has been more than seventy years in the priesthood.

HIRAM O. ALDEN, of Belfast, Me., one of the victims of the National Hotel poisoning at President Buchanan's inauguration, 21 years ago, has never been well since, and is now confined to his bed nearly all the time.

MISS LEE, the eldest daughter of the late confederate general, is said to be an energetic traveler. She was not long ago entertained by Lord and Lady Napier, at Gibraltar, and a few weeks before was within the Russian lines in Turkey.

MR. CASSIUS M. CLAY has just given the Kentucky Historical society the oil portraits of Alexander II. of Russia and his wife, painted by Winterhalter. He has also presented to the society more than 300 rare and valuable objects, including many desirable autograph letters.

DR. CARVER, the marksman, gave an exhibition of his skill in a New Haven theatre recently, and after perforating a trade dollar with a rifle ball, he tossed the coin out into the audience, accidentally hitting a young man on the head and making a wound which bled freely.

MRS. McDONALD sat up in bed in Portland, Oregon, when she heard a burglar trying to get in, took a revolver from under her pillow and fired seven shots at the window through which she saw a man's face. Her aim was excellent, for the seven balls went through a single pane of glass, but the thief took his head away in time to escape injury.

THE Misses Thornton have not heretofore taken part in Washington gayeties because English etiquette required that young ladies shall be presented to the queen before they enter general society. During their recent visit in England the Misses Thornton went through this ceremony, and are, therefore, now at liberty to accept social attentions in America.

THE empress Eugenie is described as leading the quietest and most monotonous of lives at Chiselhurst. She prays, she drives, she embroiders, sometimes she plays whist in the evening; one day is almost exactly like another. Her food is simple, and she talks little at table, but always looks pleasant and interested. She is still handsome, her beautiful golden hair shining royally above her plain black dress.

WHEN Sierra Nevada stock began to go up, Mr. Mackey, the Bonanza King, made an investment for the benefit of General Sheridan's twin babies, meaning to surprise them with the gift of a fortune. For a while it kept on mounting, and the unconscious little ones were in a fair way to become millionaires, but, alas! the fatal tumble came and the fortune of the twins faded into air—into thin air.

HIRAM Y. REESE, who died recently in Franklin county, Pa., aged nearly 92 years, was the father of twenty-five sons, twenty of whom are yet living, the eldest being 66 and the youngest 24 years old. His first wife had six sons, his second eleven, and his third eight, and six of the children were twins. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and had nine sons in the Union army during the late war, three of whom were killed in battle and a fourth was drowned during Gen. Bank's Red river expedition.

THE last proof of Franklin's utilitarian disposition is found in that clause in his will which refers to his interment. He desired to be buried by the side of his wife, and ordered that both graves be covered by a slab of marble, six feet long by four in breadth, with no ornament except a light moulding along the edge, and with the following inscription:

BENJAMIN, } FRANKLIN.
DEBORAH }

This request was literally executed, and the spot is one of the most interesting places in Philadelphia.

A SUSCEPTIBLE young gentleman, who was engaged to a beautiful lass in Montreal, offered to give her all the money he had saved, amounting to several hundred dollars, and it was deposited in a bank in her name. Not long afterward he fell in love with another girl and was anxious to have the money refunded. The first sweetheart was willing to cancel the engagement, but regarded the bank account as a matter of of business, and refused to refund the money.

THERE is neither doctor nor bar-room in Irwin county, Ga., and Gib. Gray died there the other day over one hundred years old.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT in GOLD READ WHAT HE SAYS!

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.
REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will with certainty relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these pills, of itself indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

Stage Drolleries.

Charlotte and Susan Cushman once attempted to play Romeo and Juliet at Trenton. Scenery and properties were conspicuous by their absce; and the only way they could devise for the balcony scene was to stretch an old fashioned patchwork quilt in front of Juliet one end being held by the manager, and the other by a little negro employed at the hotel. All went well until Juliet called Romeo back to ask,

"And what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send for thee?"

Before "fair Montague" could reply, a black head popped out from the side, and its proprietor ejaculated: "Miss Cushing, my pell's ringin', and I am obliged to let my side of the house drop;" and drop it he did, and there was an end to the balcony scene.

The sisters were perhaps not quite so dumfounded as Madame Miolhan-Carvalho when playing in Lucia di Lammermoor at Marseilles. The cantatrice had ordered a restaurant keeper to send her a basin of hot soup at nine o'clock. The hour came, and with it a girl carring the star's refreshment. The girl made at once for the stage, and arrived at the wings as madame was sing in the finale to the first act; and the next moment Ravenswood and Lucia were astonished by a soup tureen being set down on the mossy bank in front of the fountain, the cover lifted, and the intruder addressing them, as she plunged a spoon in the bowl, with, "Begging your pardon, Sir, for interrupting you and the lady, but here's the soup!"

On the first night of A Crown for Love, Anne Boylen had no sooner uttered the words, "Now is the crown fixed firmly on my head," than the regal diadem set auditors and actress laughing by tumbling to the ground—an accident not so annoying to the individual most concerned as the gallery commentary upon a Dunedin Cassio's lamentation: "Oh that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains!" coming in the shape of, "all right, old man; drinkaway; you're safe. Equally trying to the actor's serenity was the more friendly immitation from another "god," who, seeing Macbeth cover his face with his robe and shudder convulsively after crying, "Unreal mockery, hence! to Banquo's ghost, let him know the horrible shadow had departed by shouting, "It's all right now, governor; he's gone."

Actors, like other men, are apt to plume themselves upon finding favor with the ladies, and like other men sometimes achieve embarrassing conquests. Christian Brandes in his strolling days was cast to play Leander in a primitive sort of drama in which the dialogue was left pretty much to the discretion of the players. It was settled that Hero was not to be too easily won, but to refrain from admitting her love for Leander until he had plied her hard with passionate speeches. Unluckily the Hero of the occasion was in reality desperately smitten, and scarcely gave Leander time to protest his love before exclaiming: "I can not resist you, Leander; accept my heart and hand." Brandes was nonplussed; the fine speeches he had prepared were unsuited to the situation. While he hesitated, the enraged manager whispered Hero, "In the fiend's name improvise a few words and retire!" Whereupon the poor girl turned to the audience, and said, "In the fiend's name, I improvise a few words and retire!" and tripping gayly off the stage to the shouts and amusement of the audience; who, after all, had less reason to laugh than those who heard the Western Romeo announce "But soft! What light from yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet has a son!" What his Juliet thought of the new reading is not recorded.

Dumaine, as a pirate in Le Fleau des Mers, was wont to excite the wonder of the spectators by extinguishing a candle with a pistol-shot. The trick was done by placing the light on a table near a small round hole in the "cloth" behind it, through which the prompter blew out the candle as Dumaine discharged the pistol. Actuated by jealousy or a love of mischief, a fellow-actor one night covered the hole with gold beater's skin, and when the pirate fired and the prompter blew, the candle flared away in triumph. Dumaine drew another pistol from his belt; but before he could pull the trigger the malicious joker had tor away the skin, and by blowing through the hole made the candle go out, apparently of its own accord, while Dumaine was mentally abusing the innocent prompter for his pet point not coming off as usual.

Readiness in unforeseen emergencies is of the gratest value to manager and actor alike. A word fails the memory at an important stage of the play or some accident occurs to mar or even put a stop to all further proceedings On such occasions fertility of resource is of the gratest moment, and has over and over again saved the credit of all concerned. In fact, the readiness of an actor or manager to turn an apparent disaster into a happy interlude is much on a par with the presence of mind that guides a skillful general to victory. This readiness was well displayed on the stage by Luguet when playing the bearer of an important dispatch, on the contents of which the plot of the drama turned. By mistake the property-man gave Luguet a blank sheet of paper, which he handed to the mimic king, who not having studied the words which ought to have been written on the dispatch, was in a quandary. He got out of it by hading the paper back to the mesenger, with the command: "Read it to me, Sirrah!" Luguet, however was equal to the occasion, and responded: "Alas, Sir, born of poor but honest parent, I have never learned to read."

A young man who was showing a young lady some parasols. This young man has a good command of language, and knows how to expatiate on the best points of goods. As he picked up a parasol from the lot on the counter and opened it, he struck an attitude of admiration, and holding it up so the best light would be had, said, "Now, there, isn't it lovely? Look at that silk! Particularly observe the quality, the finish, the general effect. Feel it—pass your hand over it. No foolishness about that parasol, is there?" he continued, as he handed it over to the lady "Isn't it a beauty?"

"Yes," said the lady, stuffing her handkerchief into her mouth—"yes, that's my old one. I just laid it down

The young man was immediately seized with a severe attack of quickened conscience, and passed right off the subject of parasols to the weather.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyer, & Son.

A perserving "notions" canvasser recently walked into a lawer's office in this city with a new kind of alarm-clock. The man of quibbles was interested, and heard him patiently to the end. When it came to his turn to get in a word, which in these cases is about once in an hour and a half, he spake muchly as is hereinafter contained: "My friend, I firmly believe that that alarm clock is worth seven dollars, as you state, and that you are foolish to offer it to me for two and a half; that it will go off every half hour for sixteen months without winding up, and wake up an elephant every pop. My heart tells me this is true, and I am simply aching to give you four times the price you demand. But when I inform you that I have an infant three months old at home afflicted with perpetual colic, and a baby going on three who insists on having a drink of water at regular intervals during the night, and never sleeps after four o'clock in the morning, do you not think that my investment in the beautiful invention which you are retailing might, in a measure, be characterized as extravagant? That clock agent put up his alarm and retired.

Aspera Ad Astra.

The sympathies of a multitude of readers go out to the creator of Romola and of Deronda as she sits to-day alone in her widowhood. With all her intense intellect, Marion Lewes has the gentlest heart of woman—else how would she always have touched so thrillingly the heart of the world?—and every woman who has read her page, who herself knows what love is, and what loss might be, is one with her now in her grief. What this great woman's affection for her husband must have been is known from her sacrafices and trials, which cannot but be guessed, however shrinking and reserved she held the sacredness of her personality. How worthy he was of such affection is felt by all who recognize the aid and comfort he afforded her ample spirit. The pencil whose passionate power depicted the love of Margaret for Stephen the devotion of the Jewish maisen to her preserver, the tenderness of Dorothea, was dipped in living fountains, heart's blood pulses through the picture. She told of what she knew; and whether she knew it by experience of life or by intuition of genius, a sympathetic power and a recognized and loved relationship of race gave her the medium through which she communicated with all who speak her tongue. As such a nature loved, it suffers; and we can only hope that its strength and endurance are in equal proportion. We hope it, not for her sake alone, but for our own, that we may not lose the delight which she has given us, the illumination and the inspiration. For her, doubtless, life has lost its glory, whatever remains, and long after time shall have seared her wound, the nerves will always throb painfully in the scar. Without doubt there is no woman who, even should suffering supply her the one thing possibly needed in continuous development, either of character or capacity, so that there came through it at last recognition and assurance that although "Hearts are dust, hearts' loves remain; Heart's love shall meet thee again," until she felt herself not the mere widow of brief time, but the wife of all eternity, and realized that only they who lie down in the dust of materialism and negation find the deepest darkness of the grave and the remorseless indifference and cruelty of fate, and that faith, however feeble, is the one gate of vision giving upon any thing but despair—with little doubt, we say, there is no woman who has loved who would not forego all such development and perfection of temperament and genius, so far as it were simply individual and personal to herself, for the sake of the old companionship and help and love. How much more, then, a woman of the mould of this great soul that has been stricken and bidden to new sorrow; and how can the world be delicate and tender enough to her in her desolation!

That Mr. Lewes was himself a man of extraordinary force in his seperate work of philosophy, biography, and belles-lettres has been sometimes overlooked by the shallow and thoughtless in the brilliancy of the more popular and Shakspearean gifts of his wife; but she herself has always known and reverenced his mastership, and has appreciated to the full the large-souled admiration and honor which he rendered to herself. To every woman of genius that admiration and honor are like food to the body and wings to the soul; they are rest and comfort and safety. What their daily loss may be only they can tell who have been ordained to suffer it.

That it is well for all to have the discipline of every school of life we know, and that sometimes as great results are wrought from sorrow as from the sunshine of perpetual joy. That the public of readers should reap any advantage from such fact, or the critic find more extended subject for his curious scrutiny and dissection, is to be thought of by none but those who in the day of the old circus would have delighted to order the death-struggles of the gladiators. But that this noble and wonderful creature may find enlargement and fruition to herself out of her trouble, is the desire of all. And although she has not yet emerged from the shadow of the mighty gates of death as they closed upon her husband, and is still the companion of those vast mysteries which her clear eye and keen gaze can perhaps better interpret than any other now living on the earth, yet as she wraps her sables round her in her loneliness she may feel herself doubly infolded by the love and pity of two continents.—Harper's Bazar.

GRANT IN EUROPE.

Secret History of the General's Reception in France.

(London Letter in the Chicago Times.)

In spite of all hints of the American minister, in spite of the protests of Badeau, the French republic wouldn't accord the slightest recognition. He arrived at the Northern station in the dark and was met by a few obscure journalists and the fullest-fledged of the flunkeys of the American colony. Great care had been taken to secure two of a suit of ten rooms that the prince of Wales occupied when in Paris, and the announcement sent to the Paris papers that the ex-president of the United States was to occupy the prince's apartments. Finally, when every artifice had failed in inducing the French to take him up, Noyes sent an appeal to the Americans in town to meet him to confer over a proposed banquet to the ex-president. A few parvenus met and decided that a grand dinner should be given to him, and that the guests should pay 30 francs ($6) for the privilege of eating the dinner. The history of that extraordinary mingling was, I believe, to some extent made known at the time but I doubt whether a proper idea of it was ever sent forth. With one accord the Paris press ridiculed it, and for weeks the cafes rang with merriment over it. It was hardly surprising if, after that, no notice was taken of the "distinguished citizen" by the French officials. It may be said that MacMahon purposely put a slight upon a Republican, as he was just at that time aiding his unconstitutional ministry to trottle the republic. But during the weeks that Grant remained in the city, walking about the streets with a look of ineffable ennui on his face, not a single Republican leader called on him or intimated a knowledge of his existence. Some rich Californians made a big fete for the hero, but the attendance of the French was slim. Noyes gave a reception, and two of the cabinet ministers attended—DeFourton to gossip with the Spanish beauty, Mrs. Sickles, and the minister of foreign affairs as a matter of etiquette. Grant himself made no mistake as to his standing. He fell into free speaking on certain occasions, and cursed the country heartily and vowed his purpose of instantly taking ship home. He was persuaded to go to Copenhagen to see his brother-in-law, Minister Kramer, and hoping that in a small kingdom, at least, he would be a big man. But the same fate met him. Kramer called in his diplomatic privileges and every artifice to make a sensation with his kinsman, but unsuccessfully. The fact is, Grant's reputation in Europe is just what it was during the Babcock exposures, the San Domingo and other scandals, and these old-fashioned and well-ordered Governments and people resent the intrusion of such a person in their realms. Diplomatically, of course, they are bound to treat him at least courteously—in no case have they gone a step beyond the most formal exigencies. In Rome the young king refused to see him for a long time, until the ministry convinced him that it would imperil the good understanding between the two Governments.

Killed by Snakes and Wild Beasts.

The Lancet says that in the report on "Sanitary Measures in India," which has just been presented to Parliament it appears that last year 11,682 fatal cases from attacks of wild animals had occured in ten provinces, the largest number being in Bengal, namely, 10,062. The deaths from snake bites alone in the Punjaub last year were 828, against 979 in the preceding year. As showing the rapidly fatal effects from the bite of the cobra, the commonest and most deadly of Indian poisonous snakes, Surgeon A. J. Wall states that one night, about half past twelve o'clock a Hindoo punkacooly, aged forty, while sleeping in the veranda of the doctor's house was bitten on the shoulder by a snake about three feet long. The noise and confusion soon awoke Mr. Wall, who at once hasted to the assistance of his servant, and after waiting for a short time for some Ammonia, he proceeded to inject it, as recommended by Sir Joseph Fayrer and Professor Halford, previously giving the patient plenty of brandy, walking him rapidly about, etc.; yet, notwithstanding all attention, the man died in sixty five minutes after the attack. Mr. Wall adds that the remedy had as little effect on the symptoms as it had on the result.

CHARMING BIRDS.

The Wonderful Magnetic Power of a Little Western Girl.

[Forest (Ohio) Review.]

We learn from a correspondent that there resides in the vicinity of Harrisburg, an out-of-the-way place in Hancock County, about three miles west of Mount Blanchard, a very remarkable child only five years old, who seems to have the power to charm birds at will. Her mother first noticed this strange facination that the child possesses about a year ago. The little girl was out playing in the door-yard among a bevy of sonw birds, and when she would speak to them they would come and light upon her, twittering with the utmost glee. On taking them in her hands and stroking them the birds, instead of trying to get away from their fair captive, seemed to be highly pleased, and when let loose would fly away a short distance and immediately return to the child again. She then took several of them into the house to show her mother, who, thinking that she might hurt them, took the birds and put them outdoors, but no sooner was the door opened when the birds flew into the room and lit upon the girl's head and began to chirp. The birds remained about the premises all winter, flying to the little girl whenever the door was opened. The parents of this remarkable child became alarmed, believing that this strange power was an omen, and that that much-dreaded visitor, death, was about to visit their home. But death did not come, and during last summer the child has had numerous pets from the birds. The child handles the birds so gently that a humming-bird once in her hand, does not fail to return.

This winter a bevy of birds have kept her company, and she plays with them for hours at the time. Every morning the birds fly to her window, and leaves only when the sun sinks in the west.

There is nothing peculiar about the childs personal appearance except her wonderful magnetic eyes, which sparkle like diamonds.

The parents of this little girl are poor superstitious people, and have been reticent about the matter until lately, fearing that some great calamity was about to befall them.

Train the Boys for Business.

There is one element in the home instruction of boys to which, says a Boston paper, too little attention has been given, and that is the cultivation of habits of punctuality, system, order, and responsibility. In too many households boys from twelve to seventeen years are too much administered to by loving mothers or other female members of the family. Boys' lives during those years are the halcyon days of their existence. Up in the morning just in time for breakfast; nothing to do but to start off early enough not to be late; looking upon an errand as taking so much time and memory away from enjoyment; little thought of personal appearance except when reminded by mother to "spruce up" a little; finding his wardrobe allways where mother puts it—in fact, having nothing to do but enjoy himself.

Thus his life goes on until school ends. Then he is ready for business. He goes into an office where everything is system, order, precision. He is expected to keep things neat and orderly, sometimes kindle fires, file letters, do errands—in short, become a part of a nicely regulated machine, where everything moves in systematic grooves, and each one is responsible for correctness in his department, and where, in place of ministers to his comfort, he finds task masters, more or less lenient, to be sure, and everything in marked contrast to his previous life.

In many instances the change is too great. Errors become numerous; blunders, overlooked at first, get to be a matter of serious moment; then patience is overtasked, and the boy is told his services are no longer wanted. This is his first blow, and sometimes he never rallies from it. Then comes the surprise to the parents, who too often never know the real cause, nor where they have failed in the training of their children.

What is wanted is for every boy to have something special to do; to have some duty at a definite hour, and to learn to watch for that time to come; to be answerable for a certain portion of the routine of the household; to be trained to anticipate the time when he may enter the ranks of business, and be fortified with habits of energy, accuracy, and application, often of more importance than superficial book learning.—Scientific American.

How to Tell a Horse's age.

[Prof. Going in Spirit of the Times.]

A horse has forty teeth, composed of twelve incisors, four tushes, and twenty-four molars; the mare has corresponding teeth, except the tushes, which are, in the female, almost invariably absent, hence she has only thirty-six. All teeth are composed essentially of enamel, dentine and crustopetosa. A curious but remarkable fact presents itself respecting the growth of horses' teeth, which is not common to other animals, namely: that the teeth are growing continually from their development to the animal's death. They are forced up from their sockets to supply the material removed by attrition. Tushes are never shed; they make their appearance between the animal's four and a half and fifth year, hence if they are just protruding we know, without any confirmatory evidence, the horse's age. Either at birth, or from one to four days afterwards, the colt has four milk teeth called the centrals.

The lateral teeth appear between four and five weeks after birth, the corner teeth about the eighth month. The centrals, or those which first made their appearance, are shed between two and a half and three years; the laterals are shed between three and four years; the corner teeth between four and a half and five. About this time, or a little before the tushes are full grown, the animal is said, in horseman's phraseology, to have a full mouth.

We come now to the important part of the subject, where animal's age is determined by the appearance of the black spots, or more correctly, the infundibulum. The infundibulum or black marks, are worn out of the superior or smooth surface of the lower jaw at six years old, and that of the lateral are commencing to disappear, and is completed at the seventh year, thus at this age we find the wearing surface of both central and lateral inferior teeth smooth; the black marks having been worn away by attrition, and have entirely disappeared when the animal becomes eight years old. The horse is now considered "aged" and no conscientious veterinary surgeon or horseman would positively assert the animal's age, only approximately. Some people aver they can determine the exact age by signs other than the teeth, but such indications are unreliable.

As the animal advances in age his teeth gradually grow longer, and appear to become more horizontal. The mouth which at five years old was cup shaped, now loses this appearance and becomes elongated. The teeth which were, in the age last mentioned, nearly perpendicular, are now slanting; and this process appears with advancing age. As a horse becomes old the enamel loses its original beautiful whiteness, and assumes a cloudy or smoky yellow instead, and becomes striated with brown and black marks, and the tushes infrequently drop.

The Endurance of a Horse.

[Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.]

The Haynesville Examiner states that a gentleman of North Lowndes came to this city some weeks ago. While here he bought a buggy and horse. On his way homeward, at Gunter's Hill, he got out of the buggy for some purpose, and the horse ran off with it. Darkness had set in, and the gentleman looked in vain for his property. He went home and gave notice of the escape, and was much troubled at the failure to recover the beast and vehicle. At last they were found in the woods of Pintlala Swamp, near the place of escape. The buggy had become fixed among the trees in such a manner that the horse could not draw it, and there the unfortunate beast had stood, without food or water, for ten days. Though emaciated and feeble, the horse was driven home without being taken from the buggy. We view this fact, which is vouched for on the best authority, as a contribution to the scientific knowledge and speculation of the day, and hardly know of a parallel.

The Pople Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it. Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

THE AMENDMENTS TO THE STATE CONSTITUTION.

Important Provisions to be submitted to the people.

Below will be found the full text of the constitution amendments which have passed the legislature, and are now ready to be submitted to the people for rejection or ratification by the people of the state. The only difference of opinion appears to be concerning the provision for the registration of voters, which will probably be made an issue before the people.

Those amendments which refer to the negro and mulatto, as also that which confers the ballot upon "white" citizens, there is no controversy about, nor is there any diversity of opinion with regard to doing away with the October election, making the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November the day for all general elections. Our object in giving them place here is that our readers may be informed as to the character and scope of the entire list, and it may be well for them to preserve them for future reference. They are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Joint Resolution No. 1 (Senate): Senate joint resolution amending section 2 of article 2 of the constitution, and prescribing the qualifications of voters.

Resolved, by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That the following amendment be and is hereby proposed to the constitution of the State of Indiana, to wit:

Amend section 2 of article 2, so as to read as follows: Section 2. In all elections, not otherwise provided for by this constitution, every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the state during the six months and in the township sixty days, and in the ward or precinct thirty days, immediately preceding such election, and every male of foreign birth, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the United States one year, and shall have resided in this State during the six months, and in the township sixty days, and in the ward or precinct thirty days immediately preceding such election, and shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization, shall be entitled to vote in the township or precinct where he may reside, if he shall have been duly registered according to law.

Resolved, That in submitting this proposition to the electors to be voted upon it shall be designated as amendment "No. 1."

AMENDMENT NO. 2.

Joint Resolution No. 2. (Senate): A joint resolution proposing amendment to section 5 of article 2d of the constitution.

Resolved, by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That the constitution of the State of Indiana be amended as follows: By striking out the words, "No negro or mulatto shall have the right of suffrage," contained in section 5 of the second article of the constitution.

Resolved, That in submitting this amendment to the electors of the State to be voted on is shall be designated as "Amendment No. 2."

AMENDMENT NO. 3.

Joint Resolution No. 3. (Senate): A joint resolution proposing amendment to section 14 of article 2 of the constitution.

Resolved, by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That the following amendment to the constitution of the State of Indiana, be and the same is hereby proposed, to-wit: Amend section 14 of the second article to read Section 14. All general elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, but township elections may be held at such time as may be provided by law: Provided, That the General Assembly may provide by law for the election of all judges of courts of general and appellate jurisdiction, by an election to be held for such officers only, at which time no other officer shall be voted for; and shall also provide for the registration of all persons entitled to vote.

AMENDMENT NO. 4.

Joint Resolution No. 4. (Senate): A joint resolution proposing amendment to sections 4 and 5 of article 4 of the constitution.

Resolved, by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That the constitution of the State of Indiana be amended as follows: Strike the word "white" from sections 4 and 5 of article 4th.

Resolved, That in submitting this amendment to the electors of the State to be voted on, it shall be designated as "Amendment No. 4."

AMENDMENT NO. 5.

Joint Resolution No. 5. (Senate): A joint resolution proposing amendment to the 14th clause of section 22 of article 4 of the constitution.

Resolved by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring That the following amendment to the constitution of the State of Indiana is proposed to-wit:

Amend the 14th clause of section 22 of article 4, to read as follows: In relation to fees or salaries; except that the laws may be so made as to grade the compensation of officers in proportion to the population, and the necessary services required.

Resolved, That in the submission of this amendment to the electors, of the State to be voted on, it shall be designated as "Amendment No. 5."

Falsehood.

Falsehood is, indeed, on all accounts inexcusable, and can never proceed but from some unworthy principle—as cowardice, malice or a total contempt of virtue and honor. The difficulties it runs one into are not to be numbered. One lie requires ten others to support it, and the failure of probability in one of them ruins all. The pains necessary to patch up a plausible story, and the racking of the memory to keep always to the same circumstances in representing things and avoid contradiction, is insufferable; and, after all, it is a thousand to one but the artifice is detected, and the unhappy man is questioned as much when he is sincere as when he dissembles; so that he finds himself at a full stop, and can neither gain his ends with mankind by truth or falsehood.

Drunkenness in France.

French officers, says the London Daily News, students, young men about town, and many other persons spend several hours inside cafes, and some of them drink an amount of liquor which keeps their brains constantly in soak. It is all nonsense to talk of this tippling as a harmless pastime. A single glass of absinthe is enough to throw a man into excitement; a second fuddles him; if he then proceed to mix his liquor with [illegible] and little nips of cognac he staggers home unfit for business of any kind. It is a significant fact that of the number of men consigned to French hospitals or madhouses with delirium tremens, the greater portion belong to those classes who have never frequented wineshops, but only go to cafes. The wineshop is the club of the working-man who wears a blouse; the cafe is the haunt of all men one degree higher in the social scale than mechanics—in fact, of those who 'wear a coat,' as Frenchmen say. As it is the ambition of every right thinking artisan to "sport a coat," it follows that, on the whole, many more frequent cafes than wineshops.

A Curious Invention.
